No prisoner of this description shall be allowed to receive any tobacco, food, or liquor, except that which is prescribed by the dietary of the prisons, unless under the order of the surgeon, noted by him in his journal.

Convicts sentenced to transportation shall be treated as prisoners in the penitentiary wards, until their sentences shall be executed or commuted.

Prisoners under charge or conviction of any crime shall attend divine service on Sundays, and on other days when such service is performed, unless prevented by illness, or by other reasonable cause to be allowed by the keeper; or unless their attendance shall be dispensed with by one of the visiting justices.

Due provision shall be made for the admission at proper times, and under proper restrictions, of persons with whom prisoners committed for trial may desire to communicate, and such rules and regulations shall be made by the justices in general quarter sessions assembled, for the admission of the friends of convicted prisoners, as to such justices may seem expedient; and the justices shall also impose such restrictions upon the communication and correspondence of all such prisoners with their friends, either within or without the walls of the prison, as they shall judge necessary for the maintenance of good order and discipline in such prison.

The keeper shall have power to open any letters addressed to or coming from any prisoner, in cases where he shall have just cause to suspect that such letter relates to any crime which either has been committed or is in contemplation, or to any matter connected with the security or discipline of the prisons.—The keeper shall enter a minute in his journal of every case in which he shall exercise this power.

Debtors.

Debtors, who do not receive any allowance from the county, may procure for themselves and receive at hours to be regulated by the visiting justices, any food, bedding, linen, or other necessaries; but the same must be previously examined, to ascertain that such articles are not in a foul or impure state, or improper for admission: but in respect of liquor, no debtor shall be permitted to send for or to drink more than one pint of wine, or one quart of ale or strong beer, in twenty-four hours, and if any debtor shall be detected in making use of the names of others to obtain a greater quantity, all parties concerned shall forfeit their claim to any future indulgence.

Debtors inclined to work, may, on application to the keeper, be employed, and will in such case be entitled to half of their earnings, and the risk and trouble of selling the goods shall rest with the county; or they may work entirely on their own account, and without the interference of the officers of the prison, provided their materials and tools be not from bulk or quality inconvenient or unfit for admission.

Debtors destitute of friends, unable to work, or incapable of supporting themselves by industry or otherwise, may, till they shall obtain their sixpences, receive the prison allowance, on application to and by order of a visiting justice, such order being entered in the visiting justices' book.

The rooms and cells of the debtors shall be unlocked at six o'clock in the morning, from the 1st of April to the 30th of September, and at sun-rise during the remainder of the year.

Debtors shall retire to their wards at sun-set during the whole of the year. They shall retire to their rooms at ten o'clock at night, at which hour their bell shall be rung, all lights shall be extinguished, and none permitted afterwards.

Visitors to debtors shall be admitted to their visiting-rooms from ten o'clock in the morning till four in the afternoon, except on Sundays, Christmas-day, and Good-Friday; but no such visitors shall be allowed to enter the prisons twice in any one day, nor shall any food or liquor be admitted into the visiting-rooms on any pretence whatever.

No visitors shall be admitted within the debtors' wards, unless all the visiting-rooms be occupied, except under a written order from the sheriff or from a visiting justice.

Care shall be taken that the debtors' visiting-rooms be sufficiently warmed in cold weather.

If any visitors to debtors shall refuse to go out when required so to do, or shall misbehave or act improperly towards the keeper or other officer of the prisons, the keeper may compel them to go out, and refuse them admittance in future, till the facts shall be inquired into by a visiting justice, who shall have power to continue or to take off such denial of admittance, and shall enter orders accordingly in the visiting justices' book.

If any debtor shall refuse to obey the orders of the keeper or other officer of the prison in the execution of his or her duty, or the rules laid down for the government of the prisons; or shall strike, threaten, or forcibly resist the keeper or other officer; or shall be guilty of profane cursing or swearing, or of disrespectful behaviour to the chaplain, or of irreverent conduct at chapel; or shall use abusive words; or assault, quarrel with, game with, or defraud a fellow prisoner; or shall pass the fences of his or her court; or shall attempt to escape, or conspire with any person so to do; or shall wilfully waste, spoil, damage, or destroy any goods committed to him or her to manufacture, or the beds, bedding, clothes, or utensils of the prison; such debtor shall be punished by confinement to his or her cell or room for any time not exceeding three days, at the discretion of the keeper, who shall note the same in his journal; and if at the time of committing the offence, such debtor shall occupy one of the rooms of superior accommodation, the keeper shall have power to remove such debtor to the common debtors' ward, for any time not exceeding three days, noting the same in his journal; and if, on investigation, a visiting justice shall consider the offence to require it, he shall have power to inquire upon oath thereon, and to continue such punishment for any time not exceeding one month, noting the circumstances of the case and his order thereon in the visiting justices' book.

Appointment and Duties of Turnkeys.

Turnkeys shall be appointed by the court of general session, in such numbers and at such salaries as the court shall from time to time direct.

They shall examine the state of the cells, locks, bolts, bedding, &c., as soon as the prisoners have left their cells in the morning; and, after the cells are swept and beds made, they shall lock the gates at the foot of the stairs, that no prisoner may have access to his or her night-cell during the day, unless by order or special leave of the keeper.

They shall discharge such duties as may be ordered by the keeper.

They shall not enter the ward or cell of any female prisoner, except in the presence of the matron or some other female officer of the prison.

They shall not be permitted to receive any fee or gratuity on any account whatever.

No turnkey shall at any time go out of the prisons without leave from the keeper, nor remain out of the prisons after ten o'clock at night.

Appointment and Duties of Wardsmen.

The keeper shall appoint as wardsmen one prisoner in each court, or more if so directed by the visiting justices.

Wardsmen for the penitentiary wards of the house of correction shall be selected from the penitentiary prisoners; those for the other prisons may be selected from the debtors (if willing), from persons committed for misdemeanors, or from prisoners in the house of correction.

The wardsmen shall sweep the cells, day-rooms, staircase, and galleries of the classes under their care once every morning, and shall wash them at least once in every week.

They shall, in dry weather, see that all the wooden doors and the windows be kept open, and the bedding frequently beat and put out to air.

They shall attend to the cleanliness of every part of the wards committed to their care, and to the maintenance of decency and good order therein.

They shall, for the performance of these duties, receive such increased prison allowance as the visiting justices shall from time to time direct, and shall be entitled to such share of their earnings as the rule of their classes shall respectively prescribe.

They shall, like all other officers of the prisons, be enjoined not to hold any unnecessary conversation with prisoners confined in solitude; and for neglect of that order, or of any other part of their duty, they shall be punished as other prisoners are in cases of disobedience.

They shall not be permitted to receive any fee or gratuity on any account whatever.

CANTERBURY COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Canterbury County Gaol and House of Correction.

Description. This prison, situated in St. Augustine's, a suburb of the city of Canterbury, was erected in the year 1808, and is on the radiating plan, with the keeper's house and chapel in the centre. It adjoins the Court-house, in which are held the Quarter Sessions for East Kent; and its locality renders it a convenient receptacle for prisoners from the eastern division of the county. It is in good repair, and a great part of it, though not the whole, is fire-proof. It is surrounded by a boundary-wall of the height of 20 feet. The only escape that has been made from it of late years was by means of a ladder accidentally placed against the wall. The prison may be overlooked from a churchyard and field, which are on rising ground above it, but not near enough to admit of communication otherwise than by signals. Shutters have been placed against the windows of the cells opposite to this churchyard by way of precaution against communication.

Inspection. The means of inspection are deficient, as they extend only to the yards, and not to the day-rooms or sleeping-cells. Some of the day-rooms may indeed be inspected through the ventilators in the passages above them; but this only partially, and not so as to see the whole room.

Wards. The prison is divided into eight male wards, and one female ward, with a day-room and airing-yard to each of the male wards, and an airing-terrace on the leads adjoining the laundry in the female department. The eight male wards are appropriated as under-mentioned, and contain the following number of sleeping-cells. Cells. The dimensions of the single cells are 9 feet 4 inches long, by 6 feet 3 inches wide, and 9 feet 2 inches high. The partition walls between the cells are 14 inches thick.

Ward No. 1. Summary Convictions. Nine single cells and one treble cell. Twelve prisoners sleeping in this ward at time of inspection. Tread-wheel in this yard.

No. 2. Convicted felons. Nine single cells and one treble cell. Twelve prisoners sleeping in this ward. Tread-wheel in this yard.

I. Home District. County Gaols. Kent. Canterbury County Gaol and House of Correction.

No. 3. Convicted felons. Seven single cells and one treble cell. Ten prisoners sleeping in this ward.

No. 4. Vagrants. No sleeping-cells.

No. 5. Convicted felons. Five single cells, and one treble cell. Eight prisoners sleeping in this ward.

No. 6. Prisoners for trial. Six single cells. Six prisoners sleeping in this ward.

No. 7. Summary convictions and misdemeanors. Eight single cells. Eight prisoners sleeping in this ward.

No. 8. Misdemeanants for trial, or want of sureties. No sleeping-cells.

Female apartments. Two ordinary sleeping-rooms, and an infirmary-room used occasionally for the same purpose. Laundry above. Occupied by five female prisoners at the time of inspection.

The prison thus will accommodate only 48 male prisoners and 3 females (together 51), with separate sleeping-rooms; consequently the four larger male cells were occupied by three prisoners each at the time of inspection. Now the greatest number of prisoners at one time during the last three years has been:—

|---|---|
| Year ending Michaelmas, 1834 | 96 |
| ,, 1835 | 105 |
| ,, 1836 | 73 |

and the numbers in custody at the following periods were:—

| | Males. | Females. | Total. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 25th October, 1834 | 56 | 3 | 59 |
| ,, 1835 | 48 | 4 | 52 |
| ,, 1836 | 57 | 3 | 60 |
| 9th February, 1837 | 52 | 9 | 61 |

There is, therefore, a deficiency of separate sleeping-cells, which might in some measure be remedied, by converting each of the nine day-rooms into separate sleeping-cells for male prisoners, and by turning the upper part of the mill-house into sleeping-cells.

The female prison not only requires enlargement, but it is inconveniently situated; the access to it being through the male wards Nos. 1 and 2. If the mill-house were taken for the female prison, the present female apartments might be altered into cells for males.

The readiest means of introducing some degree of individual separation, by day as well as by night, would be by materially enlarging the present small sleeping-cells, by converting the day-rooms into separate cells, and by extending the present buildings to the boundary-wall, in order to make up the requisite number of cells. But the space between the present buildings and the boundary-wall is only about 25 feet, and we have great doubts whether, by resorting to the means referred to, it would be practicable to convert the present structure into even a tolerably good prison on the separate system.

Soil, &c. The soil is gravel and chalk. The drainage is good, and the prison was dry and clean at the time of inspection. The locality is considered very healthy.

2. Discipline.

System. The system is association by day, and separation by night, as far as the number of sleeping-cells will admit of it. The rules of the prison are understood to be the same as those of Maidstone; but there are no rules fixed for general view in any part of this prison.

Classification. The classification is according to the Gaol Act, with the exception of the females, who are sometimes employed together in washing, &c., without reference to the technical classes. It also occasionally happens, when particular wards are full, that prisoners sleep in the same wards with others of different classes; but this cannot always be avoided. As an instance of the fallacy of classification, we found J. T., a notoriously bad character, convicted of uttering base coin, (a misdemeanor,) who had been connected with a London gang, and been in prison before, associating in the same ward with prisoners summarily convicted for petty trespasses, and sleeping in the same cell with two countrymen summarily convicted for cutting wood.

Association. The most numerous class of prisoners are those under summary conviction. These, as well as the convicts sentenced to imprisonment at the assizes and sessions, associate in their respective classes, during labour, washing, meals, and at all times, except at night or whilst under punishment. The untried, of whom there are but few, also associate freely. The precautions against communication at night consist in the watchman, who goes his rounds outside, and the wardsman sleeping within; and it does not probably prevail to any great extent. The convicted as well as the untried take their meals together in the day-rooms.

Silence. There is no written rule on the subject of silence; but attempts are made to enforce it in some degree, and a certain quiet prevails, as at Maidstone, although it falls very far short of what is understood by the silent system. The intercourse in the day-rooms and yards is only stopped by the wardsman when it becomes noisy; consequently there is room for communication of any kind, however improper, provided it is carried on in a quiet way. According to the statement of prisoners, there is occasionally, though not often, bad language and swearing, and the prisoners frequently talk of what they intend to do when they get out. Silence on the tread-wheel is however enforced more rigidly than elsewhere, and there appears no indisposition on the part of the keeper to punish for breach of it, since he states that he punished 73 prisoners for breach of silence (viz. talking on the wheel and in the cells and loud talking in day-rooms,) in the course of the last year, principally by confining them in dark and solitary cells. This number amounts to more than half of the whole number of punishments in the year ending at Michaelmas last, which is returned at 131. The prisoners, however, as we are informed, whisper to each other on the wheel as they may have occasion.

We have no reason to believe that communication prevails between the male and emale prisoners; but a male prisoner informed us that he had several times been employed to scrub in the laundry and female prison, and had then seen, though not conversed with, several of the females. This is obviously improper, and we have before remarked that the access to the female apartments ought not, as at present, to be through the male wards.

Labour. The description of hard-labour consists of the four tread-wheels, which together will hold 42 prisoners, and a crank-mill for grinding bark. This latter instrument is well adapted for labour in solitude. Contrasting the labour performed on the tread-wheel at different periods of the year, it appears that in December and January the number of working-hours is 7, and the feet of ascent 11,088; whilst in the summer months, from April to August, the prisoners work 9¾ hours, with 14,478 feet of ascent, being about one-fourth more than in the winter. We cannot but regret here also the number of hours which the prisoners pass in bed in the winter season, when they are locked up at sunset for the night. Female convicts are sometimes placed on the wheel, but are more usually employed in washing and needle-work. The prisoners on the wheel require the watchful attention of the surgeon; it generally reduces them in bulk, and if the labour is too long protracted it is injurious to their constitutions.

Employment as Wardsmen, &c. Prisoners are constantly employed here as wardsmen, and in menial services. Of 52 male prisoners in custody on the 9th February last seven were occupied as wardsmen, one as cook, and one in cleaning the lodge, bakehouse, &c. The cook and six of the wardsmen were receiving the same diet as if they were working at the tread-wheel. The whole of the cook's time is occupied in the prison-kitchen; but the wardsmen in the convicted classes are employed about half the day in winter, and three hours in summer, in cleaning their wards, and the remainder of the day they work on the tread-wheels as the other prisoners. The other wardsman was a prisoner for trial, employed in his class, and receiving three-quarters of a pound of meat, and three quarts of soup extra per week. The prisoner employed in the lodge, &c. was a smuggler, receiving the tread-wheel allowance, and repaying the county for the same, being allowed 4½*d.* per diem from the Customs' revenue.

Removal of Females to Maidstone. The practice of removing females from Maidstone Gaol to this prison has been already noticed. On the 9th February last, there were nine women in custody here who had been so removed; the Courts at Maidstone having, at the request of the visiting justices of this prison, sentenced them to imprisonment here, instead of at Maidstone, where they would have been confined in the ordinary course. These nine women formed the female population of this prison, there being none sentenced here in the regular way, and were employed in washing and repairing the bedding and clothing, for which purpose they had been sent for. In the employment of female prisoners, the repression of crime is an object too generally lost sight of; and it seems to be considered by the magistrates sufficient if they can occupy them so as to effect a saving of labour to the county. There is nothing penal in the employment of a number of women together in a wash-house. If they had remained at Maidstone these women might have been placed on the tread-wheel; but the very motive of bringing them here shows they are not likely to undergo anything like correction, in the proper sense of that term.

Visits and Letters. There are visiting-rooms in the lodge for the reception of the prisoners' friends. There is a window opening into the lodge, through which the keeper or turnkey overhears the conversation, and a space is barred off between the prisoner and his visitor. The untried are allowed to receive visits daily from 12 to 2 o'clock. The convicted can only be visited by a magistrate's order, which it is not the practice to grant until four months after conviction, and subsequently only once a month. The ascertainment of relationship is left to the discretion of the keeper. Letters are usually inspected by the keeper; but convicted prisoners ought not to be allowed to receive letters at all, until after a definite term of imprisonment.

Money. Convicted prisoners are not allowed to have money. What is taken from them is accounted for on their discharge. The prisoners here are mostly poor, and bring very little money with them.

Tobacco. Tobacco has been occasionally, but rarely, introduced into the prison.

Newspapers. We could not ascertain that newspapers were admitted.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain. The Rev. John Metcalfe has been fifteen years chaplain of this prison. He resides in the precincts of the cathedral, being a minor canon. Prayers from the Liturgy are read on Wednesdays and Fridays, and the church service, with a sermon, on Sundays. The Holy Communion is never administered. The chaplain keeps a journal of his attendance, but not a character-book. He visits and converses with the prisoners separately in cases where he thinks he can do any good, including those in the solitary cells; but he does not appear to consider that his labours are generally attended with much benefit. He thinks that solitary confinement as a punishment has a great effect, and that solitude and association alternately form the best discipline. If he has occasion to be absent, he provides another clergyman to do his duty. He states the conduct of the prisoners during chapel to be in general good. Those under punishment do not attend. The keeper, taskmaster, two turnkeys, and matron, attend chapel on Sundays, and the keeper and two turnkeys on week-days. The classes are separated during chapel, and males from females.

Schoolmaster.

None of the prisoners were receiving instruction at the time of our inspection. A schoolmaster is occasionally selected from the prisoners to teach the boys, and keep them out of mischief. Of the prisoners lately so employed one was in custody for embezzlement, the other for want of sureties to keep the peace. The schoolmaster is on the same footing as a wardsman in regard to diet, &c. The number in this prison constantly exceeding 50, the schoolmaster, according to the 16th resolution of the Lords' Committee of 1835, ought not to be a prisoner. It should, however, be borne in mind, that, as the majority of offenders are under summary conviction, and the periods of imprisonment seldom exceed three months, little good can be expected from the labours of a schoolmaster, whether a prisoner or not.

Books.

The books used by the prisoners are entirely selected by the chaplain from the publications of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. They consist of—

Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer-Books.
Whole Duty of Man.
Great Importance of a Religious Life.
Kettlewell's Penitent.
Bishop Wilson's Principles of Christianity.
„ Maxims.
Pious Country Parishioner.
A volume of Miscellaneous Tracts, religious and entertaining, judiciously selected by the chaplain, and a favourite book with the prisoners.
Prisoners' Manual.
Watts's Hymns.
Manual of Prayers.
Nelson's Fasts and Festivals.
Mrs. Trimmer's Spelling Books, Catechisms, &c.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The surgeon or his assistant attends daily. The assistant is also a regular surgeon. On the admission of a prisoner he is first washed in a day-room, and then placed by himself in the reception-room until examined by the surgeon. Prisoners in solitary confinement are not visited, unless reported sick. The infirmary patients, both male and female, are attended by the matron, but are kept in separate rooms. There are seldom more than one or two infirmary patients at a time, and there is no particular regulation in regard to silence. The room used as a male infirmary is situated too near the females' apartments, being in fact in the female prison. At the time of inspection divine service was performed in it, on account of many of the prisoners not having been perfectly recovered from the prevailing influenza. The women attended separately after the men had withdrawn.

Infirmary.

Diseases.

Ten men and one woman were on the sick-list at the time of our visit. The proportion of cases of slight indisposition to the whole number of prisoners in the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, appears to have been about 20 per cent., that of infirmary cases only 1·13 per cent.; and there was no death within that year. The average number of days which each invalid remained on the sick list was about 15. The most prevalent diseases have been itch, ague, and venereal. The prisoners had recently been affected by the prevailing epidemic, in common with the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. There is no particular complaint connected with the locality of the prison; but the men on the wheel for long periods require to be relieved to prevent injury to their health, and the surgeon sometimes finds it necessary to order exercise for prisoners in solitary confinement. There are seldom more prisoners than one in the infirmary at a time, and they are generally attended by the matron, who has the assistance of a male turnkey when she thinks it necessary.

Diet.

The cost of the prison diet per head per annum for the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 3*l.* 18*s.* 1¼*d.*, or 1*s.* 6*d.* per week; but an allowance should be made for prisoners who maintained themselves in the course of that year. The diet, however, appears to be superior to that of Maidstone Gaol, male prisoners at hard labour receiving here weekly 216 oz. of solid food (including 64 oz. of potatoes), 21 pints of gruel, and 6 pints of ox-head soup; and prisoners before trial receiving weekly 252 oz. of solid food (including 112 oz. of potatoes), and 21 pints of gruel. See Dietary Table, Appendix, No. 18. The dietary table is not affixed in any of the wards, but scales and weights are provided in case of application.

Prisoners maintaining themselves.

Untried prisoners, and the convicted not sentenced to hard labour, are allowed to maintain themselves under the same regulations as at Maidstone. Thirty prisoners maintained themselves in the course of last year. Either the provisions are brought by the prisoners' friends, or purchased for them by a turnkey in the town. No good reason can be given why a turnkey should be employed in such a service; and, in regard to convicts, the practice is obviously improper under any circumstances.

Clothing.

The cost of the prison-clothing is returned at 13*s.* 5*d.* per head per annum. The woollen winter dress is the same as that used at Maidstone; but a lighter dress is used here in summer. Prisoners rarely destroy their clothing; when they do, they are punished by being locked up in the dark cells.

I.
Home District.
County Gaols.

The bedding is aired in summer in the yards, but not in the winter. The straw mattresses are very apt to be affected by damp air.

The whole of the linen is washed in the prison by the female prisoners. Soap, towels, and combs are supplied, but the combs were generally broken.

The prison was clean at the time of inspection, and the whole is lime-washed every spring. The day-rooms are washed daily, when the weather permits; and the cells every other day.

5. Prison Punishments.

The proportion of punishments for offences within the prison to the whole number of prisoners in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was about 30 per cent., of which we have seen that above one-half are stated to have been for breach of silence; the rest were for refusing to work and other disorderly conduct. The most usual punishment is confinement in the dark cells. These are two in number, situated in the lodge. Their dimensions are,—one 6 feet 10 inches square, the other 6 feet 10 inches, by 6 feet 6 inches. The height of both is 8 feet 4 inches to the crown of the arch. The instrument of whipping is a cat-of-nine-tails. The number of lashes is not defined, but seldom exceeds three dozen. The keeper, surgeon, turnkeys, and convicted prisoners, are present at floggings.

6. Officers.

Officers.

A list of the officers with their salaries and allowances will be found in Return, Appendix, No. 21.

The keeper, Mr. Joseph Bone, has filled that office 14 years. The keeper, matron, taskmaster, and turnkeys, reside in the prison, and a watchman is employed at night. The keeper and turnkeys are not in the habit of visiting the cells constantly at night.

Account Books.

The following is a list of the Account Books kept in the prison:—

The Visiting Justices' Minute and Report Book.
Keeper's, Chaplain's, and Surgeon's Journals.
Commitment Book.
Re-committal and Discharge Books.
Keeper's Receipts and Disbursements Book.
Bill Book.
Labour Book.
Clothing and Bedding Book.
Bread, Meat, and Oatmeal Books.
Extra Diet and Diet Check Books.
Milk, Salt, and Pepper Books.
Wheat Account Book.
Grist and Cash Books.
Prisoners' Receipt, Signature, and Weight Books.

7. Miscellaneous.

Re-committals.

The proportion of prisoners who have been previously committed, to the total number of prisoners in custody during the year was,—

|---|---|
| Year ending Michaelmas 1835, . . . | 21 per cent. |
| ,, 1836, . . . | 23 ,, |

Juvenile Offenders.

There were very few juvenile offenders at the time of inspection. There have been in the last year 36 prisoners under the age of 17, being about 8 per cent. upon the whole number in custody in the year.

Military Prisoners.

The proportion of these has also been about 8 per cent. in the last year. The usual allowance of 6*d*. per diem is paid by the War-Office.

Smugglers.

The allowance for these is 4½*d*. per diem if in the gaol, and 1*s*. if in the house of correction.

Population.

The total number in custody was—

|---|---|
| On the 25th October 1834 . . . . | 59 |
| ,, 1835 . . . | 52 |
| ,, 1836 . . . | 60 |
| 24th January 1837 . . . | 61 |
| 9th February 1837 . . . | 61 |

The number committed in the course of each of the following years, ending at Michaelmas respectively, was—

|---|---|
| 1835 . . . | 409 |
| 1836 . . . | 383 |

The population has been of late years somewhat stationary.

The convicted prisoners who are not sentenced to hard labour, and those who are sentenced to hard, but from debility or any other cause are, in the opinion of the surgeon, incapable of performing hard labour, are at moderate labour on the tread-wheel, in the proportion of one-third off the wheel to the total number employed during the summer months; and when the work of the hard-labour prisoners is increased to one-fifth of their number off the wheel, the employment of the moderate-labour prisoners is increased to one-fourth of their number.

They are employed the same number of hours per day, and on the same wheels, mentioned in the scale.

No. 20.—Scale of Crank Labour.

The only crank-mill in these prisons is a small one for grinding bark; it has 2 handles, and will employ 1 prisoner at each. Those who are employed at this description of labour are from age or infirmities unfit for the tread-wheel; they are under the superintendence of the task-master, and their labour is regulated according to their strength, &c. They work the same number of hours per day as the prisoners on the tread-wheel.

DOVER TOWN AND CINQUE PORTS GAOL.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Dover Town and Cinque Ports Gaol. Description.

This prison occupies the basement of an ancient building, at the entrance of the town of Dover on the London road, formerly the hospital of a priory, called the Maison Dieu, and of late years used as a Victualling-office by the Ordnance Department. The premises were lately purchased by the Corporation of Dover, who have converted the upper part of the building into their sessions-house, and the ground-floor into their gaol, which previously stood in the market-place, and was an edifice very ill adapted for that purpose. The mayor and jurats of Dover have criminal jurisdiction, not only within the town, but over a considerable part of the district of the Cinque Ports, including Margate and Ramsgate, from whence prisoners are committed to this gaol. It was first used on the 1st December 1835. It is a substantial stone building, and its yards are enclosed within a boundary-wall, of the height of 24 feet. There has been no escape, or attempt to escape from it. The yard on one side of it is overlooked by the windows of a private residence, formerly attached to the Maison Dieu, but which was sold separately, and is not now connected with it. It would be possible to communicate by signals from these windows to the windows of the cells which face it; but there is little reason to apprehend this, under present circumstances.

Wards.

The prison is divided into five wards for males, and two for females, with day-rooms and airing-yards. The dimensions of the day-rooms are 18 feet by 12, and 9 feet high. The partition-walls are 18 feet thick. The airing-yards are 30 feet long by 11 feet 6 inches wide.

Cells.

There are 14 sleeping-cells, 12 used for males, and 2 for females, of the dimensions of 11½ ft. by 9, and 9 feet high. Three males, or three or more females, usually sleep in each of these.

There are also six dark cells, of the dimensions of 10 feet by 6½, which are used both for punishment and as single sleeping-cells, and two more dark cells detached from the rest of the prison, intended to be used for peculiar offenders, not fully committed.

Inspection.

The means of internal inspection are wanting, but there are apertures in the walls through which the airing-yards can be privately seen, and they can also be looked into from the windows of the town-hall, to which the keeper has access.

Ventilation, &c.

The prison is ventilated by air-holes from the town-hall above it, and by the windows. The dark cells are, however, close, and want some further supply of air.

The thickness of the walls secures the dryness, as well as warmth, of the prison. At the locking-up at half-past five P. M. on the 26th of January, the temperature of the sleeping-cells was 25°. The drainage is good, the water excellent, and the locality healthy.

Opportunities of Improvement.

There is sufficient ground within the boundary-wall to admit of any requisite extension or enlargement of the prison. At present, it cannot, at the utmost, accommodate more than 22 prisoners with separate sleeping-cells; whereas the total number in custody at the time of our visit was 31, and on the 6th February, immediately previous to the sessions, it reached 37.

It should be observed, that there are already 14 cells of sufficient dimensions for the separation of prisoners by day as well as by night, and that the day-rooms are convertible into separate cells. It would, therefore, not be necessary to construct many new cells, if the corporation were required to alter and enlarge this prison, so as to introduce the system of entire individual separation, both by day and by night. From what will be stated on the subject of its discipline, the desirableness of a new system may, in some measure, appear.

2. Discipline.

This prison is not within the regulations of the Gaol Act, and has not hitherto been governed by any written rules, but is frequently visited by the magistrates of the town.

— 31 . . Total.

One cannot but be struck with the very trifling nature of the offences in the above calendar. With the exception of the watch charged to have been stolen by the Fleming, the value of the whole of the articles stolen would probably not amount to 5*l.* Here are 9 boys, all under the age of 17, suffering imprisonment for weeks and months, upon the most paltry charges. Three boys had been 9 weeks in gaol, for taking a handful of shrimps out of an open shop-window! Four others had been in custody several weeks, for being concerned in taking 7 lbs. of lead out of a yard, which they sold for 7*d.*, and they were brought here from Broadstairs, 24 miles! The sentences also of the four convicted men, to 12 months' imprisonment, and hard labour, each, are apparently very severe, with reference to the offences; but the nature of their employment as cooks and cleaners defeats that part of the sentence which intended that they should be placed at hard labour. But the evil of imprisonment is enormously magnified, when, as in this gaol, the prisoners associate the whole day in their respective day-rooms, and sleep three in a cell at night. The results of this association are,—the contamination which must necessarily sometimes follow unrestricted conversation, bad language, quarrelling and fighting, and playing at games. The preservation of order is left to the wardsmen, and in the first-mentioned ward, the wardsman has been in the habit of keeping order by the corporal chastisement of the other prisoners. Several of the boys complained that the wardsman had beaten them with a rope's end, which he constantly used, besides striking them with his hands. Now, it may not be easy to keep a number of idle boys in order; but that one prisoner should be permitted thus to castigate another is not only improper, but also illegal. The wardsman admitted the fact, but said that he was authorized by the turnkey, who also admitted he had heard of it, but did not know that it was improper.

Silence. Silence is not enforced, the prisoners being allowed to talk quietly in the day-rooms, but they are punished for any great noise or disturbance. At night, the prisoners occasionally sing in their cells, and crow in imitation of a cock. There are two ranges of cells in the same passages opposite each other. The shutters of some of them are left open at night; consequently, the prisoners can communicate in some cases from cell to cell. The day-rooms, also, have open bars from the passage, so that the prisoners in one day-room can, and sometimes do, talk to those in another.

Separation of Sexes. The separation of males and females is not effectual. They can speak to each other from their day-rooms; they see each other in chapel; the females who may be under punishment, or who may sleep in the solitary cells, constantly pass the men's day-rooms; and, on a late occasion, a woman stopped and conversed with the men in an indecent manner. (See evidence.) The sleeping-cells of the women are only separated by an open-barred gate from those of the men, and they could speak to each other from the sleeping-cells. The keeper and turnkey are in the habit of going into the women's apartments, and of locking up and unlocking them, without the presence of the matron or any female officer.

Employment. The only regular employment is picking oakum, or beating hemp. The convicted are assigned 3 lbs. of oakum to pick per diem. We found some of the untried also employed in oakum-picking; such employment, if not compulsory, appears by no means unsuitable to untried prisoners, and of course the absence of any employment always adds to the mischiefs of association. The picking 3 lbs. of oakum is no very hard labour; in the summer season a healthy convict ought to pick at least 5 lbs. to make the labour burthensome; indeed in the Westminster Bridewell there have been prisoners who have made no difficulty in picking 5½ lbs. a day. This gaol having been occupied little more than a year, the profits from the oakum cannot yet be exactly ascertained.

Wardsmen, &c. Prisoners are constantly employed as wardsmen, and in menial and domestic services about the prison and town-hall. Of the four males convicted of felony at the time of our visit, two were employed as cooks, one as wardsman, and one as sweeper, and the female convict was cleaning the keeper's kitchen. Of 25 prisoners in custody on 9th February last, (22 males, including one debtor and three females,) five males were employed as wardsmen, two as cooks, and two in cleaning and whitewashing, and the three females in washing and cleaning. As an instance of the abuses arising from the employment of wardsmen, we may again refer to the conduct of the wardsmen in striking other prisoners, which has already been noticed.

Visits and Letters. There is a visiting-room, in which the prisoners' friends are allowed to visit them by order of a magistrate, and in the presence of the gaoler or turnkey. Letters are allowed to be received and sent, under the inspection of the gaoler, who in doubtful cases shews them to the mayor.

Money. The prisoners are not allowed to have money in their possession, except the debtors, who find themselves.

Tobacco. Tobacco is not permitted to be used, but seems notwithstanding to be occasionally introduced. For instance, there is evidence of its having been used by the wardsman and the Fleming in the ward of felons before trial. It used often to be brought in by workmen, before all the work of the building was finished; but that is now stopped.

Newspapers, &c. The debtors are allowed newspapers by the magistrates, but not books, except with the chaplain's approval.

Gaming. There does not seem to be any play, within the strict description of gambling; but the prisoners amuse themselves by playing a game with buttons, which, like any other amusement, is inconsistent with the proper discipline of a prison.

Upon the head of the general discipline of this gaol, we beg to refer to the annexed memoranda of the evidence taken by us, which furnishes sufficient proof of laxity of management and of abuses requiring correction.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain. The chaplain resides in the town of Dover, and is curate of the neighbouring parish of St. Margaret's at Cliffe. He reads prayers selected from the Liturgy, in the chapel, on Wednesdays and Fridays, and performs divine service, with a sermon, once on Sundays. He never administers the Holy Communion. He does not keep any journal or character-book. He converses with and endeavours to instruct the prisoners, setting them lessons
Books. from time to time. He selects the books used by the prisoners, being Bibles, Prayer-books, and the Tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. All the prisoners, Chapel. except the debtors, are obliged to attend chapel; the keeper and turnkey also attend regularly.

4. Health.

Surgeon. The surgeon or his assistant attends when required, and is paid according to his attend-
Infirmary. ance. He does not keep any journal, or sign any attendance-book. There is an infirmary, Sickness.

Diet.

but it has not yet been found necessary to use it. Six prisoners were slightly indisposed at the time of inspection, but the number of sick has hitherto been very few, and it can hardly be said that there is any prevailing disease. The labour being light and the diet good, the imprisonment seems to operate favourably upon the prisoners' health. The cost of diet is stated at no less than 6*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* per head per annum, or about 2*s.* 4*d.* per week. The diet, indeed, appears excessive, with reference to the kind of labour. It consists weekly of 122½ oz. of bread, 16 oz. of meat in soup, and 112 oz. of potatoes, being 250½ oz. of solid food, besides 14 quarts of gruel. This is not only superior to the ordinary fare of a labouring man, but considerably exceeds even the tread-wheel diet of neighbouring prisons: viz., those of Maidstone and St. Augustine's. We are quite aware of the evils arising from insufficient diet; but here it really seems in the other extreme, and no distinction is made in regard either to age or sex. The diet table is not affixed any where in the prison. The debtors are the only prisoners who find themselves. They are allowed eatables and beer as they want them, without any particular rule as to the quantity.

Clothing.

There is not at present any prison clothing, but a dress is said to be in the contemplation of the magistrates.

Bedding.

The bedding appeared in good order. It is aired occasionally in the yards, according to the weather.

Washing and Cleaning.

The whole of the linen is washed in the gaol by the female prisoners. The day-rooms and cells are washed twice a week and swept daily. The prison has been several times lime-washed, and appeared clean at the time of inspection.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

No record or journal of punishments is kept, consequently the number inflicted cannot be stated. We were informed that the magistrates have not ordered the punishment of any prisoner since the gaol was opened; but that the gaoler has punished from time to time by confinement in a dark cell for a time not exceeding one day. The dark cells are so near one of the day-rooms that there may be talking between them. There is a cat-o'-nine-tails, but no prisoner has yet been whipped. The gaoler admits that he himself has occasionally cuffed the boys to keep them in order, but has never hurt any of them. No gaoler, however, ought ever to strike a prisoner, whether boy or man, unless in self-defence, or when the prisoner is regularly whipped by the magistrates' authority.

6. Officers.

Officers.

The establishment consists of the gaoler, the matron, (his wife,) and the turnkey, all of whom reside in the prison. For their emoluments see Appendix No. 21. The gaoler has been employed 11 years in that capacity in the late and present gaol. He keeps only two books, being a register of prisoners and of expenses, and no journal of punishments or occurrences. The keeper and turnkey are in the habit of visiting the females without the matron, the impropriety of which has been already noticed.

7. Miscellaneous.

Juvenile Offenders.

It has been seen that, out of 31 prisoners in custody at the time of inspection, 8 were boys under the age of 17, who were suffering long periods of imprisonment before trial in the midst of bad associates, for very trifling offences. It is a perfect delusion to suppose that such a system is conducive either to the prevention or repression of crime. If these boys had been well whipped and discharged, without any imprisonment, the interests of justice and of humanity would both have been gainers.

Debtors.

Debtors within the general jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports are not confined here, but in Dover Castle. This gaol, however, receives debtors committed by the Court of Requests, and also occasionally debtors taken upon process out of the Court of Record of the Mayor of Dover. There has been a debtor in custody for upwards of four years upon process out of this court for a debt of 20*l.*, of which he has the means of payment, as he receives the half-pay of a lieutenant in the navy, and is supposed to have other resources. He lives by himself in a large airy apartment in the tower of the Maison Dieu, which he seldom leaves, but takes exercise when he pleases. He maintains himself, and is allowed to buy beer and occasionally spirits. He is in all respects as comfortable as if in private lodgings, and appears not at all inclined to leave his quarters, but has been frightened at times when the magistrates have threatened to place him below with other debtors.

Examinations taken in Dover Gaol.

W. L., a prisoner.

W. L., a prisoner.—"I am a prisoner for trial for felony, aged 13: I am a native of Dover: my father is a porter: my mother is living: I have eleven brothers and sisters: I went to school for three months, but can read very little, and cannot write: I have been a voyage to Blyth in a collier, and have also been to sea in a fishing-boat. As I and two others were coming down the street from the fair we went up to a fish-shop, and one of the boys put his hand into the window, which was open, and took some shrimps off the counter. Nine weeks ago I was committed for trial at the sessions, which will be in about a week. I have always been in the same ward: we are unlocked at seven; then we wash, and do nothing till half-past eight, when we have breakfast: in that interval we talk to each other, or walk about the yard: after breakfast we pick oakum till twelve, then have dinner, then pick oakum till four; then supper, and in half an hour we go to bed: we sleep three in a cell, two boys committed for stealing lead sleeping in the cell with me. I have sometimes heard the prisoners in other cells 'jawing' one another. The wardsman is not very strict: sometimes he reports for talking loud, or quarrelling, in the day-room: we are not punished for talking quietly: we talk quietly when at work: we talk at night in a moderate manner: when I was in the dark cell one day, it was next the ward where other prisoners were, I heard them talking; but I did not talk to them."

A. T., a prisoner.

A. T., a prisoner.—"I am a prisoner for trial, from the first ward, aged 15, belonging to Broadstairs: my father is a sailor: I have a mother and four brothers and sisters: I can read a little, and write very little: I used to be employed in cleaning knives. We took seven pounds of lead out of a yard, and got 7*d.* for it: four besides me were engaged in it, and we shared the 7*d.* amongst us: four of us were committed about three weeks ago: picking oakum is easy work: we are not forced to pick any particular quantity. I have twice been punished for ——— my bed, but I could not help it: a man was punished on Sunday for speaking to his brother, in the next ward: that is now and then done: we are allowed to talk in a quiet way: about a week since I and another boy took some kingsmark, or worsted, out of the oakum, and put it into our pockets to mend our stockings: the other boy and I quarelled about it, because he wanted to have it all; the wardsman, thereupon, took up a rope and struck me across the hip once, and hit the other boy twice,—the other boy's name was R. T., the wardsman's name is E.: the wardsman has often hit me before with his hand: he often strikes the boys in the ward; he gave C. a stripe with a rope the other day: the lad said he should report it up at the Court when he had his trial: the wardsman said if he did not hold his tongue he would hit him again. The Fleming often plays with the boys,—he makes some amusement. Mr. E., the wardsman, had a little tobacco, as he said he had the toothache: he gave the Fleming some: the man for stealing herrings hit me once in this way: one of the boys ——— ——; he hit a boy, saying 'it was you,' but it was not the right lad; I said it was a shame; the man then hit me with his fist and knocked me against the wall: I kicked him afterwards: I believe the wardsman did not report it, as neither of us were punished. The countryman said he did not care for a man in the gaol. When we have more than we can eat we give it to whom we like. We play a game with buttons: the wardsman sometimes is spiteful and will not let us; at other times he will let us play. I was once punished for singing in the cell: G., the cook, heard me, and reported me to Mr. P., the turnkey: it is a common thing in the morning for prisoners to crow in their cells like a cock. A woman called Fishgate came lately to the door of our room, after unlocking, and a boy who was a sweep said, 'Is your man going to appear against you?': she made some answer and used the word 'b——:' The boy called the wardsman, and he spoke to her, and she asked him about some girl, and the wardsman said 'She is gone on the town.'

R. T., a prisoner.

R. T., a prisoner.—"I am a prisoner for trial, for stealing lead with A. T. and others: I am aged 16: from Broadstairs: I cannot read or write: my father is a sailor: I have one brother and one sister: I used to work at unloading colliers, and sometimes at herring-catching with my father. What the prisoner A. T. stated is true, that the wardsman E. struck me twice with a rope: I did not complain to any body, for I was afraid: I saw the wardsman strike C.; I was coming into the room at the time. The wardsman sometimes reports when prisoners are saucy to him: we must not make a noise or row, but we may talk: we talk when at work and at other times in a quiet way: sometimes we amuse ourselves by playing at buttons in the yard: I brought my buttons with me. I have been punished for singing at night: when I first came I heard some one singing, and I thought I might too: I have heard crowing like a cock in the cells. We sometimes speak to those in the adjoining day-rooms: A. T. spoke to R. this morning who was in the next day-room: the shutter is not put up in our bed-room at night. I see the women as I go into chapel: I have seen two of them going to the solitary cells. I saw Mr. E., the wardsman, give the Fleming some tobacco one day. I have been punished once for daubing another lad with coal, once for getting on R.'s bed, and another time for singing in bed."

T. E., a wardsman.

T. E., wardsman.—"I am a prisoner committed for trial for selling stolen goods in Dover: I am 36 years of age: I belong to Windsor, but I have lived abroad since the peace: it is three months since I was committed. I was made a wardsman a fortnight after I came in: Mr. Pay, the turnkey, knew me, having often seen me at Dover when I crossed with horses from France: I wash the day-room twice a week, and keep order: I pick oakum as the others. I have reported five or six times for making a noise and fighting, but allow them to talk quietly: I admit that I have struck the boys with a rope and with my hand, but have never hurt them: the turnkey told me I might do it to keep them quiet: after I had struck the boys A. T. and R. T., I told the turnkey, and he did not say it was wrong, but approved of it: I recollect striking C. once with a rope for being against the white of the wall: I remember the boy saying he would complain to the Court, and I told Mr. Pay. The Fleming brought tobacco into the prison, and gave me some of it. There is a great deal of bad talking and swearing, which obliges me to strike the prisoners. C. and the chimney-sweeper sleep in the cell with me. I have often heard talking in the cells near me. I see the women in chapel."

E. W., a wardsman.

E. W., a wardsman.—"I am a convicted prisoner, aged 20: was tried at Folkestone sessions: I was here five weeks before trial and three weeks since: I am sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment and hard labour: I am a seafaring man: my father was a blacksmith: I cannot read or write: I was drunk when I took the hens. I was first put into the ward for trial with eight others, and after trial into my present ward: three others belong to my ward: one is a cook, engaged all day in the kitchen: another is cook's mate, always in the kitchen: the third is employed every day in sweeping up, and I am wardsman, and clean the day-room and yard: the other young man has his meals with me, but not the cooks.

Kent.
Dover Town and Cinque Ports Gaol.

My task is three or four pounds of oakum to pick a-day: no one weighs or knows exactly how much I pick: I judge of the quantity for myself. In the ward before trial there is sometimes quarrelling and bad language: we were allowed to talk without noise, and so in the present ward. E. was wardsman of the former ward: E. used to tell the master if they did not mind, and master would put them in the dark cell: sometimes E. would give the lads a cut with a rope: now and then he would give them a slap with his hands. I know nothing about tobacco: no visitors or friends, but I saw my sister at trial: when the women sleep in the dark cells they go by our wards in the morning, and then we see them, and also in chapel. The woman called Fishgate was known to several prisoners before she came here. I sleep in a cell with the cook and sweeper. I have heard crowing like a cock in one of the sleeping-cells. The work at picking oakum is not hard: I would rather have it than the tread-mill: I would rather pick oakum than be idle, and so would most: I have heard the cook's mate speak of Canterbury gaol, which was much worse than this. I live here as well as at home: I know there are many poor people who do not live half so well as they do here; whilst I was locked up at Folkestone I was obliged to keep myself. I had no money when I came here. I could find an opportunity of speaking to a prisoner in any ward, especially the next to this."

Henry Pay, a turnkey.

Henry Pay, Turnkey.—"I am 38 years of age, and have been turnkey since December, 1835, and reside in the prison. The wardsman's duties are to keep the rooms clean, and to keep the prisoners in order: I knew that the wardsman once struck a boy with a rope: I told him he must not hit them hard: I did not inform the master; I knew that he had a piece of line: I never expressly authorized it, but did not know that it ought not to be done: I am not aware that the master knew of it: the most refractory boys are put with E., for the purpose of keeping them quiet: I knew E. before he was in prison. I never knew of tobacco, except some taken away from the Fleming: some months ago a convicted felon was punished for having tobacco, which was thrown over the wall. No visitor is admitted but by order of the mayor. I have occasionally sent letters from prisoners; but now it is not done without their going through the governor's hands: the debtors are allowed newspapers by order of the mayor. I call out 'Silence' 50 times a-day: bad language is very common. The cells do not smell close or offensive in the morning. I go sometimes into the females' apartments alone: the governor does the same: there is no order to take a female officer with us: the women can now and then speak to men from the day-rooms, and could from the sleeping-cells, but it is rarely done. I think the story about the woman Fishgate likely: that is not her real name, but a nickname."

Wm. Molland, keeper.

William Molland, Keeper.—"I have been keeper of this and the late gaol for 11 years: my wife is matron. I visit the wards constantly by day, and occasionally the cells at night: I go into the females' apartments without the matron. I admit it to be likely that the wardsman E. was in the habit of striking the other prisoners, but I was not informed before of the facts now stated to me: I never authorized the wardsman to do it: I promise that it shall be discontinued in future: I admit that I myself may occasionally have given the lads a cuff with my hand, but have never hurt any of them. The female convict employed in the kitchen, and the other prisoners in menial services, are so employed by the authority of the magistrates."

DEBTORS' GAOL, DOVER CASTLE.

Description

This prison is under the jurisdiction of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Constable of Dover Castle. The keeper is called the Bodar, and is appointed by the Lord Warden. It is used exclusively for debtors arrested within the limits of the Cinque Ports, and not for any criminals. It is not very secure.

The prison consists of the following apartments,—

1. Room, 14 feet 8 inches long, 11 feet 6 inches wide, 9 feet 6 inches high; fitted with beds or sleeping-berths for six persons. Four prisoners were sleeping in it at the time of inspection.
2. Room, 20 feet 6 inches long, 12 feet 6 inches wide, 11 feet 3 inches high; fitted with sleeping-berths for eight persons. Two were sleeping in it at the time of inspection.
3. Room, 14 feet long, 12 feet wide, 8½ feet high. Not occupied.
4. Another room of same dimensions as the last. Not occupied.
5. Females' room, 18 feet long, 11 feet wide, 10 feet high; occupied by two women at the time of inspection.

Within the prison are also the keeper's apartments and office, and an airing-yard for the prisoners 45 feet long by 20 wide, surrounded by a high wall.

The prisoners were eight in number, six males and two females: viz.—

Males:

| | | | |

| W. H. | In execution. | Debt, 48*l*., and costs. | Had been confined 10 weeks. |
| W. M. | In execution. | Debt, 20*l*., and costs. | Had been confined 7 weeks. |
| J. L. | In execution. | Debt, 24*l*., and costs. | Had been confined 12 weeks. |

Females:

S. A. For bail on mesne process. Debt, 220*l*. Had been confined 14 weeks.
S. C. In execution, for 238*l*. Had been confined only a few days.

Association, &c.

The males and females are separated, but there is otherwise no restraint upon association. The male debtors all smoke. In the room No. 2 the following printed placard was on the wall:—

> SMOKING.
> FINEST HAVANNA CIGARS.
> Thompson Jones,
> 10, King-street, Dover.

They may buy beer or wine, but not spirits. They take in newspapers. "Bell's Life in London" was one of those in the room No. 1. There were two Bibles in the same room, which were all the books in use.

Chaplain.

The chaplain's duties appear to be limited to performing Divine service, with a sermon, once on Sundays. He does not attend on the week-days. The Holy Communion is never administered.

Provision for Poor Debtors.

Provision has been made for the maintenance of poor debtors confined in this prison by the Act 54 Geo. III. cap. 97, intituled "An Act for the Relief of Poor Debtors, and others, confined within the Gaol of Dover Castle." This statute authorizes the raising of 300*l*. annually, within the Cinque Ports, by apportionment among the several towns within the same, and directs the application of it, by the Bodar, under the orders of the justices, to provide bedding, medical attendance, medicines, and food, for such prisoners as are proved on oath to be not of sufficient ability to procure them for themselves. The Act requires that each such prisoner shall be supplied with 2 lbs. weight of good wheaten bread per diem, which is done accordingly. The intention of the Act appears to have been limited to destitute prisoners, but, in practice, those receive the 2 lbs. of bread, who also supply themselves with meat, and other articles. Medicines and medical attendance are also generally paid for out of this fund. In regard to bedding, it is provided by the Bodar at the following rates:—

|---|---|---|
| With sheets . . . . . . . . . . | 2*s*. 6*d*. | per week. |
| Without sheets . . . . . . . . . | 1*s*. 6*d*. | ,, |
| For the mere wooden bed-place . . . | 1*s*. 0*d*. | ,, |

for which he is usually paid by the prisoners themselves.

Restriction of Relief.

There is a clause in the Act restricting prisoners from receiving the relief after the first day of the term following the time when they may be charged in execution, or after they may become supersedable, or entitled to take the benefit of the Insolvent Acts.

Neild's Gift.

There is also a fund of 800*l*. Three per Cent. Consols, bestowed by deed of gift dated 2nd May 1810, by the late benevolent James Neild, Esq. of Chelsea, in trust for the maintenance of poor debtors in this Gaol, and to enable them to obtain their discharge under the Insolvent Acts. The income of this fund is applied to the latter purpose, as the Act of Parliament provides sufficient for the debtors' support in the gaol.

Bell.

The debtors constantly receive alms from the visitors of Dover Castle, which they solicit by ringing a bell attached to a box affixed at the entrance of the Castle, when they see visitors approaching. In the summer, when many strangers visit the castle, the bell produces as much as 13*s*. or 14*s*. per week.

Bodar's Fees.

By a clause in the general Act, 56 Geo. III., c. 116, abolishing fees payable by debtors, an exception is made in favour of the Bodar of Dover Castle, who is to continue to receive his fees out of the funds of the Local Act already mentioned.

Construction.

This prison is situate on a small plot of ground within the borough of Kingston-upon Thames, and is under the jurisdiction and management of the Quarter Sessions and eleven Visiting Justices. It consists of three or four detached buildings, badly constructed and arranged. The portion appropriated to male prisoners consists of four sleeping-rooms, a day-room, store-room, and an airing-yard; the day-room and store-room being used also as work-rooms. The portion occupied by the females consists of four rooms and an airing-yard; two of the rooms being used as sleeping-rooms, one as a day-room and work-room, and one as a punishment or refractory room for both male and female prisoners, and sometimes a receiving-room. The female apartments are detached and separated by a high partition from those of the other sex. There is a chapel, in which the seats of the women are screened from view of the men by a calico curtain, an infirmary over the chapel, a cooking-room, and a bakehouse. There are no cells, nor is there any regular receiving-room.

There are several inconveniences connected with the construction, some of which require particular notice. The approach to the females' ward is through the cook-room, (only eight feet long, and five feet six inches wide,) where two male prisoners are employed throughout the day in preparing the messes, and performing various services for the officers of the prison; so that the female prisoners on their admission and discharge—in going to and returning from chapel—in procuring water when engaged in washing, &c.—in attending to their employment in the bakehouse—and in seeing visitors—must continually be brought in contact with these male prisoners, or the latter, on such occasions, must be removed; and, whatever precautionary measures are taken, there must be frequent opportunities of intercourse between them; and the keeper admits that the women, especially, often take great advantage of them. There being neither a receiving nor a refractory room, male prisoners, on their admission, if they require to be cleansed, are placed to sleep in a room in the females' ward, opposite to which, on the same floor, is a room occupied by the women, the landing-place between these two rooms being only 5 feet 10 inches wide, so that conversation can then be carried on between the sexes under and through the doors. Moreover, when it happens that the receiving-room is occupied by prisoners under punishment, this small landing-place is used as a receiving-room for male prisoners, where they are only separated by a wooden door from the women. Nothing can be more inconsistent with good discipline than such an arrangement. There are ventilators in the walls of the females' ward, whereby the male prisoners in the cook-house, and others occasionally employed in the garden, and in various offices about the prison, might hold communication, and exchange letters, &c., with the female prisoners. One small room is used as a bakehouse and bath-room, and in it is an oven, which is employed both for the purpose of fumigating the prisoners' clothes and baking their bread. Nearly the whole of the prisoners committed to this prison are such as have been summarily convicted by magistrates, and ordered to be punished by labour not severe: there is, therefore, very little intermixture of the classes: but, occasionally, prisoners intended to be examined on behalf of the Crown, and others charged with felony or misdemeanors, are confined in it; upon which occasions, when the inmates are numerous, the construction is such as not to admit of so effectual a separation as to prevent intercourse between them. The accommodation for the officers is so defective, that the keeper, matron, and turnkey, are obliged to use one small kitchen in common; in which, also, water is boiled for washing the prisoners' clothes, and a portion of their food is cooked.

See dimensions of wards, &c., Appendix (A). The keeper states that the prison is not sufficiently capacious for the few inmates who from time to time occupy it; but it appears to possess sufficient capabilities for enlargement. It is in a tolerably good state of repair. There is no night supervision. The governor, turnkey, and matron, frequently visit the prisoners in their work-rooms by day, but have various other duties to perform. There are no means of inspection. The prison is badly adapted for employment: the day-rooms, and one of the store-rooms, are also used as work-rooms. It appears to be dry, and well ventilated and drained. It was not particularly cleanly; but the keeper stated that, from the circumstance of the day-rooms being used as work-rooms, and the airing-yards not being paved or properly gravelled, which caused the dirt to be carried to every part of the prison, it was impossible to keep it more so, although he continually used his best endeavours to effect that object.

System.

Discipline.

The prisoners are classed in the following manner:—

1. Prisoners under summary convictions, not ordered to be punished by hard labour; the reputed fathers of bastard children before order of filiation; and deserters.
2. Prisoners intended to be examined on behalf of the Crown.
3. Prisoners charged with felonies or misdemeanors for re-examination.

(See Appendix A. and B.) It does not often happen that there are any prisoners in classes 2 and 3, and when there are they are kept separate from the first class both by day and night so far as the construction and other circumstances will admit. Prisoners of the first class associate in their day-rooms, at their work and meals; and sleep, several together, in rooms. Nevertheless, the silent system has been introduced; and although it is not, and cannot, (as the keeper admits,) be so enforced as to prevent intercourse and moral contamination, it is said to have produced somewhat more order and quietness than when there was no prohibition upon conversation. No hard labour is performed, and the employment consists of picking oakum, and making door-mats and vent-pegs, the profits of which are inconsiderable, and applied to the county fund. The quantity of oakum required to be picked is 2½ lbs. in winter, and 3 lbs. in summer. Labour is regarded as an alleviation of imprisonment. Some of the females are also engaged in washing and needle-work, both for the prisoners and officers; and a few of the first class, of both sexes, are occupied in cooking, and as servants to the keeper, matron, and turnkey (see Appendix C); and although two of these are described as wardsmen, they are not required to exercise any control over, or to enforce silence or order among, the prisoners. They merely clean the wards, &c. All the prisoners take this office in rotation, daily. Untried prisoners, (when there are any,) at their own request, sometimes pick oakum in their own rooms; visitors, with the keeper's permission, are admitted to prisoners of the first class on all days, (Sundays excepted,) between 12 and 1; but not to any others without orders from the magistrates; and then only on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, between the same hours. They are not searched, but any articles which they bring openly are examined. They remain only a short time, and are received in presence of an officer. Prisoners are not allowed the possession of money. All letters and written communications to or from, and all books used by, them, are subject to the keeper's inspection. Such only as are committed for re-examination may provide themselves with food. Spirituous liquors, beer, meat, tobacco, and newspapers, are inadmissible to all classes; and sufficient vigilence is, we believe, observed to prevent the introduction of them. Prisoners have two or three times been detected playing at draughts or cards, which they had contrived to make.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

The Chaplain reads prayers every morning; and on Wednesdays and Fridays examines the prisoners in the Church Catechism. It is optional with them whether they will or not attend, and it appears they generally exercise that option by absenting themselves; none had attended for about four months past. He preaches two sermons on Sundays. He visits the two wards about two or three times a-week, remaining in each about 10 minutes, but does not see the prisoners separately. He has no other duties than those of the prison. He keeps a journal, but no character book. He says the prisoners are respectful to him, are desirous of his visits, are orderly in chapel, and that both they and the officers regularly attend divine service. There are three or four Bibles and Prayer-books for the men, and as many for the women; and all books are submitted either to the chaplain or governor before they are read by prisoners. We examined these Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer-books, and in a sadly torn and dilapidated condition they were; but we fear that, if they were entire, they would be little used. The chaplain is 85 years of age.

Health.

The surgeon (who is in private practice in the town) attends the prison never less than three times a-week, and daily when any prisoners are sick. He examines them before they are passed to their wards, only when it is reported by the keeper to be necessary. If the prisoners or their clothes are in a dirty condition, the former are properly cleansed in a bath, and the latter are immersed in salt and water, or baked. He keeps a journal in strict compliance with the Act, and gives written orders for extra allowance for the sick. There are seldom any infirmary cases. The prevailing complaints are colds, the venereal disease, and indisposition arising from dissolute conduct before imprisonment. Only one case of illness originating in the prison occurred during the last year. During the same period 262 prisoners were admitted, of whom 43 were on the sick-list. The average number of days during which each remained sick was 30. The situation of the prison is considered healthy. There appears to be a sufficient supply of soap, towels, and combs, for the purposes of personal cleanliness. The prisoners wash at the pumps in the open yards; but those of opposite sexes cannot see each other. The walls and ceilings throughout the prison are limewashed once a-year, and the floors are washed once a-week with water. The prison bedding and linen is washed by the females. The prisoners take air and exercise, daily, for a short period; there are no prescribed rules as to time, but the working hours are not allowed to be encroached on.

Diet—Clothing—Bedding.

See Dietary, Appendix, Return 2, No. 18. The surgeon considers the diet sufficient both in quantity and quality. There is no distinction as to age, sex, or class. Prisoners committed for re-examination may support themselves: see Discipline. The cooks and wardswoman, or charwoman, receive a small extra allowance; the wardsman does not. The total cost of diet for the last year was £100. 2*s.* 10*d.*, or 7*s.* 7*d.* per head.

See Clothing Table, Appendix, Return 2, No. 16. No clothing is allowed, except in cases of utter destitution, or temporarily, whilst the prisoner's clothes are being fumigated, when that process becomes necessary. The cost of prison dresses for the last year amounted only to £2. 15*s.* 7*d.*, or 2½*d.* per head.

See Bedding Table, Appendix, Return 2, No. 16. The supply of bedding appeared to be insufficient. It was discoloured, and not particularly clean; and we found that it arose from the circumstance of there being no changes to admit of its being washed, without waiting for the discharge of prisoners. The prisoners generally sleep in separate beds; but in some few cases two had been placed in one bed, in consequence of the deficiency of bedding. In other cases rugs had been given instead of blankets. No expense was incurred during the last year for bedding.

Prison Offences and Punishments.

The usual prison offences are stated to be, insolence to the officers, irreverent behaviour at chapel, and talking; which are punished by solitary confinement on bread and water, or by partial privation of food without confinement, according to the magnitude of the offence. Sometimes, in order to discover the offenders, when one or more prisoners had been noisy at night, and the others refused to disclose their names, the keeper had been obliged to punish a whole class by reducing their allowance. This, at first, produced the desired effect, and he had afterwards less difficulty in fixing on the right party in similar cases. But the prisoners also adopted a plan, by which they completely neutralized the punishment. They very readily disclosed the name of an offender, and when he was punished, by having his allowance of food reduced, they contributed a portion of their own to make up his loss. To obviate this inconvenience, the turnkey, so far as his duties will allow, now remains with them during meals. It appears that whipping, and the use of irons, are not resorted to. Since the observance of the silent system the punishments have increased nearly 600 per cent., and no beneficial effects of a moral kind appear to have been the result.—See Appendix D, and "Effect of Imprisonment, &c."

Officers.

The officers are, the governor, chaplain, surgeon, matron, and turnkey; of whom the chaplain and surgeon only reside out of the prison.—See officers' salaries, fees, &c., Appendix, Return 2, No. 21. They all appear to be highly respectable according to their respective stations. As to the duties of chaplain and surgeon,—see "Moral and religious instruction, health." The governor seems to be an intelligent and active officer, and to possess qualifications which fit him for the management of a better prison. The matron's apartments are too far distant from the female prisoners' ward; she has no means whatever of overhearing or checking any disorderly conduct among them at night. The governor states that five turnkeys, instead of one, would be required to enforce the silent system, viz. three by day, and two at night; that he has tried what he could do with wardsmen, but that the system utterly failed; that not the slightest reliance could be placed on them, that they neglected their duty and deceived him on all occasions, and that he therefore discontinued the use of them altogether, at least for the purpose of watching and reporting the other prisoners.

The regulations of the Gaol Act, which have not been expressly adverted to, appear to have been complied with.

Effect of Imprisonment on the Prisoners and the Criminal Population of the Neighbourhood.

The governor states that no benefit has resulted from the discipline of the prison, as regards either the moral improvement of its inmates, or any deterring influence produced on the criminal population of the neighbourhood; that, with respect to the former, their obscene and demoralizing conversation is such, notwithstanding the attempt to enforce silence (an attempt found to be wholly impracticable where the opportunities of association are so great), that contamination prevails as much as when there was no prohibition on conversation; that not only has the discipline failed to produce either dread of punishment or reformation, but in almost all cases the prisoners have quitted the prison more depraved than when they entered it; and that, in some cases, the advantages it has afforded them in point of diet, lodging, &c., have even induced a desire to return. He appeals to the large number of recommitments, as one proof that no deterring influence or reformation has been produced; and he speaks with confidence as to the fact (a fact often admitted by prisoners) that when employment cannot be procured they commit petty offences, expressly for the purpose of obtaining admission to the prison as a home and habitation, losing sight of it altogether as a place of punishment. This latter observation is meant to apply, not only to discharged prisoners, but also to the criminal population of the neighbourhood who have never been in custody; for he states his conviction that it is a common case. Moreover, his statement is strengthened by the respectable testimony of Dr. Roots, the medical officer of the establishment, who entertains the same persuasion.

Miscellaneous.

The books of account and journals in use are the following:—Magistrates' Visiting Book, Governor's Daily Journal, Surgeon's Journal and Visiting Book, Commitment Register, Journal of Daily Issue of Food, Cash Book, General Disbursement Ledger, Work and Sale Book, Time Book, and Oakum Book.

The number of prisoners in custody during the last year was 282, of whom 75 had before been committed to this or other prisons. The proportion of recommittals was therefore very large.—See "Effect of Imprisonment, &c."

No passes are granted to discharged prisoners. A trifle is paid them at the discretion of the governor, according to the distance they have to travel to their homes.

No prisoners during the last year have been recommended for pardon.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws receive only the usual allowance.

There are no insane prisoners in custody.

The total expenses of the prison for the year ending Michaelmas 1836 will be found in the Appendix, Return 2, Nos. 22 and 23.

County House of Correction, Guildford.

THE construction of this prison is described so far only as it is conceived to have any relation to its discipline and government.

The prison (which is built of brick and was completed in 1822) stands on extra-parochial ground, on the declivity of a hill, within a quarter of a mile of the town of Guildford, and commands from its upper galleries a fine view of the river Wey and surrounding scenery. It is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates and twelve visiting justices.

Wards.

With the exception of the chapel and one small day-room for female prisoners, the whole prison is divided into separate cells, of which there are altogether 89. They are in single ranges, and approached by a corridor in each gallery, extending from one extremity of the building to the other. There are seven wards,—five for males, and two for females. Each ward has a separate staircase from the lower to the middle and upper galleries, and is divided from the adjoining wards, from the roof to the basement, by partition walls, in which are doors of communication, for the passage of the officers through the corridors, into all the other wards. In the door of each cell there is a ventilator, and another in the wall next the corridor. At night, one of the ventilators is always closed on the outside; there are no means of closing the other, which is twelve inches square. The distance between the respective open ventilators is only five feet six inches, and will admit of conversation in a low tone of voice from cell to cell. At night, one watchman, in list shoes, traverses the corridors, which are lighted up. It takes him fifteen minutes to go through them. But the prisoners can hear his approach, and see his shadow under the cell doors. They listen for the sound of his footsteps; and when he is in a distant part of the building, conversation goes on. Sometimes several prisoners sleep in one cell. The prisoners can converse, and their conversation is frequently of a most demoralizing character. The watchman does not go into the female wards, and the prisoners there are under no night supervision after the hour of 9.

When any one class is overcrowded, some of the prisoners are brought into another ward; and two classes are then mixed. See Appendix A, which shows that convicted felons, misdemeanants, and prisoners summarily convicted, are placed together in ward 3; and untried and convicted felons, in ward 5. There is no ward for juvenile offenders; and boys charged with felony are mixed with men convicted of that crime. The female wards are so small that the classes are generally mixed throughout the year; and sometimes female felons and misdemeanants sleep together, not only in one cell, but one of each class in the same bed. There is no accommodation for untried prisoners of either sex, who are therefore mixed with the convicted.

The cells and passages are cleaned by wardsmen and wardswomen (prisoners), who, for that purpose, have access to them for about five hours every day. There are grated windows (unglazed), which open into the garden from the corridors, and also from some of the staircases. One of these windows is in the passage of the lower gallery of one of the female wards, and immediately under it, in the garden, is a coal-hole, to which a male prisoner, called the lobby-man, frequently goes for coals; and several prisoners, taken from all classes, are occasionally brought into the garden to work. Through these windows the cleaners might converse with prisoners in the garden, and the female cleaners with the lobby-man. The cleaners, when in their respective wards, can also converse with, and see, and be seen by, each other, through the key-holes in the doors separating some of the wards. Female cleaners have repeatedly been detected, before the silent system was introduced, conversing with male cleaners by this medium.

In many of the sleeping cells there are open-grated windows (with wooden shutters, which the prisoners can open on the inside) overlooking the garden and surrounding country: they are only 4 feet 2 inches apart; and from some of them prisoners in different wards can see and be seen, and converse with each other. Before the adoption of the silent system, such conversations were frequent.

There is a public bowling-green almost close to the boundary-wall: it can be seen into from the windows of some few of the cells, in which conversation in the bowling-green might also be distinctly heard. It has often afforded amusement to prisoners occupying these cells to watch parties playing at bowls in the summer evenings. Throughout the prison none of the cell-windows are screened on the outside, except those of the female wards.

Chapel.

The chapel is in the middle gallery. There are six compartments in it for the male classes, but only one for all classes of females. The women are screened from the men. The different classes are conducted to and from the chapel separately. The women are taken through the male tread-wheel house, the precaution being observed of first removing the male prisoners. But it is stated by one of the female prisoners (D.) that the sexes sometimes meet. This might be avoided by the females being conducted through one of the corridors.

Governor's House.
Passage of Communication.

In front of the prison, but detached from it, is the governor's house. Before it is a passage of communication with the different airing-yards and garden. The airing-yards are separated from the passage by an open iron fence, and are under a good inspection from the governor's front windows.

Tread-wheels.

In the midst of the airing-yards is the tread-wheel house, in which are two tread-wheels, divided into eight compartments, six for males, and two for females; the whole capable of holding 68 prisoners. In some of the compartments prisoners of different classes are frequently placed together.

Mess-room.

Over the mill-house is the common mess-room for male prisoners, admeasuring 45 feet in length by 20½ feet in width, where the different classes are always mixed at their meals.

Infirmaries, Receiving-room.

The Infirmary is detached from the main building, and contains four apartments for males and four for females. In each of these all classes are mixed, being under no supervision, except that of the nurses (who are prisoners): the governor and turnkeys occasionally visit the patients.

One of the male apartments is used as the common receiving-room for male prisoners, where all classes are mixed before they are assigned to their respective wards.

The front windows of the female infirmary are only 3 feet 2 inches distant from the front windows of the male infirmary; and in both infirmaries the windows can be opened from within without difficulty. They overlook the garden, as well as the male and female infirmary airing-yards, which are separated from each other by a brick wall. Prisoners in the garden, or in either of the yards, might, with perfect ease, converse with, or receive letters from, prisoners at either of the male and female infirmary windows. The governor once saw a woman drop a letter into the yard of the men. The male patients can converse, and, we think, could even shake hands, with the female patients from their respective windows; where the governor has, in fact, witnessed conversation between them, which he says might often take place without much risk of being detected. When any of the rooms in the female infirmary are not occupied by the sick, and the female wards (which, together, contain only 12 cells) are over-crowded, some of the female prisoners are taken to the Infirmary to sleep. Neither the male nor the female patients are under any supervision at night, except that a female turnkey sleeps alone, in one of the apartments at the back of the building, consequently there are frequent opportunities, not only for conversation between prisoners of various classes, who may be placed together in one room, but between the sexes, from their respective windows.

All classes of females dine together in their own day-room in ward 7; and whenever the Infirmary is occupied by women in health, the latter, in order to go therefrom to their day-room, must go through the passage in front of the governor's house, and close to all the male airing-yards, separated from that passage only by open iron fences. The sick females take their meals in the Infirmary; but those who are convalescent fetch their meals from a low wall, upon which it is placed for them, immediately opposite to the cookery; and, in their way to and fro, these also must pass close to the open iron gratings of the male airing-yards.

Cookery.

The cookery is immediately under the governor's house, and of too easy access to the prisoners.

Wash-house, Laundry, Drying-ground.

The wash-house and laundry are built against the boundary wall. In these all classes of females are mixed; but they are generally under the eye of the matron.

The male prisoners of each class, on Mondays and Thursdays, bring their linen to the laundry-door to be washed, where they can be seen, at least, by the female prisoners; but the linen is taken in, and given out, by the matron or a female turnkey.

The female prisoners who work in the wash-house frequently go to the drying-ground in the garden to hang out the linen; and opportunities are thus presented for their seeing male prisoners who work in the garden,—the lobbyman,—the infirm prisoners who carry corn and flour from the lodge to the mill-house, the prisoners who bring the linen to the laundry,—the male officers,—the customers who go to the mill-house, and any strangers admitted within the boundary wall.

Lodge, Garden beyond, Boundary Wall, &c.

Corn is ground at the mill for customers, who bring it in carts to the lodge-gate. Prisoners, felons, and misdemeanants,—convicted and untried,—who are too infirm to work on the wheels, are assembled, during the day, in one of the airing-yards, and perform the less laborious employment of drawing an iron roller. When corn is brought, or flour carried away, the lobbyman goes outside of the lodge-gate to assist in unloading and loading the carts; and the infirm prisoners, and frequently the prisoners on relief from the wheels, convey the corn and flour to and from the mill and the inside of the lodge-gate. But the infirm prisoners, as well as the lobbyman, sometimes also go to the outside of the gate; and the customers go through the garden to the mill-house to instruct the miller. Frequent escapes have been the consequence of this arrangement. About two years ago, one of the relief-men engaged in carrying corn to the lodge ran off: two of his fellow-prisoners went in pursuit of him, and finding him in a public-house in the town of Guildford, honestly returned with him to the prison. One of them was rewarded by being made a wardsman. On another occasion, three prisoners were employed in the garden outside the boundary-wall, in cleaning the privies: one of them escaped; but, on the third day afterwards, returned, saying he had only gone home to see his wife. He was not punished.

It appears that bodies of prisoners frequently go to the outside of the prison to work in the outer garden,—to pick stones in the adjoining fields,—to receive and deliver corn and flour,—and to perform various other tasks. Two prisoners once escaped from the field: they had been permitted to go out of the officers' sight, and ten minutes had elapsed before their escape was discovered. Many escapes have taken place. See Appendix B.

It appeared to us astonishing that escapes had not been more frequent, so great and numerous are the facilities which are afforded to the prisoners. The porter is generally the most infirm of the turnkeys, being appointed to that office because its duties are the least arduous. The present porter is an old man, sixty-eight years of age. The lobbyman is selected from any class, chiefly on account of his strength and capability for laborious work; and as his period of discharge arrives generally in two or three months after his appointment, there is but little opportunity of forming a correct estimate of his character and habits, which in any case are not likely to be of a very high order. There is a free passage of communication from the door of the tread-wheel house, in which all the prisoners are assembled at work, to the lodge-gate. The porter has no arms, except that two or three cutlasses are kept in one of the sleeping-rooms of the turnkeys over the lodge, which could not, therefore, be immediately accessible upon an emergency. The lobbyman might overpower the porter and secure the keys,—the prisoners at the wheels might as easily overpower the other turnkeys,—and all of them might quietly walk away without much chance of the matter being discovered, or, at least, in sufficient time to defeat the attempt.

The permitting prisoners to go beyond the lodge-gate is attended with other serious evils. It opens a channel of communication from without; and the infirm prisoners of various classes, who work at the roller, and at night return to sleep in their respective wards, extend that channel of communication throughout every portion of the interior of the prison.

Dimensions.

The governor states that the prison is not sufficiently capacious; and that the mixing of the classes is, in many instances, unavoidable. It has already been mentioned that there is no ward for the untried; and that the two female wards contain only twelve cells, and one very small day-room. The average number of prisoners is about 110. There have been 141 confined in the prison at one time, viz. 115 males and 26 females. The number of separate sleeping-cells is 89, which, with the exception of 4 of larger dimensions, are much of the same size. See Appendix C.

Repairs.

The whole prison is solidly built, and in substantial repair.

Security against Escapes, against Fire.

The prison is not secure against escapes, as will be perceived from what has been said; but its insecurity seems to be rather a consequence of some of the prison arrangements than owing to defects of construction. For its protection against fire, there is no fire-engine on the establishment; but there are three in the town.

Inspection.

The means of inspection are extremely bad, there being no inspecting holes into the cells or in any of the apartments. The only point which commands any inspection is the governor's house, which merely overlooks the airing-yards. Generally speaking, the officers have no means of seeing the prisoners without being in the midst of them.

Adaptation for Employment.

With regard to employment, the Tread Wheels appear to be insufficient for the average number of prisoners. All the Wheels will hold, at one time, only 68 persons. The cells are commodious, and not badly adapted for employment not requiring machinery.

Adaptation for Separation.

To prevent communication between prisoners in separate cells (which now is practicable), material alterations would be indispensable.

Dryness, Ventilation, Drainage.

The governor is of opinion that the prison is tolerably dry, although in winter the water may sometimes be seen standing on the floors and running off the walls; but he thinks such might be the case with other buildings. There are no fires except in the infirmaries. The prison is well ventilated and well drained.

System—Discipline.

Classification.

The seven wards are appropriated to the following classes :—

Males.
Ward No. 1. Rogues and vagabonds.
,, 2. Prisoners summarily convicted.
,, 3. Felons (now mixed with misdemeanants and persons summarily convicted).
,, 4. Misdemeanants.
,, 5. Felons (now mixed with untried felons).

Females.
,, 6. Prisoners summarily convicted.
,, 7. Felons.

Such is the classification practically pursued, although it does not appear to be in accordance with that which is directed by the existing rules and regulations for the government of the houses of correction of the county of Surrey, made by the court of quarter session (Michaelmas 1833), and certified by his Majesty's justices of gaol delivery. To what extent the prison arrangements which have been described under the first head of this report (and which therefore it is not necessary here to repeat) are calculated to prevent the intermixture of classes, however constituted, and the contamination which must necessarily result from intercourse between prisoners of every variety and degree of moral depravity, a tolerably correct opinion may easily be formed from what has there been said. For a detailed account of the various offences, ages, employments, &c., of the prisoners in each class, on the 25th of January, 1837, see Appendix A. There is no accommodation for juvenile delinquents, or for untried prisoners of any class or sex.

Association of Untried.

Untried male prisoners of every class, by day, are placed by themselves in the airing-yard of the convicted felons, where they have no employment, and are allowed free intercourse; but at night they are subject to the same rules and restrictions as convicted prisoners, in whose ward they sleep. Untried female prisoners, by day, are employed in washing or at needlework, and are mixed with all classes; at night, also, they are associated with the convicted.

Silent System.

The silent system is that which is pursued with convicted prisoners. They work in bodies; and at night, as far as they can be accommodated, sleep in separate cells.

Arrangements for working the system.

It will be proper to give some account of the prison arrangements for working the system. There are seven male monitors, whose duty is to attend the prisoners at their labour, meals, exercise, and at chapel, to see that silence and good order are observed, and to report any breaches of the prison regulations. Six of them attend the prisoners on the wheels—one at each compartment; and two of that compartment also attend the school (which is open during week-days for about three-quarters of an hour), to assist the schoolmaster: the schoolmaster is the chief turnkey. One monitor attends the infirm prisoners at the roller. There are seven male wardsmen or cleaners, whose duty is to clean the prison, and to assist in getting ready the meals; one of them being also nurse and cleaner of the male infirmary. There is one wardswoman, who cleans the female wards. There is a lobbyman who assists in carrying the corn and flour to and from the mill, and performs various other offices at the lodge and about the prison; and there is one cook, who assists the chief turnkey in the cookery. All these are selected from prisoners of any class, with reference only to their capability, and receive extra allowance of food. There are four male turnkeys, who by day overlook the monitors and the prisoners at their labour, meals, exercise, &c.; and at night alternately perform the duty of watchman—one only being on watch at a time. The night watchman traverses the passages of the male wards (which are lighted up) in list shoes. The female wards are under no night supervision. There are two female turnkeys, who alternately attend the female prisoners at the tread-wheel, and at their meals, and do various other duties of the prison. And there is a miller, who superintends the grinding of the corn and keeps the corn account. See list of the regular officers of the prison, their duties, &c. Appendix D.

The male prisoners take their meals together in their mess-room, sitting side by side, with their faces towards the monitors and turnkeys; but we observed that they looked about without restraint, and it appears they converse much in whispers. The prisoners go to and from work, chapel, meals, and exercise, in single files—the turnkeys and monitors being stationed in the most favourable positions for overlooking them; but many of the passages are circuitous, so that the officers cannot at all times command a view of the entire body: and there is often a stoppage and thronging in the ranks, which afford frequent opportunities for communication. The females take their meals in their day-room, under the charge of a female turnkey. The sick and some of the convalescent female prisoners take their meals in the infirmary.

Hard Labour.

The hard labour is that of the tread-wheel, which is productive, corn being ground for customers. The profits for the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, were 93*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*—20*l.* per cent. of the profits are paid to the governor, the residue to the county fund. When there is no corn to be ground, the power is applied to the working of a fly-wheel. For a description of the wheels, the hours of labour, and amount of labour performed, &c. &c., see Appendix C, and Return 2, No. 19. Tread-wheel labour is regarded as a punishment, but is preferred to solitary confinement. The usual modes of deception and falsehoods are resorted to by the prisoners, to deceive the doctor, the turnkeys, and each other, as well to avoid the labour as to get into the infirmaries. The wheels are high, and wherever there are nine prisoners (which is the average number) in one compartment they are then close together, and have greater opportunities for talking—and they do talk. The turnkeys say it is impossible to prevent it, and they have no doubt it frequently takes place without being discovered. It is often difficult to detect the offenders. They communicate in whispers and by signs, and possess sufficient means of communication to become aware of what takes place throughout the prison.

Labour not severe.

The employment or labour not severe—of male prisoners—is that of drawing a large iron roller: but prisoners who have been sentenced to, and are too infirm to perform, hard labour on the wheels, are also placed at this employment. These prisoners have abundant opportunities for conversation, and, being taken from different classes, constitute channels of communication throughout the whole prison. Female prisoners sentenced to labour not severe are employed in washing, mending, and making shirts for the prisoners.

With regard to labour by transports, there have been no transports in this prison.

Visitors.

Prisoners confined under sentence of court, and untried felons and misdemeanants, are permitted to see visitors once a-week, under an order signed by a visiting magistrate, between the hours of 1 and 2—males on Wednesdays, females on Tuesdays. Prisoners under summary convictions of justices, entitled to their discharge on payment of fines, and reputed fathers of bastard children before an order of affiliation, are allowed to see visitors every day (except Sundays) between 12 and 1. Visitors are seen by the prisoners in presence of an officer; they are very few. The governor, unless absent, personally interrogates them, and if found to be improper characters, or if they cannot give a satisfactory account of themselves, they are not admitted, although bringing a magistrate's order. They come no farther than the lodge-gate, where a temporary wooden rail is affixed for their separation from the prisoners, which leaves a space between them of three yards, in which an officer always stands during the visiting hours. The visitors are not searched.

Money.

Prisoners are not allowed the possession of money under any circumstances; but in October, 1836, it was ascertained that one of the turnkeys had been in the habit of introducing money. He was discharged, and the governor afterwards ascertained that a regular account had been kept open between him and a prisoner, for whom he had been in the habit of purchasing tobacco, &c. The governor thinks that the practice had prevailed very generally among the male classes in that turnkey's time. See Appendix B.

Letters.

Letters may be received by prisoners at all times, subject to the inspection of the keeper, who communicates to, or withholds from them, all or any part of the contents at his discretion. And with the permission of the visiting justices, prisoners may at all times write to their friends, their letters being subject to the like inspection.

Books.

No books would be allowed to be introduced by prisoners or their friends without being previously submitted to the governor. All books supplied by the prison are first subject to the approval of the chaplain.

Newspapers, Tobacco, Spirituous Liquors, Beer, Meat.

These articles are inadmissible, and, with the exception of tobacco, are rarely or never attempted to be brought into the prison. The prisoners are searched on admission, and all visitors are narrowly watched; but prisoners are nevertheless frequently discovered chewing tobacco. The governor thinks that when they arrive at night (as they frequently do when coming from London) the turnkeys are less than usually vigilant, and do not sufficiently search them; they secrete it in their shoes, waistbands, and in various other ways. It has also frequently been found by the turnkeys in the garden, having been thrown over the boundary wall.

Gaming.

The governor has never known gambling of any kind to have taken place.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain.

On Sundays, the chaplain preaches two sermons. The services commence at 10 in the morning, and 2 in the afternoon. He reads the prayers of the Church of England on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, at half-past 7; and on Tuesdays and Thursdays at half-past 12. But sometimes, instead of reading those prayers, he reads and expounds the Scriptures, and concludes by reading a prayer from Jenks's Family Prayers. He visits and superintends the school daily (except Sundays), and the infirmaries as often as there are any sick in them. He visits each class once a-week, for about an hour, seeing each prisoner alone in his cell. On Sundays his entire duties occupy about two hours and a half; and on other days about one hour and a half. He keeps a journal, but no character-book; in the former he records the times of his attendance and the duties he performs. On Sundays he has other engagements besides those of the prison; he reads prayers in the mornings and afternoons in one of the churches at Guildford. He is ready at all times to attend any prisoners wishing to communicate with him. He says the prisoners are attentive and orderly in chapel. Both the officers (except when on duty) and the prisoners very regularly attend divine service. No report is made of absentees; the governor says that if either prisoners or officers were to absent themselves without cause, it would immediately, and without difficulty, be discovered by him from personal observation in the chapel. The necessary cleaning is always done before service, except on those mornings when it begins at half-past 7—the governor and turnkeys visiting the wards to ascertain the fact.

Books.

All the prisoners who can read are supplied with Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer-books; and the chaplain frequently distributes amongst them religious tracts; and no books are supplied them by the prison which are not first submitted for his approval.

School.

There is a school for boys, at which they are taught to read; it is held in the mess-room; on Sundays, in the morning, during one hour before the service; and in the evening, after the service, during half an hour. It is attended also on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, during three-quarters of an hour, immediately after the prisoners have dined. The only book which is read, except spelling-books, and such others as are necessary for instructing the most ignorant, is the Bible. The numbers instructed fluctuate between 20 and 40. The chief turnkey is the schoolmaster; he is assisted by four prisoners, of whom, at the period of our visiting the prison, two were convicted felons, and two convicted misdemeanants. No instruction is given to females. Young men (if sentenced to more than a month's imprisonment) who can be spared from the wheels are admissible to the school. It is said that several boys, who have been wholly ignorant of their letters on admission, have been capable of reading the Scriptures at the period of their discharge.

General Improvement.

The chaplain states that the prisoners behave at chapel with apparent devotion, and that he thinks several have received religious impressions; whilst of the improvement of others he entertains little or no hopes. He thinks there is a general communication among them, and a knowledge of what transpires in the prison, notwithstanding the silent system. He says there has been a greater demand for books since that system was adopted, but that it has probably proceeded solely from a desire to relieve the additional irksomeness which it has produced. He feels assured that the prisoners practise every deception and falsehood to avoid the labour of the wheels.

Health.

Surgeon, Examining, Cleansing, Fumigating, &c.

Prisoners who are sent from London are invariably cleansed by means of a bath, and their clothes are fumigated; and the prisoners, if found to be healthy, are then passed to their wards before examination by the surgeon, who sees them on the following day: all other prisoners, if found to be free from vermin, and in other respects clean and in a healthy condition, are passed to their wards before examination by the surgeon, and their persons are not cleansed nor their clothes fumigated, but the surgeon examines them on the following morning: if the governor, however, is not perfectly satisfied with their appearance, the usual routine of cleansing, &c. &c. is observed. The mode of fumigation practised is that of baking the clothes of the males in an oven; and if very dirty, immersing them in salt and water. The females' clothes are always washed. The surgeon visits the sick daily, and if necessary more frequently; and he inspects the whole of the prisoners twice a-week. He attends the visiting magistrates at their meetings, and reports the state of the prisoners' health at every quarter-sessions, attending personally with his journal for that purpose. The surgeon is also engaged in private practice.

Infirmaries, Prevalent Diseases, &c.

The infirmaries are under the superintendence of nurses (prisoners), but are visited occasionally by the governor or other officer. The most prevalent diseases are inflammation of the lungs and pleura, catarrh, and diarrhœa. Diarrhœa appears to be caused in a great measure by the diet, which is more liquid and less stimulating than the great mass of prisoners have been accustomed to. The inflammatory diseases are said to be produced by the dry, keen, and bracing air of the prison, which is frequently too stimulating for debilitated constitutions. The average number of days during which each invalid remained on the sick list, in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 24. The proportion of sick to the whole number admitted during that year was 1 to 9. There was only one death among 448 prisoners for the same period.

The governor thinks the prisoners are much exposed, in cold and wet weather in the winter, in coming off the wheels warm, and then going to their meals and chapel in that state. They also come from work into the open yards, twice a-week, to muster for examination by the surgeon: the time of mustering occupies a quarter of an hour; each class waiting in the yards until the preceding class has been examined.

Daily Washing of Prisoners.

There is no regular allowance of soap, towels, and combs; but the prisoners are sufficiently supplied with these articles. They wash under open sheds in the yards, three only at a time. And here they seek all opportunities, and make a variety of excuses, for conversation, pretending that they only ask for soap, towels, &c. &c. They appeared to be cleanly in their persons.

Cleansing the Prison.

Every part of the prison is clean. The walls and ceiling are whitewashed with lime as often as the slightest shade or discoloration is perceived; and the floors throughout are washed with lime and stone daily.

Washing Linen and Bedding.

The linen of the prisoners and the bedding is washed by the female convicted prisoners in the prison, where there is a good laundry; these wash for the governor's family also. The untried are employed in the wash-house if they require work.

Air and Exercise.

In fine weather, all the prisoners who work on the wheels take half an hour's exercise in the open yards daily. Those at the rollers, and the untried, are always in the yards by day.

Diet, Clothing, Bedding.

Diet.

The allowance of diet is as follows:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Mondays.WednesdaysFridays. | Men.Boys. | Bread 24 oz., meat 4 oz., potatoes ¾ lb., soup 1½ pint, gruel 1½ pint. |
| | Women. | Same as male prisoners, with exception of 8 oz. less of bread. |
| Tuesdays.Thursdays.Saturdays. | Men.Boys. | Bread 24 oz., Potatoes ¾ lb., soup 1½ pint, gruel 1½ pint. |
| | Women. | Same as male prisoners, with exception of 8 oz. less of bread. |
| Sundays. | Men.Boys. | Bread 24 oz., potatoes ¾ lb. gruel 3 pints. |
| | Women. | Same as male prisoners, with exception of 8 oz. less of bread. |

The soup is made of oatmeal, Scotch barley, and vegetables: one ounce of oatmeal, and one ounce of Scotch barley, being allowed for making 1½ pint. See Dietary, Appendix, Return 2, No. 18. The monitors, cleaners, &c., receive an extra allowance. No distinction is made between the convicted and untried. None of the prisoners support themselves. The sick in the infirmaries receive extra allowance at the discretion of the surgeon. The cost of extra allowance for the last year, to all the prisoners, was 10*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* The whole cost of prison diet was 549*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* or 5*l.* 11*s.* per head per annum.

Clothing.

There is no regular prison dress: prisoners wear their own clothing, but, if in need, are supplied by the county. The supply consists of scarcely any other articles than shirts, shoes, and shifts. There are no periodical musters to ascertain that these articles are properly preserved. The prisoners frequently exchange their clothes, and steal from or sell them to each other. An account is kept by the governor of the quantity issued and its value. The cost of clothing for the last year was 63*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* The shirts and shifts are made in the prison by such of the females as are incapable of working on the wheels.

Bedding.

There are 77 separate sleeping cells for male prisoners. The greatest number of male prisoners in confinement at one time, during the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 102; and during the year preceding, 115. In the 4 large cells, several prisoners frequently sleep together, sometimes 5 or 6 beds being placed in each. The rule is that no less than 3 shall be placed in one cell: but when we visited the prison we found an instance of two only being in one cell. The governor said it had been intended to place another with them. Sometimes when the prison is very full, three or four prisoners sleep in one bed. On such occasions two beds are generally drawn close together, so as to form one—all the prisoners sleeping under the same covering. We found three boys in one small or single bed—two at the head, one at the foot. The bedding consists of a straw mattress, a hull bed and bolster, two blankets, and a rug; the cost of which is about 20*s.* There are no stated periods for washing or shaking the bedding; it is done frequently; we found it remarkably clean. The cost of prison bedding and clothing per head per annum, for the last year, was 16*s.* 3*d.*

There were three prisoners at the time of our visit, who had been convicted of unnatural offences. These were placed with the others on the wheels, but in separate cells at night.

Offences in Prison and Punishments.

The most usual prison offences are refusal to work on the tread-wheels, bad language, talking, exchanging clothes. These are punished by stoppage of food, and confinement in dark and solitary cells; talking on the wheel is punished also, by depriving the prisoner of his turn for relief. The governor states that little reliance is to be placed on the monitors, who would favour their fellow-prisoners, if not closely watched themselves by the turnkeys. In the case of whipping, the ordinary number of lashes is four dozen, inflicted in the presence of the governor. During the last year two prisoners were placed in irons for refractory conduct. In almost all cases of solitary confinement the prisoners have been much subdued; but the periods of confinement have been too short, to produce any very sensible or lasting effects. The total punishments during the last year were—males, 540; females, 75; total, 615: that number does not include extra turns on the wheels. See Appendix, Return 2, No. 15 and E. Punishment by reduction of food, the most objectionable perhaps of any, is that which is most frequently inflicted; but the governor admits that with the boys at least, whose allowance equals that of the men, it produces very little effect: that in all cases, in order to maintain the discipline and the rule of silence, solitary confinement on bread and water must frequently be resorted to. We are quite persuaded that he is not a person who would punish unnecessarily; but it will be perceived that the punishments are numerous, and it may be inferred from that fact alone, and it will be seen both from the evidence and the extracts from the governor's journal, as well as under various heads of this report, that considerable intercourse takes place between the prisoners; and that the evils of contamination are not materially diminished.

Officers.

For a description of the regular officers of the prison, their names, ages, salaries, emoluments, duties, &c. see Appendix D, and Return 2, No. 21. An extra or assistant turnkey is occasionally employed. The governor, matron, male and female turnkeys and porter, reside in the prison: the chaplain, surgeon, miller, and secretary to the visiting magistrates, reside out of the prison.

The 1st regulation of the gaol act requiring that " No keeper or officer shall sell or derive any advantage from the sale of any article to prisoners," &c.
The 2nd regulation requiring that " A matron shall be appointed," &c.
The 3rd regulation requiring that " The keeper shall visit every ward, see every prisoner, and inspect all, once in every 24 hours," &c.
The 4th regulation, requiring that " The keeper shall keep a journal," &c. and, appear to have been fully complied with. The various matters embraced by the other regulations of the act have been reported on in detail. As to the duties of chaplain and surgeon, see " Religious and Moral Instruction " and " Health." The superior officers appear to be highly respectable; and the sub-officers steady and trustworthy. All of them, without exception, afforded us every assistance in our inquiries.
The 21st regulation, requiring that " No money under the name of garnish shall be taken," &c.

Monitors, &c.

Of the prisoners employed, there are 7 monitors, 7 wardsmen and cleaners, 1 cook, 1 lobbyman, 1 wardswoman, and generally 4 washerwomen.

| The regular officers are . . . . . | 14 |
| An occasional assistant . . . . . | 1 |
| The prisoners employed as monitors, &c. &c. are . . . | 21 |
| Total . . . | 36 |

The average number of prisoners is said to be 110; so that the individuals employed as officers and attendants (36) are in the proportion of about 1 to 3 prisoners; and if that number be deducted from the daily average number of prisoners (110), the proportion of persons employed as officers or attendants will be 36 to 89 prisoners, or 1 to 2¼. In order, therefore, to maintain the discipline in a prison comparatively small, it will be seen that a large and costly machinery is employed.

It is stated both by the governor and turnkeys that the duties are extremely arduous, and require unremitted attention.

During the late influenza 3 of the turnkeys were laid up and incapable of attending the prisoners—two of them at one time; one substitute was provided, but another could not be found. The consequence was, that one of the other turnkeys was obliged to do double duty at the wheels, and to be excused from night duty; and that between midnight and six in the morning there was no night-watch during two successive nights. The governor, moreover, states that the prisoners, aware of the inexperience of assistant turnkeys, will alter their system of working for the purpose of deceiving them as to the amount of labour.

Miscellaneous.

Accounts, Journals, &c.

The following are the books of account, journals, &c., used in this prison:—Account-Books of Clothing received for the use of prisoners; Do. of Clothing supplied, and Money given to do. on discharge; Do. of Corn sent to the Mill to be ground, &c.; Do. of Corn ground with a Dr. and Cr. Account; Do. of Fines received; Register or Commitment Book, containing the Number, Name, Sex, Age, Trade, or Profession, Description of Person, Parish, and County, of the Prisoners, by whom and when committed, when received, their Crime, Sentence, when discharged, if committed before, how often committed, for what Offence, their Conduct in Prison, and Observations; a Journal of Daily Food issued, also enumerating the various Employment of Prisoners; Governor's Journal of all Occurrences of Importance in the Prison; Chaplain's Do. for entering the Times of his Attendance and Duties performed; Surgeon's Daily Journal; Do. for Extra Diet; Register Book, containing the Weight of all Prisoners committed for Two Months and upwards, showing their Decrease or Increase of Weight monthly; and Magistrates' Book for inserting the Time of their visiting the Prison and Observations.

Re-committals.

The total number of prisoners in confinement during the last year was 552; of whom 74 had been before committed to this prison.

Effect of Imprisonment.

The governor is of opinion that the effect of imprisonment is not such as either to deter or to reform; that the prisoners in general retain their bad habits, and return to their former practices. Besides those who are recommitted, he hears frequently of others who have been tried and transported.

Juvenile Offenders.

Of late years there has been a great increase of juvenile offenders, The chaplain, in one of his recent reports to the Secretary of State, says, "There is one circumstance so remarkable that it must strike every one acquainted with the prison—the great increase of juvenile offenders: there is now a far greater proportion of boys than heretofore."

Passes.

It seems that passes are not granted. Discharged prisoners, whose places of residence are 20 miles distant, receive 1*s.* 6*d.*—if less distant, 1*s.*

Insane Prisoners.

There are no insane prisoners.

Pardon.

No prisoners were recommended during the last year for pardon.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

No allowance is made to prisoners committed under the revenue laws.

Expenses of the Prison.

Evidence.

H. D., Prisoner.

"I have been here 16 months and 1 week, for felony. I have always slept in a single cell. I have been a messman, or cleaner of the mess-room. I used to carry the victuals there, and see that each prisoner had his right quantity. I am now sick. I am to be messman again when I recover. When I am well I remain in the mess-room all day, except when I fetch the victuals; then I go to the cook-room for the victuals. The prisoners, at one time, used to talk from cell to cell at night. They could hear each other without much difficulty. Perhaps they were obliged to speak twice before they could be understood, because they were forced to speak in a low tone of voice to avoid being heard by the watchman. This happened before the introduction of the Silent System, and was frequently detected by the wardsmen, before monitors were appointed; but the wardsmen did not walk about the passages. The practice was checked by the governor. It might take place now without being detected if the watchman was known to be on the other side of the prison. If a prisoner were to listen by placing his ear at the ventilator of his door, he could hear the sound of the watchman's steps within two or three yards, notwithstanding his list shoes. I have heard him. I have heard him breathe and cough. I have also heard conversations carrying on between prisoners at the front windows of their cells, and have often heard the governor from his house call out to them: this was before the introduction of the Silent System. The messman receives extra allowance. I prefer being a messman, or should like to be a wardsman, on account of not doing labour and for the extra meat. I think the cells are damp in wet weather,—not otherwise. I think it is owing to its being a stone building."

J. S., Prisoner.

"I have been here six months, for felony. Conversation can be heard from cell to cell in an ordinary tone of voice. I very often hear the watchman, even without listening, whilst I am lying awake on my bed. I have been punished for tearing my blankets. I was placed in a dark cell three days on bread and water. I have been punished for talking on the tread-wheel; and once for getting off the wheel, when tired. It is generally known amongst the prisoners when another prisoner is to be discharged. I think it may be owing to several prisoners sleeping in double cells, where they can talk together; and in consequence of the men on the wheels making signs with their fingers on the board, which they do, and it can easily be done without being detected: the men speak in their compartment on the wheel, generally four or five times daily. It has been done since the appointment of monitors: it is not always perceived; the men look straight forward and whisper, and are not heard by the monitors. It may happen much oftener without his noticing it; and I believe it does so happen. There is a general knowledge in the prison of what passes in every part of it: prisoners know of new comers in different classes,—their crimes and sentences,—and when they are discharged. There are both felons and misdemeanants in the same compartment of the wheel on which I work. I hear whispering daily in the mess-room at each meal without its being observed. The prisoners don't look at one another, but look straight forward. I can only speak with certainty in reference to the distance within which I can hear, but I think it must take place in various parts of the mess-room. Prisoners often break silence on the wheel, about the work. Perhaps the wheel goes too fast,—then several join in the talk. There are a good many prisoners who have colds. I think it is owing to their getting off the wheels whilst hot and perspiring, and then sitting in a current of air, the doors being kept open at each end. The shed or tread-wheel house is close, and requires ventilation in warm weather, and it becomes necessary to open the door: the prisoners sit often without their coats. All the watching and punishment for talking does not prevent it, and there is much communication amongst the prisoners."

J. G., Prisoner.

"I am here for felony, and have been in prison seven months. There is no difficulty in hearing the approach of the watchman at night. I can hear the cracking of his leather shoes within his list shoes. It is very common to hear this. I can see his shadow under the door. I see it every night whilst sitting up: in consequence of being so long in bed I get restless, and then sit upon my bed. I can tell when he is at a distance. The prisoners whisper and make signs on the wheel very generally, and more so in the mornings and evenings, when it is dark and cannot be perceived by the monitors. Prisoners know what passes on my side of the prison, viz., throughout classes 3, 4, and 5. These work on the same wheel. A good deal is known from the conversations of the wardsmen at meals, where they talk together, and the men in the double cells can talk together. I have slept in a double cell four or five nights; there were then six together in one of them: the prisoners used to say what they did out of prison, and boasted about it, and instructed each other as to the best ways of committing offences. A person would become more wicked and depraved by such conversations. I should like to be a wardsman on account of the extra allowance, and not being obliged to do labour. The prisoners practise deception, and tell falsehoods, to get into the infirmaries, or in order to rest for a short time, and then laugh at their cleverness when they are not discovered. There is a good deal of laughing and jeering in my class at chapel whilst men kneel at prayers, when the prisoners cannot be seen; and the hardened laugh at the seriously disposed, and annoy them whilst kneeling. I think the chaplain makes a good impression on some, but they are few. I think the men corrupt each other nearly as much now as before the Silent System. Deception is practised on new comers by men on the wheels, in order to get off sooner, and that they may work less themselves; and also by men on the rest, to make the new comers work more, that they may rest longer: this is not always detected by the monitors."

W. G.

"I am a misdemeanant, and have been here about 9 months. Conversation can be heard from cell to cell through the ventilators and front windows. We can see the light under the doors. Through nearly all the cells there is a space of about one-third of an inch under the doors, but I don't know whether the shadow of the watchman could be observed. I think it possible, but I never tried. I have not worked on the wheels since monitors were appointed. I was a wardsman, and would like to be one again on account of the exemption from labour. The exposure is great on coming off the wheels; and I think it occasions colds amongst the prisoners."

J. Y.,
Prisoner.

"I am in the felons' class, and sleep in a double room: when there are only three prisoners in the room, they occupy separate beds, there being three beds. Sometimes three sleep in one bed, viz., when there are four prisoners; they then place the mats across two beds, and three prisoners sleep together in one, and the fourth sleeps alone; or if there are five prisoners, then four sleep together on two beds, and one on the other bed. Conversation then takes place in whispers: they ask new prisoners what they were brought to prison for, and new prisoners relate their adventures. Occasionally, some of them scoff at religion, and make a mockery of it: those inclined to be serious are sometimes annoyed and jeered at by the others. They stop up the opening under the door, otherwise they could see the watchman's shadow. I have seen it, and also heard him, when the space under the door had remained open: the prisoners sometimes put their clothes against that space to keep out the cold. Whispering and conversation and signs take place now (since monitors have been appointed) on the wheels. We can see the women pass from the infirmary to their classes in wards 6 and 7, when we walk in the airing-yards. I was once in the 5th class, and I have twice seen the women go to chapel, passing through that part of the chapel where I sat. I should like to be a wardsman, to avoid labour, and for the additional allowance. I have caught cold from coming off the tread-wheel warm, and subsequent exposure in mustering in the yards. This happened soon after I came here."

T. A.,
Prisoner.

"I am in the second class. I have slept in a double cell: the prisoners used to talk together freely in a soft voice, sometimes during several hours of the night. We could hear the watchman approach if we listened. When prisoners sleep together in the same room it is impossible to prevent conversation. I would prefer being a wardsman. I often feel chilled when I get off the wheels."

"In the morning we unlock with the turnkeys, and attend to the prisoners being washed. In wet weather, the men who have washed return to their cells until the bell rings for work: in dry weather they walk round the yards. After the men go to work, we clean the pans and prepare for the mess-room; and afterwards we clean the wards, and do the dusting, and whiten the floors. This occupies us till about one (the dinner hour): we then, with the turnkeys, conduct the prisoners to the mess-room, and superintend them there, and prepare the pans for evening, and do the necessary work in the wards: we clean the iron-work of the doors, and the locks, which occupies us all the remainder of the day. We go into the passages where the cells are nearly during all the day. Conversation can be carried on in a low tone of voice, from cell to cell, through the ventilators, and also through the windows, in front of the cells. The watchman may be heard walking in the passages: his footsteps and the rustling of his clothes can be heard, and his shadow can be seen through the bulls'-eyes, (the closed ventilators,) when the lamp is opposite. Reports sometimes take place for talking in the mess-room, but we think it cannot take place without finding it out. The prisoners sometimes get stopped in passing in file from the wheels to the cells, and we cannot always see an entire class, in which sometimes there are as many as 36. When these stoppages take place, the men may converse. We all prefer being wardsmen, on account of the advantages: there is less labour and more allowance. Reports are sometimes made for wilfully destroying blankets and bedding. We feel severely the restrictions on seeing friends and receiving letters. We never visit cells of other prisoners after locking up. We are locked into our cells as the others are. The prison is damp in damp weather. There are several instances of boys talking in chapel, and sometimes the men talk there. The prisoners look out for opportunities for talking, and constant watching is necessary to prevent it. The wardsmen only carry linen to the laundry: they only go to the lobby door. Prisoners can see the women going from the infirmary to chapel, and also when they come from the laundry to muster. We have known instances of a prisoner secreting his meal, and complaining that he had not weight. We report verbally. Prisoners suffer and catch cold from exposure in coming off the wheels warm, and then sitting; and also in mustering for the doctor in the open yards. The Silent System is difficult to be enforced, from the natural disposition of men to talk."

"It is our business to watch the men on the wheels, and in going backward and forward from their cells to the treadmill, mess-room, chapel, and in the airing-yards. The prisoners watch every opportunity of conversing, both on the wheels and elsewhere. It requires constant vigilance to prevent them. They can, no doubt, speak softly, or in whispers, when their faces are direct to the wheel, without its being observed. The wheels are very high. The boys sometimes dispute at the washing-sheds, but they are too closely watched to talk much: it happens but seldom. Prisoners in their cells can hear the watchman walking in the passages. We prefer being monitors for the advantages. It is very common for the men to feign sickness in order to deceive the doctor. They often try to impose on the monitors as to the amount of work."

S. A., Prisoner.

"I have been here six weeks, for felony. I should like to be a wardsman on account of having to perform less labour. I think the prison is damp; the water stands on the floors, and runs down the walls, in damp weather. The women are sometimes punished for talking on the wheels and in the passages. I would readily embrace all opportunities of talking if I could avoid punishment;—every one would;—it is natural, particularly when a great many of us are together. At the tread-wheels there is a great draft from under the wheels: the women often get into a great perspiration, and, before the turn for returning to the wheels, they become chilled, owing perhaps to their sitting with their feet on the stone floor, as well as owing to the drafts; but they also muster in the open yard for the surgeon. Sometimes in going to, and returning from, the laundry we see the men when they stand near the wall to be inspected by the surgeon. Punishments among the women sometimes take place for deceiving the doctor, in order to avoid the tread-wheel, and for being saucy and refractory to the governor and turnkeys."

M. A. D.

"I am a misdemeanant, and have been here about four months. I sleep alone. I have slept with another. We can talk softly in the cells without being heard. We don't speak in the presence of the officers unless we think we can escape detection. It is natural to talk;—we talk in the laundry;—the work cannot be carried on without it;—we require instruction there. Young women talk most when in the cells. We can distinctly hear the female turnkey walking in the passages before 9 at night: we can hear her footsteps, and the rustling of her clothes, and can hear her trimming the lamp. We know when she is near and when she is away: we can see her shadow through the ventilator and under the door. Sometimes we see the men, viz., when we are in the laundry. Instead of going through the regular passage to the chapel, we go through the tread-mill, in ward 3; and sometimes we accidentally see the men there when they have not gone into the chapel, but are preparing to do so, and then the women keep back for the men to go first. No turnkey walks in our passages at night after 9 o'clock."

M. M., Prisoner.

"I have been here about one month for unlawfully pawning. The women sometimes mix together in the passages in coming from their cells, and then conversation occasionally takes place in whispers, if they think they can avoid detection. I used to sleep with my sister, and talk to her at night,—it was natural. At the tread-wheels prisoners do talk when they can, and watch opportunities; they can talk there frequently without being perceived. I should like to be a wardswoman. The cells are damp; water runs off the walls in wet weather."

E. J., Prisoner.

"I have been here about six weeks, for felony. I sleep in the infirmary with two other prisoners. The prisoners in the infirmary are generally alone throughout the day; the matron and female turnkey come in perhaps two or three times, and stay sometimes about a quarter of an hour each time. Conversation takes place there, although not allowed: no punishments in my time have been inflicted for it. Sometimes I am in the laundry, and we do, and must necessarily, talk there. When I slept in a cell I could hear the female turnkey walking in the passages until after nine. I could hear her footsteps, and see her shadow. I would prefer being a wardswoman. Sometimes we see the male prisoners in going from the infirmary to the laundry; and occasionally when we go from the laundry to the chapel, in passing the wards 4 and 5, whilst the men muster there for the doctor. We pass through ward 3, where the mill is, in going to chapel; but I never saw the male prisoners there, they had always previously gone into chapel."

M. A. E.

"I have been here four months, for felony. I am in the infirmary, where the women talk freely together: they talk about new comers, and fresh prisoners, and relate what they did out of prison. There are frequent punishments of the women for refusing to work at the tread-wheel; sometimes I see the men, in passing from the infirmary to get my dinner; which, for the infirmary women, is often placed upon the brick wall in front of the wards. I have seen the men whilst mustering for the doctor."

L. W.

"I am a rogue and vagabond, and have been here about six weeks. I can distinctly here the female turnkey walk the passages until after nine. I am employed in the laundry, where we must necessarily talk about our work: sometimes we are left alone an hour together, whilst the matron is at dinner. Male prisoners bring the mens' linen to the laundry to be washed, but are always accompanied by a turnkey, and cannot talk to the women. We can see the male prisoners sometimes, when they muster for the doctor, which they do twice a-week."

"I am the matron. My duty is to look after the washing and mending men's clothes and bedding. I attend to the sick in the infirmary, and receive the female prisoners, and see that they are washed and searched, and that their clothes are fumigated, and I visit the cells. I do not lock and unlock; that is done by the turnkeys. The governor never visits the females, unless accompanied by me or a female turnkey. I always attend the female prisoners when they receive visitors. I seldom find money or prohibited articles on them. Prisoners are pretty quiet at night: they are generally left by themselves in the infirmary. Male prisoners of each class bring their linen to the laundry door to be washed, and the matron or turnkey always takes it in; but the women can see the men: this happens twice a-week, on Mondays and Thursdays; and women can see the men in going from the infirmary to chapel. The sick women sometimes take their dinners from the parapet wall in front of the wards; sometimes a female turnkey carries their dinners to the infirmaries."

Surgeon, Chaplain.

The evidence of the surgeon and chaplain is embodied under the heads "Health," and "Religious and Moral Instruction."

Mr. Wm. Keene, Governor.

John Selwood,
James Whiten,
George Keene,
William Sheppard,
James Douglas,
(Turnkeys.)

Every part of this report may be considered as evidence. The whole of the facts contained in it (except those portions which come under the heads "Religious and Moral Instruction," and "Health," which were the evidence of the chaplain and surgeon; and except the evidence of the prisoners,) were first read over to the governor alone; and afterwards to the five turnkeys, whose names are written in the margin, in the presence of each other, the governor being also present; when they were corrected from their own observations. They all admitted their correctness so far as they individually knew; and one or other of them corroborated every particular.

On one of the tread-wheels, felons and misdemeanants are placed together in each compartment; nine is the average number of prisoners who work together in one compartment; they are then very close together, and the wheels being very high above the floor, the prisoners talk, and it is impossible effectually to prevent it: they talk frequently in whispers and with their fingers. There is a communication among them throughout the prison: it is always known when a prisoner is about to be discharged, if not by all the prisoners, at least among those who work together on one wheel. They frequently dispute with the turnkeys as to the quantity of labour performed, the regularity of the revolutions of the wheel, &c.; and the old prisoners attempt to impose on new comers, and they often quarrel about the work among themselves; and in this way, and in various other modes, the silence is broken. They are not allowed to look off the wheel, but they look about without much hesitation. The punishment for that offence is the loss of the turn for rest, or being sent through the wheel again. Whenever we are obliged to have assistant turnkeys, the prisoners, aware of their inexperience, will alter their mode of work in order to deceive them. During the late influenza, we were obliged to have an extra turnkey, two of the regular turnkeys having been laid up. The prisoners come off the wheels warm, and frequently sit with their feet on the stone floor: there are boards on which they may place their feet, but they prefer to place the boards on the forms on which they sit, the forms being made of iron. We think the prisoners are much exposed in winter, in coming off the wheels warm and going to their meals, chapel, and cells, and into the open yards to muster for the surgeon. They muster in the yards twice a-week, all the classes remaining about a quarter of an hour. They sometimes shiver and appear chilly in the chapel. Great deception and falsehoods are practised by them to avoid the labour, and to obtain admission to the infirmary.

Although only three prisoners wash at a time in the mornings before they go to work, they nevertheless make many excuses for talking, by saying they only asked for the soap, the towel, the comb, &c. &c. They often break the silence in the mess-room, by pretending they have not their proper allowance: they sometimes talk in going through the passages, and in the double cells; they can hear the watchman going through the corridors; they listen in order to hear his footsteps; they relate their past adventures, and boast of them; and, no doubt, greatly corrupt each other: and the boys, when there are several in one cell, talk obscenely, and use a cant language which the turnkeys cannot understand. There are frequent reports of bad language by the boys. Sometimes four boys sleep in one bed,—two at the head and two at the foot. Conversation at night in the double cells generally takes place before nine o'clock at night, and between five and seven o'clock in the mornings.

The prisoners, both boys and men, rob each other of their clothes; which they also exchange with, and sell to, each other. These offences are frequent.

There can be no doubt that the communication among prisoners is such as to produce great contamination.

Punishment by stoppage of food is not sufficient to enforce the discipline; with the boys, at least, it is not, their allowance being equal to that of the men. To compel silence, punishments of the boys must be frequent; in fact, although they are frequently punished, yet they continually offend. Solitary confinement on bread and water should be much resorted to.

Three turnkeys out of the five were ill, and laid up during the late influenza; two were sick at the same time. One assistant only could be procured. One of the turnkeys was in consequence obliged to do double duty at the wheels, and was excused night duty from midnight until six in the morning; during which period there was no night-watch for two successive nights.

There is no doubt that the silent system requires constant watching, and imposes a very irksome duty on the sub-officers. They have complained of having to watch at night in addition to their day-duty; and they have had an increase of wages in consequence of it. The monitors would not report their fellow prisoners if they could well avoid it. The turnkeys must closely watch the monitors.

The prisoners can converse from cell to cell through the open ventilators. There is no supervision of the female wards after nine at night. Prisoners from all classes are placed together during the potatoe seasons to work in the gardens, both on the inside and outside of the boundary wall, attended, however, by a turnkey or assistant officer. The cleaners of both sexes might converse with those prisoners, and also with the lobby-man through the windows which look into the garden from the corridors. Cleaners of different classes might converse together through the doors separating the wards; and the male cleaners with the female cleaners through the doors separating wards 5 and 6, where they might also see and be seen by each other, and where, in fact, conversations have taken place between prisoners of the opposite sexes. Prisoners of different classes can see and be seen by each other, and converse together through the front windows of many of their cells (which are not screened), and where they have often been discovered, before the adoption of the Silent System, in conversation. Male and female patients in the infirmaries can converse together from their windows and from their airing-yards, and have been known to do so both by letters and by words; and they might also communicate with prisoners of all classes, who occasionally work in the garden. They are under no supervision by night, and by day an officer is with them only occasionally. Different classes are mixed together in the receiving room, on the tread-wheel, at the school, in the wards (the women being sometimes placed together in the same cell, and in the same bed), in the gardens, in the mess-rooms, at the roller, in the infirmaries, and in the wash-house and laundry. There are no wards or classes for untried prisoners of either sex, who are therefore mixed with all classes of convicted prisoners; and male juvenile offenders whether tried or untried, are mixed with men who have been convicted of every variety of crime.

APPENDIX (A).

List of Prisoners in Custody at the House of Correction at Guildford, in the County of Surrey, on Wednesday the 25th January, 1837.

APPENDIX (B.)

Extracts from the Governor's Journal at the House of Correction, Guildford, relative to Escapes, &c.

Nov. 2nd, 1831.

Two prisoners (one named W. K., whose term of imprisonment would have expired on the 19th instant, the other named W. L., whose term of imprisonment would have expired on the 20th instant) escaped this afternoon from a field adjoining the road leading to the house of correction, where they were employed with others in picking stones for the purpose of completing the repairs of the road then being made. They had been absent only a few minutes when they were missed, and immediate search was made after them in the neighbourhood, but without success.

Nov. 5th, 1831.

Reported to the visiting magistrates the escape of the two prisoners, W. K. and W. L., on the 2nd instant, and received directions to give notice thereof at the Police Office at Union Hall.

June 26th, 1833.

About a quarter before seven o'clock A.M. J. C., a prisoner, who was employed in removing some planks into the prison for the use of the prisoners employed in whitewashing the cell buildings, eluded the observation of the turnkey and escaped; search was immediately made for him, but without success. About 10 o'clock A.M. I was informed that a man was lying in a garden near the prison; and, upon my going there I found the man to be C., who appeared to be greatly injured, having, in his endeavour to escape, fallen from the prison garden over the rock into the garden of Mrs. Upperton. I removed C. into the infirmary of the prison, and Mr. Taylor immediately attended him.

Sept. 23rd, 1833.

I. M. escaped from the outer garden, where he was employed with other prisoners in emptying the dung-hole for privy soil.

Sept. 24th, 1833.

Reported to J. Mangles, Esq., M.P., a visiting magistrate, that I. M. had escaped.

Sept. 25th, 1833.

I. M., who escaped from the outer garden the day before yesterday, surrendered himself at the prison gate this afternoon.

Dec. 10th, 1833.

J. R., who was employed in carrying out corn (which had been ground at the mill) to a cart at the gates, ran away, and was not overtaken by Selwood the turnkey, until he had got into the town of Guildford. He was brought back immediately, and confined in a dark cell.

Dec. 14th, 1833.

The Rev. G. W. Onslow and H. Halsey, Esq., visited the prison, and directed that J. R. be continued in the dark cell for one week.

May 12th, 1835.

C. P., who was engaged in carrying out corn which had been ground at the mill, to a cart at the front gate, ran away, and was not overtaken until he had got into the back part of the town. He was brought back immediately, and confined in a dark cell.

October 26th, 1836.

I was this morning informed that a letter containing money had been sent to the Castle public-house in this town, directed to W. S., a prisoner, for the purpose of being conveyed into the prison unknown to me. I applied for the same at the Castle, and discovered that Netherclift, one of the turnkeys, had previously obtained and opened it; and that it contained a post-office order for 10*s*., which he attempted to get cashed for the prisoner, but did not succeed. I have therefore thought it my duty to discharge him as a turnkey, and have reported the same to the Right Honourable Lord King, one of the visiting magistrates.

REPORT of the INSPECTOR of PRISONS for the NORTHERN and EASTERN DISTRICT.

II.
NORTHERN AND EASTERN DISTRICT.

MY LORD, London, February 1, 1837.

I have the honour to present your Lordship with my Reports of Prisons, inspected in the Northern and Eastern Districts of England during the past year, comprising those in the counties of Chester, Derby, Lancaster, Westmoreland, Cumberland, and the Northern and Western Ridings of Yorkshire.

The observations that I now proceed to make to your Lordship, although somewhat discursive, are yet of a practical nature, and based upon the facts and evidence detailed in the course of this inquiry.

Debtors' Prisons.

Macclesfield, p. 35.
Rothwell, p. 140.
Halifax, p. 142.
Knaresborough, p. 147.
Richmond, p. 157.

Under the head of Debtors' Prisons I have to solicit your Lordship's attention to the state of those under peculiar jurisdictions named in the margin. The Uniformity of Process Act has so greatly reduced the number of committals to these places, as to leave them only a burthen to the proprietors, and subservient to the purposes of fraud, or the gratification of vindictive feelings As places of confinement they are, almost without exception, in the most imperfect condition, and continual inconvenience is experienced from the absence of proper authority or means, for enforcing even decency of behaviour among their few remaining inmates. Considerable doubt is entertained as to whether they come within the provisions of the Gaol Acts. Any arrangement for their total abolition would be a public benefit.

Vide Report 1835, Ely, Wisbech.
Special Report of Cheshire and Lancashire Courts of Requests, p. 50.
Sheffield, p. 144.
Ecclesall, p. 146.
Bradford, p. 141.
Halifax, p. 142.

The treatment of prisoners, sent from Courts for the recovery of small debts, appears to require some notice. In some prisons they are herded with the criminals; in others they are living in the most unrestrained license; in others again these debtors are brought from distances of 50 and 60 miles, to gaol, at the cost of the creditor, there to be supported at the expense of the county. In only two instances have I found their situation adequately provided for, by the erection of prisons, within the local jurisdiction. I venture to recommend, to your Lordship, that in all future Acts of the Legislature, for establishing such Courts, where execution is to be had against the person, that if the district be not within a reasonable distance of the county, or other gaol, the providing of a suitable prison should be made imperative.

Vide York City Gaol, p. 116.
Rothwell, p. 140.
Ecclesall, p. 146.
Et passim, under the head of Debtors.

A more thorough acquaintance with the state of those prisons, where persons are confined under civil process, has firmly convinced me of the debasing and demoralizing tendency of this kind of imprisonment. Much has been said, and great pains taken, to remedy the contaminating intercourse between criminals; but I question, from what has come under my observation, whether evil as extensively injurious to society is not propagated on the debtors' side of the prison. The debtor, however respectable he has been in former life, and may be on coming in, gradually loses his self-esteem. From want of occupation he descends to the association of those around him, and participates, by degrees, in their low, and, but too frequently, intemperate enjoyments. He becomes indifferent to those forms of society of which, perhaps, he was once the zealous observer, careless in person, dress, language, and habits; the change made in a short time is but too remarkable. Very few, I fear, are discharged, after a long sojourn, without having their sensibility seared, or their principles weakened, by daily contact with misery and vice. It is an unpleasing duty to recommend an increase of restriction upon prisoners, under their circumstances, but the behaviour of debtors is generally the reverse of satisfactory.

Prisoners confined for contempts.

York, p. 111.

In concluding this portion of the subject, I entreat your Lordship's notice to the cases of prisoners under contempt of the Common Law Courts for not executing instruments which it has been decided they ought to do. One individual, quite insane upon the single subject, has been confined upwards of twenty years (since dead) in Lancaster Castle; others, under similar circumstances, are lying in other prisons, and instances of this kind are frequently occurring. These persons are mostly either weak in intellect, or in the lowest state of ignorance. The expense to the counties, for their maintenance, during a long course of years, is very burthensome, and their presence, when thus domesticated in a prison, by no means favourable to discipline. With the greatest deference I venture to suggest the extension, to the Common Law Courts, of the admirable practice of the Court of Chancery, which is, where a party refuses to execute a conveyance, decided to be formal and necessary, and which is only impeded by a contumacious resistance, the Court can, by a recent Act of the Legislature, purge the contempt, and put the parties into possession, by directing its officer to execute the instrument in the defendant's name.

Criminals.—Want of uniformity of Discipline.

If the want of uniformity, in the discipline of prisons for criminals, was heretofore a well-grounded complaint, this admitted evil has been immeasurably increased since the recommendation of the Lords' Committee: I have found many prisons governed according to the Gaol Acts as yet unrepealed; in others, the imperfect barrier of classification has been broken down, and all classes brought together at work, and meals, under the restraint of silence; in some, separation day and night has been attempted; in one, they are experimenting on two systems; while others are under a mixed constitution, partaking of all. In one prison a sentence of hard labour consigns a convict to the tread-wheel; in another, to weaving, tailoring, shoemaking, gardening, picking oakum, or wool. In a third the keeper exercises his own discretion as to sending prisoners so sentenced, either to labour at the wheel, or to employment at a trade. This variable state of penal discipline materially affects the equal distribution of justice, and is the occasion of the injurious comparisons, of the advantages of one prison over another, so frequently overheard among prisoners. The magistrates and others, intrusted with the supervision, are embarrassed in their endeavours to assimilate the recommendations of the Legislature with its positive enactments. Without referring to untried prisoners, whose situation may afford some reason for variety in their treatment, I consider it most important that corrective discipline should be precisely defined, in all its branches, with a view to its uniformity, and the removal of the anomalies that now exist in its application.

Vide Wakefield, pp. 127, 133.

System of Silence.

As regards the penal systems of silence and separation, the first is easy of execution, even with the present machinery of our establishments, and produces no observable bad effect upon the physical or mental powers; as a deterring agent, I hold a strong opinion of its efficacy, and this result of punishment is of far more value to a community than even the reformation of offenders, which can only be called into action after the commission of crime, while the former has been previously busy as its preventive. But this discipline to be effective should be vigorously administered, by paid servants, and without the intervention of wardsmen; and with the provision of a separate sleeping cell for each prisoner. In the absence of the latter regulation I fear it is only attempting that by day which may be undone at night. The mode in which it is now enforced, by bringing the untried and tried together at work, and meals, thus breaking down a great moral and legal distinction, appears to me highly objectionable, and still more so the practice of placing convicted prisoners, as wardsmen, over those committed for trial. In expressing myself favourably of the silent discipline, I beg to be understood by your Lordship as not investing it with any extravagant pretensions, or holding out expectations of extraordinary results. That silence can be so rigidly commanded as to make the interchange of a word or sign impracticable, is what I have nowhere found to be the case, nor do I believe it of any consequence that it should be so. Upon this point I consider it sufficient that the once uninterrupted stream of vicious communication is decisively arrested, and by a harmless yet irksome intervention.

Vide pp. 18, 21, 154.

Vide pp. 75, 131, 132.

Separate System.
Vide pp. 15, 25, 29, 48, 67, 71, 72, 101, 123, 128, 130, 133, 152, 153.

I do not suppose that the most zealous admirers of the Pennsylvanian Penitentiary system have ever considered it as generally applicable to a country enjoying the great and peculiar advantages of penal settlements. The warden of one of those establishments considers two years' imprisonment or more to be requisite before the work of reformation can begin, which is about the period when the longest terms expire in this country. If reformation, as it is somewhere defined, requires sufficient intellectual power to prefer a distant and moral good to a present physical enjoyment, I can easily conceive the process to be long and precarious in the dispositions prevailing among criminals. Opinion appears still to be much divided, in the United States, between the two systems. Putting other objections aside, the discipline, professed in the Eastern Penitentiary, does not appear to have been maintained with that temper and inviolability, since its first establishment, as to justify the decision of its complete efficacy.

Vide Appendix (A.) p. 5.

Appendix (B.) p. 7.

Separate Confinement.

Separate confinement, by day and night, having been recommended for the untried in this country, I consider it my duty to advise that great caution should be observed in its application, particularly to those prisoners who have to wait the long periods between the assizes for a gaol delivery. The minimum size of a cell, to be made use of for this purpose, should be legally and precisely laid down; warmth, exercise, manual employment, and instruction, should be provided. The visits of officers and friends should be frequent.

Our prisons having been constructed on the opposite principle to separation, the generality of them are without the means of safely carrying such a regulation into effect: for example, among others, the county gaols of York and Lancaster, built at an enormous expense, the former but now completed, could not, I should think, be possibly adjusted to this purpose. Under such circumstances, I recommend that prisoners, before trial, should be divided into classes, of first offences and re-committals, a practice which I am informed has been adopted in the French prisons.

Vide York Castle, p. 107.

Many collateral aids, to the formation of an effective system of prison discipline, are yet wanting in our prisons; I summarily state those I consider to be the most prominent, referring for others to the annexed reports.

A general code of rules and regulations for the government of prisons.

The power to magistrates of rewarding under certain restrictions meritorious officers of prisons, by a superannuation allowance, in cases of long service or infirmity.

The appointment and discharge of all the officers of prisons, to be vested in the magistrates; the keeper to have the power of suspension.

The discontinuance of all ornamental gardens within the walls of prisons.

Vide Kirkdale, p. 65.

The abolition of every sort of temporal advantage or payment to a convicted prisoner.

No prisoner, under any pretext, to be employed in any work for the officers of a prison.

Vide p. 73.

Hard labour to be defined, and every convict, so sentenced, to be put to it, except declared unfit by the surgeon.

The payments of bills for prison expenses to be, as far as possible, made by the County Treasurer, without the intervention of the Keeper.

A uniform set of books in every prison, for the journals of the officers, and the registry and description of prisoners.

A uniform set of educational books in every prison.

Diet.

Vide pp. 24, 40, 42, 152.

A uniform diet in all prisons is greatly to be desired, but its adoption appears so beset with difficulties as to leave little hope of its accomplishment. Much outcry has been made against the quantity of food in some cases allowed to prisoners, and injurious comparisons have been made with other establishments between which there is little analogy. All prisoners labour more or less under depression. This depression is predisposing to disease, which though often inert is frequently called into action by a spare and unvarying diet, humidity of site, extreme cold, deficiency in ventilation, or protracted close confinement. In numerous instances scurvy, diarrhœa, and a long train of debilitating disorders, are only kept under by a liberal and nutritious aliment. This marks the necessity of great care in selecting situations and plans for the erection of prisons.

Whipping.

Vide pp. 27, 65, 71, 122.

I have frequently attended the infliction of corporal punishment, now almost exclusively confined to boys; in some cases it was done with a severity equal to that which I have witnessed in the army; in others, it was so trifling as to be more likely to harden, than to terrify, the culprit. I think it would be better to define the number of lashes, as in the sentences of courts-martial, and that the surgeon should, invariably, be present, and exercise his discretion as to the extent of the infliction. The instrument should also be the same in all prisons.

Prisons resorted to by Tramps and Prostitutes for Medical aid.

Vide p. 123.

One of the most serious and increasing obstacles to good discipline, is the common practice of tramps and prostitutes, when infected with foul diseases, (not admitted into the public infirmaries,) committing some slight offence for the purpose of obtaining medical treatment in prisons. Their committals are generally for one or two months to hard labour, which they seldom or never undergo, oftentimes passing the entire of the term in hospital; and many of the females are scarcely discharged a month, ere they return again for surgical care. Such prisoners are more disorderly in behaviour, more pernicious in example, and more difficult to control, than any other class. I suggest to your Lordship, with much deference, that if the sentences of diseased vagrants, to hard labour, were to date from their convalescence, some check might be afforded to the evil.

Prisoners' Property taken from them on apprehension.

Vide pp. 15, 134, 155.

Complaints are unceasingly made by prisoners, on being received into prison, particularly those of the vagrant class, of having been deprived of their money and bundles, when first apprehended, and applications in some few cases have been made, from the keepers to the constables, and restitution obtained. I recommend that all monies and other articles found upon a prisoner previous to committal, should be inserted in a column for that purpose in the commitment by the clerk of the magistrates, and delivered over to the keeper of the gaol, the constable taking his receipt for the same.

Moral and Religious Instruction.

Vide pp. 25, 32, 43, 53, 56, 62, 72, 111, 126, 152.

I regret to be compelled to remark, that the most lamentable deficiencies, almost everywhere exist, in that most important branch of prison discipline, moral and religious instruction. I cannot too strongly recommend the laying down of one uniform and well-defined method, not confined to the wholly illiterate, but extended to every prisoner within the walls; I hold that all are either brought there by ignorance, neglect, or wilful disobedience of the laws of morals or religion, and require either instruction or improvement. In many prisons, the man, or boy, who is unable to read, is taught to do so, and having learnt, is sent away to the tread-wheel to forget what he has acquired. Many, who could read, and even write, I have found in the most deplorable state of ignorance upon religious subjects; in some instances replying, when questioned, that they were able to read but not to understand; yet such men are but too often altogether excluded from the prison school. I conceive instruction, in this situation, should be made instrumental only to the inculcating of moral and religious knowledge; not one unoccupied moment should be allowed to escape without being devoted to its beneficial influence; when prisoners are assembled, in the intervals of meals and work, or in the occupation of noiseless labour, selected portions of the Scripture might be read aloud with great advantage.

Form of Prayer.

Vide Northallerton, p. 152.

The extreme length of the Liturgy prevents the use of it, in prisons, without mutilation. I think a form of morning and evening prayer, with a selection of psalmody, to be used by authority in all these establishments, might be adopted, and would be attended with beneficial effects.

Transportation.

Vide pp. 18, 21, 43, 48, 53, 62, 72, 152.

Appendix (C.), p. 7.

From very minute inquiries made upon the subject, I have every reason to believe that an increasing dread of transportation is extending itself among the criminal population, and that this salutary feeling would be greatly promoted by circulating authentic information of the situation of convicts, and the regulations enforced among them in the penal settlements. I annex a copy of a letter lately received from a convict, and furnished me by his family, as interesting in itself, and one well calculated for distribution in our prisons. I consider the confirmation of this impression as most important, and that it would much contribute to its permanency, if, as the severity of penal discipline is increased at home, there should be a corresponding augmentation of its rigour in the Colonies.

I merely offer as a crude suggestion to your Lordship upon this difficult subject. whether, in the event of its being deemed politic to reduce the number of convicts sent abroad for the comparatively small term of seven years, they might not be beneficially employed either in the Isle of Portland or at Dartmoor, in the laborious work of quarrying and preparing freestone or granite. The depôt at Dartmoor has, I am aware, been objected to, as an unfit place for the confinement of youths, on account of the prevailing humidity of the atmosphere, but the very reverse of sedentary habits which constant toil would engender, might, I submit with deference, be corrective of the deleterious influence anticipated.

Juvenile Delinquency.

Vide Special Report, p. 85.

Vide p. 72, 103.

Vide p. 89.

Appendix (D.), p. 7.

I most respectfully invite your Lordship's attention to the Special Report upon the subject of Juvenile Delinquents at Liverpool. In addition to what is there stated, I am quite of opinion that, in many cases where boys are now committed to a prison, the whip of the parish-beadle, or the dark cell of the Union Workhouse, or village lock-up, would have a much more salutary effect. The imagination of youth generally pictures a prison to itself, as dark and noisome, with bread and water as the only aliment; the dissipation of this idea, by the reality of a gaol interior, is most ruinous. I annex a Return of Boys committed to the New Bailey, at Salford, for robbing Gardens, between the 1st of July and the 20th of August, 1836; seventeen of the twenty-four were not known to have been ever in a prison before.

Government of Prisons.

Vide Derby.

The generality of prisons that I have visited, although greatly improved, are still very far from being perfect in management or discipline. Their government, it appears to me, should be made as analogous as possible to that of a battalion; with the same graduated responsibility among the officers, the same inflexible regularity extended even to trivialities, the same promptitude in punishments, the same nice divisions of time. Under such rule, leagued with a rigid and uniform system of corrective discipline, unswervingly applied, prisons may at least be relieved from the reproach of tending more to the extension than the repression of crime. They will provide all the possible means of teaching the ignorant, intimidating the audacious, fixing the wavering, and reclaiming the less abandoned; but I am fearful that crime is too much dependant upon uncertain and uncontrollable circumstances, to be permanently and extensively influenced by any sytem of prison discipline. I do not put forth this opinion to discourage zeal and labour for the amelioration of these establishments, but to caution the too sanguine from forming expectations which may not be realized.

I have appended to the Reports upon the Prisons at Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, and Sheffield, Returns of the number of Persons who have passed through the several Police Lock-ups during certain Periods. They furnish very accurate information of the state of public morals in these important towns, which, I regret to observe, is far from satisfactory. My inquiries as to the cause of the increase of petty crimes and disorderlies have invariably been answered, "From the want of proper regulations for the beer-shops."

Vide pp. 79, 85, 139, 147.

In conclusion, I have to acquaint your Lordship that, in the further prosecution of these duties, I have again experienced the most courteous attention and co-operation of the magistracy. Many of the deficiencies noted in the annexed Reports have been already supplied, several of the suggestions there hazarded already acted upon; and others, involving doubt, or expenditure, are still under deliberate consideration.

I have the honour to be,
My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,
WM. JOHN WILLIAMS,
Inspector of Prisons.

The Right Honourable Lord John Russell,

APPENDIX (A.)

Extract from the Tenth Report of the Boston Prison Discipline Society, May 26th, 1835.

EASTERN PENITENTIARY.

Appendix (A.)

ANOTHER year's experience has been had of the system of solitary confinement, day and night, with labour in this institution. It does not appear from the Annual Report of the Inspectors, how much the convicts earned by their labour, nor how much was expended in their support.

The prison, unlike other institutions of a similar kind in the United States, publishes nothing concerning its pecuniary affairs in its Annual Reports. This does not satisfy the mind that wishes to know the result of solitary labour.

It has been often said, and generally believed, that all communication between the convicts is rendered physically impossible in this prison, by the construction. If persons, investigating this subject for the public benefit, would be a little more thorough in their investigations, they would find this is not true. It has also been said, and much stress has been laid upon it by the friends of the solitary system, day and night, as practised in the Eastern Penitentiary, that they had no recommitments; this was true, when the prison had been in operation but a very few years, but now it is not true. The Warden states in his last Report, that three have been recommitted to that penitentiary. It has also been urged that it is a very mild system, not requiring any severe system of punishment, and yet it appears by a Report of the Joint Committee of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, that gentle means will not always subdue the passions of the convicts, which must be done before the work of reformation is commenced; that the means used to effect this object in the Eastern Penitentiary are not stripes, but diminished food, the dark cell, deprivation of work, and the use of the strait jacket, and the gag.

The gag, it appears elsewhere in this Report, is an instrument of iron to be placed in the mouth for the purpose of setting the jaws open, so that the person subject to the punishment cannot make a noise with his mouth. Whether this is a milder application than stripes is a matter concerning which, there is some room for diversity of opinion. Be this as it may, it appears from the same Report, that an iron gag was placed on the convict Maccumsey, whose conduct on that, and many former occasions, had been very outrageous. In a short time after it was put on, it was discovered he was becoming insensible, and it was taken off, but every effort to revive him proved ineffectual, and he died.

The Committee had evidence that the death was not, probably, occasioned by the gag; also, that it was not an unusual punishment, and they acquitted the persons implicated from all criminal intention on their part in reference to it. They are of opinion that there was great propriety on the part of the warden, in discontinuing the use of this punishment, which he did from the time of the death of Maccumsey. They say it had been frequently resorted to before in the case of other prisoners, and in the case of Maccumsey himself. It appears, therefore, to us, that punishments have been resorted to in the Eastern Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, which were more objectionable than stripes, to subdue the refractory convicts, notwithstanding all that has been said about the mildness of the system.

It has also been said, that the Pennsylvanian system is not injurious to health. We have always felt distrustful of the system, on the ground, because we have not known, from the nature of man, how he would be, confined day and night in solitude, for a term of years, to so narrow a space; and how his cell, made his workshop, his bedroom, his dining-hall, his water-closet, his chapel, &c., without getting the air and himself into a condition unfavourable to health. However, if facts should prove it possible, after a fair experiment, facts are stubborn things and opinions will yield to them. How are the facts? The proportion of deaths in the several penitentiaries for a term of years has been as follows:

In the prison at Charleston, Massachusetts, for eleven years last past, 1 in 45.
———— Auburn, New York, ten years last past, 1 in 56.
———— Wethersfield, Connecticut, seven years last past, 1 in 76.
———— New Penitentiary Prison, Philadelphia, for five years last past, 1 in 33.

Showing that the last is not healthy, compared with prisons on the Auburn plan. Besides, the experiment has been made in Philadelphia, with a much smaller number of prisoners than there have been in the prisons with which the comparison has been made. How will it be when the number of prisoners is increased to several hundreds, and the permanent water-closets and vaults, and iron pipes conducting filthy fluids for a longer course of time, have had their full effect upon this important question of health. We apprehend still greater difference in the progress of the experiment, and this apprehension is not at all abated by the statement of the physician in the sixth and last Report of the Eastern Penitentiary. He says, "The number of cases of disease occurring this year has been greater in proportion to the number of prisoners than in any former year since the opening of the penitentiary. The increase of disease was confined chiefly to the months of July and August, during which months, in consequence probably of the extreme heat of the weather, a large proportion of febrile cases occurred." We have received a verbal statement concerning the sickness in the Eastern Penitentiary during the last summer, from one of the directors, a most devoted friend to the system, which excites our apprehensions for the future much more than the language of the physician. We, therefore, believe the system to be unhealthy in time past, and likely to be still more so in time to come.

Of the nineteen discharged last year, one was suffering under mental aberration on his discharge, whose health is stated to have been good on his admission. The physician, however, remarks that there were no circumstances which led the physician to believe that his mental disease was produced by causes peculiar to the mode of confinement.

Of the twenty discharged in the preceding year, according to the fourth Report of the Inspectors and the Physician, two were insane, and one idiotic, on their admission. And of the four that died in that year, the death of one was caused by mania; but he is said to have been predisposed to insanity; and another committed suicide, who is said to have been insane upon admission.

These matters of record do not look very favourable to the system in regard to its effects upon the mind. There is too much about insanity, in proportion to the numbers of prisoners.

There is still another objection to the Philadelphia system; there is no chapel, sabbath school, or place of morning and evening prayer. These things are about half the whole, in our view, of a good system of prison discipline.

As a poor substitute for a chapel in the New Penitentiary in Philadelphia, the preacher takes his station in the hall between the cells, and preaches to about thirty convicts at once, through the feed-hole doors. He can neither see them, nor they him.

The system would require about seven different services for 210 convicts, or fourteen services for 420; the consequence will be, that either a number of chaplains must be employed, or one chaplain must soon destroy himself by attempting to do the whole, or a part of the convicts must be omitted in the services of the Sabbath.

In regard to a sabbath-school, no attempt has been made to form one, because there is no place for it; and there is the same difficulty in having morning and evening prayers as in having preaching for all the convicts.

On the whole, we are becoming more rather than less distrustful of the Philadelphia system of prison discipline.

APPENDIX (B.)

Extracts from the Report of the Joint Committee of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relative to the Eastern Penitentiary at Philadelphia. Read in Senate, March 26th, 1835.

1. The specification in the case of Plumly, represents him as having been discharged, shortly after he was ducked, "incurably insane," leaving as an inference that his insanity was occasioned by the use of the cold bath. It was well ascertained that he was insane at the time he was committed, and that no change in this respect took place while he was in the Penitentiary.

Was this punishment of this unfortunate prisoner cruel and unusual?—It was certainly proved that many buckets of water had been poured upon him on a very cold day; and your Committee cannot avoid the conclusion, that, under the circumstances, it was indiscreet; but the transaction was deprived of all evidence of cruelty, which always implies intention, by the evidence which was given. It was clearly proved that the use of the cold shower-bath is frequently employed for insane patients, not only as curative, but disciplinary means, in the best institutions for this unfortunate class of men in the city and vicinity of Philadelphia. One instance of a similar application of cold water was remarkable; it occurred in the Insane Hospital belonging to the Society of Friends, so distinguished for their enlightened humanity. —p. 13.

2. It was in proof that an iron gag had been placed on the convict Maccumsey, whose conduct on that, and on many former occasions, had been very outrageous. In a short time after it was put on, it was discovered that he was becoming insensible, and it was taken off; but every effort to revive him proved ineffectual, and he died.—p. 13.

It must be remembered, that although our penitentiary system has for one of its objects the reformation of the convict, that its unfortunate inmates are men of idle habits, vicious propensities, and depraved passions. Requiring as it does that these habits should be changed, these propensities checked, and passions subdued, before the work of reformation can be commenced, it is plain that the first step is to produce obedience. This with many convicts, if not all, is a matter of much difficulty, requiring great firmness and discretion. Gentle means, although not without effect, are seldom sufficient of themselves to produce this object; yet it must be produced, or nothing can be done. Hence it becomes necessary to adopt some punishment beyond that which is inflicted under the sentence of the convict, and which is essential to secure his quiet subjection to that sentence. To allow him a refractory disregard of the proper order of the institution would be not only of great prejudice to himself, but would seriously affect those in whom a more proper frame of mind had been produced.—p. 12.

It does appear that convicts had been frequently employed in cooking, in working, in breaking coal, in making fires, occasionally as waiters, and in work connected with the building and construction of cells, out of their cells; and some convicts are now employed as blacksmiths, which requires that they should be constantly, while at work, associated each with an individual, not a convict, who aids in the work. For some time before the investigation commenced by your Committee, all convicts had been returned to their cells, and they ceased to be employed as described, except only such as are engaged as blacksmiths, in the manner stated—one of whom, owing to his great skill as a workman, is still engaged in work connected with the building of new cells, which, as your Committee understood, sometimes required that he should be employed out of his cell.—p. 18.

Dear Malonglo Plains, Sidney, Sept. 8th, 1835.

Father and mother, this is the third I have written to you and received no answer; recollect when you write postage pay at the general post office, as many persons writes to their friends and get no answers, in consequence of not paying postage. Send me word how all my brothers and sisters is, hoping they are doing well for themselves, as unfortunately I am the prodigal child out of the number. My request is that you will pray for my welfare in hope that I will have no trouble in this unfortunate country, for every evil stands offered to a poor Convict to lead him into temptation and misery. I once had my freedom of a free subject. Oh! if I could but recall some of my past moments, I really consider that I should be one of the happiest of the human race, but instead of that, I am bound to slavery for the natural period of my life. My pen cannot express the feelings of indignation that follows a poor wretch where the lash and whip is continually over his head. Not one moment can I call my own, but in torture and mourning from Monday morning until Saturday night, even from the rising of the sun until the going down of the same; at one thing or another; my heart is partly broken, considering the long captivity that I am to serve without any remuneration for the time; all that I expect of pardon is what they call a ticket of leave after the expiration of eight long years after my arrival in this country, and if I have the blessing to get that kind of liberty, it is a mere chance whether I will or not, it lies all to my master. By sign, what they generally term a form, it lyes to his pleasure or not to sign it, therefore I consider I am a prisoner for life. Let my brother take some caution respecting these few lines, that I would sooner have died an untimely end at home, than be a slave for ever. Oh if I could be a short sentenced man I could wait for some hopes for my return to my native place; is there any thing can be done for me, by your addressing a petition to His Majesty to commute my sentence to any number of figures, I should be a happy man if it was for 14 years or more. O recollect it is my hard sentence LIFE; to be in chains and slavery. Do what you can, and if you fail it will not be your fault to look after your poor unfortunate son James. Many is the persons that is at home following the same career of life as I did, but let them hear from me that if I was a prince on this earthly world I would resign all for the sake of liberty—Liberty is the sweetest of all that grows in the Garden of Eden; after our first parents being banished from that happy place, what followed after but misery and temptation of Satan? So it is with a poor deploring Convict fit for no society of the human race. My pen cannot express the feelings of indignation I hold to that wretched name; let all that is going on the way as I did beware of the hard laws that is in this colony, for if any one receives this awful sentence of Life to this colony, is to be on the public roads at work; most disgraceful to human nature, I mention after that, there is plenty of temptation to bring the unhappy wretch to a penal settlement, where they are worked in Irons for their Life. All that I request is, that none of my brothers and sisters may fall into any snare that may decoy them to come as a convict. Let this be a warning to you all, so I conclude and finish, giving my compliments to my well wishers and enquiring friends.

No more at present,

from your unfortunate Son

REPORTS ON SEPARATE PRISONS.

DERBYSHIRE.

DERBY.—County Gaol.

II.
Northern and Eastern District.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Derby.
County Gaol.

This prison is in an open and airy situation, in the outskirts of the town of Derby. It is enclosed with a brick wall, 25 feet in height, with fifteen courses of loose bricks on the top, and defended by flanking towers, loopholed for musketry. The exterior front and gate presents a happy appropriation of the Grecian Doric, with columns and entablature. The lodges contain a hall, lodgings for two turnkeys, county store-room, three receiving cells, keeper's office, two drop rooms, and reservoirs for water in the roof. The interior of the prison consists of a central building (the keeper's house and chapel) with seven radiating wings, of two stories each, connected therewith by iron bridges. The portion assigned to the females consists of two small buildings apart from the others. The infirmary is detached, and comprises a day-room, surgery, bath-house, on the basement, airing yard, and four rooms on the upper floor. A detached building, of circular shape, is exclusively appropriated for refractory prisoners, and those sentenced to solitary confinement. It contains two floors, with three cells in each. Those in the basement are dark: they are of a fan-like shape, occupying two-thirds of the circle, which is completed by the staircase. The lower cells have the appearance of being damp. Communication can be carried on between prisoners, in the adjoining cells, with great facility.

Dimensions of the sleeping cells, 6 feet by 8 feet, 12 feet high.
The solitary cells, basement, 11 feet by 7 feet, 12 feet high.
Ditto, upper floor, 11 feet by 7 feet, 9 feet high.

The airing yards are not paved. The keeper's house contains, in the basement, three kitchens, store-room, cellarage; first floor, four rooms; second floor, eight rooms. The chapel, above, is quadrangular; the divisions for the prisoners are 17 in number, with open iron-work in front. There is some garden-ground and stabling without the prison, the property of the county, in the possession of the keeper; likewise three small houses, at angular points, and short distances from the boundary wall, are tenanted by the officers of the prison, and conducing materially to its security. The water-closets, the drainage, and indeed all the fittings in this prison, are perfect, and the general arrangement of the buildings most convenient, with the single exception of the one set apart for solitary confinement.

Dietary.—Breakfast, one quart of gruel, made from two ounces of oatmeal, and a portion of bread; dinner, one pound of boiled potatoes, and a portion of bread; supper, one quart of gruel, made from two ounces of oatmeal, and a portion of bread. One and a half pound of good wheaten bread, and one quarter of an ounce of salt per day. Prisoners, confined for a longer period than three calendar months, receive, in addition to their daily allowance, two ounces of onions per day. When onions cannot be procured a red herring is substituted every second day. The surgeon states, "That he considers the diet sufficient in general cases. The agricultural labourer in Derbyshire has cheese and a little bacon, but butchers' meat seldom forms a portion of his food. The diet is not sufficient in scrofulous cases, and when he observes prisoners to be of that habit he increases it."

The following is a copy of a letter sent to the visiting Justices by the surgeon, in consequence of the prisoners having petitioned the Justices to increase their allowance of food, and his opinion being on that point required:—

Gentlemen,—The prisoners have not of late experienced any unusual inconvenience from the present gaol allowance.

From numerous experiments which I made several years since, I ascertained that upon the present diet most of the men lose weight, some considerably, others but slightly; growing youths increase in weight.

Whenever prisoners are confined for a considerable length of time, if they appear feeble, I allow them occasionally half a pound of meat three times per week, or daily. This is continued as long as circumstances require. In other cases I allow the addition of a pint of milk daily to their ordinary food. In all cases, whether the prisoners have been confined for a long or a short time, if the health appears to suffer materially, I immediately increase the diet.

Therefore, gentlemen, if it is your wish that the prisoners should have a diet rather less stimulating and nutritious than that they procure when at large, and such as is calculated to cause them to wish to keep out of prison, and you desire that it shall make them feel that a gaol diet is not a desirable one, then I think the present need not be altered.

Taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, I am of opinion it is not necessary to add to, or to alter the present allowance.

I am, Gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

I have not had any reason to alter my opinion since writing the above letter.

Derby.
County Gaol.

Cases and Number of Deaths in the Prison for the County of Derby during the last five Years, from 1831 to 1836.

From September 29th, 1831, to September 29th, 1832, no death took place in the prison.

Samuel Green, aged 42, came into prison on the 8th of April, 1832. He began to have disease of the chest, indicating that he would probably have pulmonary consumption. That disease became established, and he gradually became worse till the 21st of November, 1832, when he died. He had at all times whilst in prison appeared very feeble. There is no reason to suppose his disease was brought on by being confined in gaol, nor is there any reason to suppose his death was hastened by his confinement.

William Willatt, aged 39 years, came into prison October 29th, 1833, charged with having murdered his maid servant. He had attempted to cut his own throat previous to being committed. The wound was not an important one. When he arrived in gaol, he appeared to be in a state of horror and despair, in which condition he continued till his death, which took place on the 18th of November, 1833. This prisoner refused to speak and to take food the greater part of the time he was in prison; he was, however, forced to take a sufficient quantity of food daily to have supported a man in health, and not labouring under great mental depression. There is no doubt that this man died from the powerful influence of remorse and fear upon his system.

George Mosley, aged 55 years, came into prison 14th day of April, 1835, having extensive disease of the stomach and bowels, which had existed for a length of time previous to his committal. The disease was chronic inflammation, and such as allowed scarcely any hope for his recovery. He continued to become gradually worse till the 10th of May, 1835, when he died. The confinement in prison did not appear to have hastened his death.

——— Surgeon.

Dec. 3rd, 1836.

Number of Sick, see Table.

Clothing.—Felons and misdemeanents: males—a suit of grey frieze, clogs, body linen. Females—blue frieze, bedgown, petticoat, body linen, clogs. The untried are not clothed, except in cases of urgent necessity.

Bedding.—Bedstocks of iron, straw paillasse, two blankets, sheets, and rug. The whole of the prisoners supplied with sheets.

Heat.—The sleeping cells are not warmed. The untried have, since July, been confined to their respective cells, except when taking exercise, and at school. The cold has been found so injurious as to render it necessary to relax this discipline, and permit them to sit by the fires in the day-rooms. The surgeon says the cases of rheumatism, among the men, have been very considerable, and that he made the following entries in his journal relating thereto.

" September 1st. As the system is now adopted, throughout the prison, of keeping prisoners in their own cells instead of allowing them to remain in the day-rooms, I beg to submit to the consideration of the justices the propriety of there being some plan adopted by which the wards, with the exception of the debtors', can be warmed in cold weather, which will be found necessary to secure the health of the prisoners.

" October 8th. The men being now obliged to sit in their cells, during the day-time, become very cold, from their seats being iron; I would therefore suggest the propriety of a piece of wood, the size of a chair-bottom, being fixed to each bedstead for the prisoner to sit upon.

" November 30th. Prisoners who are not at the wheel, or at stone-breaking, should sit in rooms having fires, as the weather is very cold and damp. I make this entry, as rheumatism is prevailing over the county, and very much in the prison."

I understand that measures are in progress for warming the cells, one of the several absolute requisites before adopting a system of separate, or solitary confinement.

Cleanliness.—The prison, and persons of the prisoners, clean.

Health.—The surgeon attends the prison, and sees every prisoner daily. Is present at the infliction of corporal punishments. Mild inflammatory diseases are those most prevalent. There have been no deaths the last year. The keeper provides the extra food ordered by the surgeon for the sick, at the rate of one shilling a-day for four meals. The surgeon makes an entry of his visits in a book. His journal contains the name of the patient, the complaint, and remarks.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services, with sermon, on Sundays, and in the intervals, or after the services, attends the school-room, where the prisoners, in classes, are catechised. A portion of the Scriptures is selected by him, and read by the prisoners, who, when the chapter is got through, are questioned as to their conception of its meaning, and the necessary explanations afforded them, if required. On other days prayers are read at nine o'clock in the morning, and the chaplain is engaged with the classes of convicted prisoners until eleven. From this hour until twelve he is engaged with the untried prisoners, reading to those who are unable themselves, and hearing those read who can do so. He sees the sick, and prisoners sentenced to solitary confinement; the latter attend divine service, but those in the refractory cells, for prison offences, do not. On Saturdays he attends the females, reads to them, and explains a portion of the Scriptures. A lady also visits them, once a-week, and the matron instructs them in reading daily. The debtors attend chapel very regularly. He does not administer the sacrament, not finding the prisoners in a state of mind to satisfy him of the propriety of doing so. All the prisoners, with the above exception, attend chapel, and all the officers but one. There is no schoolmaster. The chaplain conducts the school, and is assisted by the keeper's son, who is quite capable. The chaplain says, " I consider the work of the schoolmaster to be of very little efficiency without the personal superintendence of the chaplain. A very great desire is manifested for instruction; some of the boys thank me on going out. A day or two since a man met me in the street, and said, 'Thank you, sir, for teaching me to read.' They occasionally wish me to purchase Testaments from money in their own possession, which I do at a reduced rate. The great deficiency among them is in religious knowledge. There is a boy here now, a sharp one, who can read, but yet cannot repeat the Lord's Prayer. They, generally, are in possession of the mechanical part, that of reading." All the tracts and books are selected by the chaplain before distribution; they are procured from the Society for promoting Christian knowledge. The chaplain's journal contains entries of the date of his visits, and of the instruction afforded, and progress made by the prisoners. I visited the school, and examined the boys. The following is a transcript of my notes :—

——, aged 18. Never at school. 6 months in prison. Reads perfectly, and appears to understand what he reads.

——, aged 12. Attended church. Was at Mr. Strutt's mill school for two months. Has no mother. His father a nailmaker. Does not know such a person as our Saviour. Not aware of the existence of a God. His father told him there was one sometimes.

——, aged 14. Went to Wesleyan Sunday school. Learnt all his reading there. Sometimes used to say the Lord's Prayer morning and evening. Reads well. Has made considerable progress since in the prison.

Classification.—The classification prescribed by law is adhered to.

Labour.—The male prisoners are at hard labour upon the wheel, or employed in picking wool; the females at making, mending, and washing the prisoners' clothes. The yard, with the treadwheel, also contains the cookhouse, and the carpenter's shop for making clogs, all very conveniently brought under the surveillance of the officer at the mill.

Prisoners are occasionally employed in the garden within the walls, and in tailoring and clogging. Differing in this respect from most other prisons, the produce of the ground within the walls, generally potatoes, is, with propriety, applied to the use of the prisoners. The untried prisoners are employed in picking wool in their cells, 3 lbs. each daily. They receive no portion of their earnings, which are ½*d.* per lb. The tenth of the Prison Rules says, " The untried prisoners who cannot maintain themselves and will not work, shall have only three pints of oatmeal gruel, made as before described, and 1½ lbs. of wheaten bread of seconds flour and ½ an ounce of salt equally divided for breakfast, dinner, and supper. And if such prisoner shall have worked in the morning, and had his breakfast and dinner, but shall refuse to work in the afternoon without sufficient cause, he shall have no supper. The wardsmen and cooks receive an extra allowance of ¼ lb. of meat daily."

Offences and Punishments.—Breaches of discipline are punished by stoppage of food, and confinement in the refractory cells. (Number of punishments, see Table.)

Scourge.—Handle of box-wood, 14 inches long; nine lashes, of common whip-cord, 24 inches long, 8 knots in each.

Whipping is inflicted by one of the turnkeys, who receives 2*s.* 6*d.* for each punishment. The surgeon attends. The number of lashes never exceeds 40, nor is the skin ever cut.

Irons.—Weight 10½ lbs., used in conveying convicts to the hulks.

Visits and Letters.—Convicted prisoners are visited once in six months; untried, once a-week, by written order from a magistrate. When a prisoner is permitted to see a visiter, he steps from his yard into a close wooden shed or sentry-box placed on wheels, in which he is drawn to the lodge, and from a window guarded with strong iron wire-work, he communicates with the visiter, who stands within the lodge. When the visit is concluded, the prisoner is wheeled back to his ward in the same manner.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The provisions are not contracted for, but paid according to the market-price of each article. All bills under the sum of 5*l.* are accounted as petty charges in the keeper's Disbursement-book, and paid by him. These are examined, and allowed, by the visiting justices. A cash-credit of 50*l.* is allowed the keeper to defray these items. The bills amounting to more than 5*l.* go to the sessions before payment, where they are examined and approved of by a Committee of Finance, the Chairman affixes his signature, the Clerk of the Peace draws the orders upon the Treasurer, who pays. A copious abstract of the prison expenditure is drawn up annually in the following convenient form, and distributed among the magistrates of the county.

A most praiseworthy minuteness and exactitude prevails in all matters of account in this prison. Each item when wanted, is only procurable by a written order, and a receipt is invariably given by the person to whom it is delivered. Brooms, brushes, and similar utensils are only replaced on the old ones being produced and returned into store, as practised in the Barrack-department of the Ordnance—a regulation well worthy of being followed in every public establishment.

Discipline.—This prison is a very well-regulated establishment; the duties of the under officers are precisely defined, and their execution rigorously required. The mode of carrying on the discipline is assimilated, as nearly as possible, to that of a regiment. The several officers report the execution of their respective duties, daily, in writing. Morning and evening states of the sick, those absent from labour or chapel, are delivered to the keeper, with all the precision and formality of a garrison. Specimens of these Reports are subjoined.

NORTHERN AND EASTERN DISTRICT.
Reports on Separate Prisons.
Derby.
County Gaol.

I do hereby Certify, that I have examined the whole of the Prisoners under my charge, and find them shaved, feet washed, and their clothing in thorough repair.

———, Turnkey in charge of Section C. 3, and Section E. 1.

I further Certify, that I have seen the whole of the water-closets and drains, in the different Wards under my charge, thoroughly cleansed.

———, Turnkey, in charge.

⁂ The former Certificate is given in to the Governor on the evenings of Wednesday and Saturday, and the latter on Saturday only.

Another valuable measure is the establishment of an Order Book, similar to those made use of in the army, in which the keeper inserts his directions and instructions for the guidance of the officers, and notices any neglects of duty that have come under his observation. These orders are read over to the officers monthly by one of their body. I insert the following extracts from them:—

County Gaol, Derby, Feb. 5, 1835.

The Governor is by no means satisfied, first with the care with which prisoners are searched on their admission into prison; money and other articles have been found in their possession, which proves a degree of carelessness in that respect that he highly disapproves of. The Governor requests particular attention to this duty in future.

It appearing that the prisoners do not take proper care of their stocks, as several have lost them without deeming the circumstance worthy of notice, the Governor orders that every evening when the prisoners fall in before locking, the turnkeys will see that every prisoner has his stock on, and salt-bag at his button-hole, and any who is without one, and has not previously informed the turnkey of the loss, will be considered to have wilfully lost or destroyed it.

August 31, 1836.

The Governor orders that in future, he holds ———— (he being permanently stationed at the lodge) responsible that none of the officers leave the prison after dinner, for their tea, until the prisoners are locked up for the night, from this day.

The Governor disapproves very much of the officers of the prison being so much out; and not that alone, but being accosted by turnkey ——— in the wheel-yard, that he had not got his tea, and had been in the yard from one o'clock. Now the Governor desires, from this time, that no turnkey leave the wheel-yard from one to six o'clock in the evening, at the time the prisoners come off the wheel, and as for the tea-time, it is out of the question; the duty of the prison must be attended to, and shall not be neglected on any account, and if the Governor does not find this order to meet his expectations, he will issue a different one, which will include all the meal hours of the officers.

The Governor has frequently observed the gate of the chapel, on the misdemeanor's side of the prison, open; he therefore hopes he may not have occasion to notice this neglect again on the part of any officer.

That the turnkeys may become thoroughly acquainted with the general discipline and prescribed routine of the prison, the keeper every week makes them exchange their posts, thus the duty performed by an officer one week is allotted to another the next. At locking up or unlocking, at labour on the wheel, at employment picking wool, going to or from the chapel, equal order prevails. There can be no doubt that modern construction, with its improved arrangement, is greatly contributable to the perfection of prison discipline, but alone it is of little avail, unless assisted, as is the case here, by able and zealous functionaries. The divisions of labour being but few is another advantage, and I remark, with much satisfaction, that the almost general practice of placing convicted prisoners as wardsmen over the untried, does not prevail here. I annex a return of the prisoners employed as wardsmen and cooks:—

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Derby.
County Gaol.

The treatment of the untried being dissimilar to the generality of prisons I have visited, from the circumstance of their being confined to their sleeping cells during the day, I detail the particulars.

In winter they are unlocked at seven o'clock, come down and fall in to muster, and are told off one at a time to work; they then march in single files round the yards for three-quarters of an hour, under the inspection of a wardsman and turnkey. They then receive 3lbs. of cotton wool to pick, which they take to their cells; they then return for their breakfasts, which they eat in their cells: after which they come down into the yard and are searched, to see that they have no bread secreted, to take to chapel to exchange with each other. After chapel they return to their cells and remain picking wool until five minutes before twelve, when they are unlocked and are marched down for their dinners, which they take one by one, and return in the same order; they are again unlocked after dinner, and march round the yards in single file, for three-quarters of an hour, return to their cells and are engaged in picking wool until supper-time, when they are unlocked and are marched down for their suppers, and return with them to their cells. After supper they again come down for muster, and, if there is sufficient daylight, to walking exercise for twenty minutes. They receive no portion of their earnings for picking wool. They are visited daily by the keeper, surgeon, chaplain, and turnkeys. In consequence of the inclemency of the weather this regulation, which has only been carried into effect for a few months, has been temporarily dispensed with at the instance of the surgeon. (See Heat.) The dimensions of the sleeping cells are six feet by eight feet, and twelve feet high—too contracted for any prolonged separate confinement without such considerable exercise as is here afforded. The serious offences now dealt with at sessions have, however, considerably lessened the number of prisoners formerly left for the assizes, and consequently diminished the length of detention before trial. The circumstance of its having been found necessary to permit the untried prisoners to re-occupy the day rooms in damp or cold weather, and thus to break through an established rule, is an additional proof of the necessity of precaution in adopting measures until satisfied that the means are sufficient for their ends. I think the ministry of the chaplain might be advantageously extended beyond a weekly visit to the females, and likewise that the appointment of a schoolmaster, whose attention might be specially directed to the untried prisoners, would be attended with much benefit. I cannot close this report without again expressing my approbation of the general management and discipline of this prison.

It is stated by the officers that the prisoners complain of the constables taking money and other things from them; that application has at times been made from the gaol for articles thus detained. The constables bring prisoners in a very careless manner: two from Belper, in charge of a constable, lately escaped from him close to the gate of the gaol; another was in a public-house with two prisoners, and one got away.

DERBY—Borough Gaol.

Derbyshire.

Derby Borough Gaol.

A contract has been entered into between the Town Council and the Magistrates of the county, for the lodgment and maintenance of the borough prisoners in the county gaol. This agreement was intended to comprise the prisoners confined for debt in the borough gaol, with a view to the discontinuance of the latter establishment; but legal difficulties have interfered to prevent this convenient arrangement taking effect, it being maintained that the provisions of the 5th of George IV., relating to such contracts, do not extend to that class of prisoners. The number of debtors confined here during the last four years has been as follows:—

| | 1833. | 1834. | 1835. | 1836. |

| Court of Requests . . . | 45 | 43 | 48 | 49 |

The officers on the late establishment have all been discharged, with the exception of the keeper, who remains at a reduced salary of 50*l.* per annum.

CHESHIRE.

CHESTER—County Gaol.

Cheshire.

County Gaol.

This structure forms a portion of the general design for county courts, barracks, armoury, &c. erected by the late Mr. Harrison, the accomplished architect to whom Cheshire is so much indebted for its embellishment. As originally constructed it consisted of two separate buildings, one forming three sides of a square, containing apartments for debtors; the other, of a semicircular shape, for criminal prisoners with five divisions and the same number of yards, fronting the keeper's house and admitting of complete inspection therefrom. The number of separate cells are 56, independently of twelve detached ones, used for condemned prisoners, and also appropriated to refractory ones. The contents of the keeper's house are—cellarage, chapel, kitchen, dining-room, six chambers and an office. The chapel is divided into five compartments, corresponding with the number of classes. A considerable addition has been made to the prison by the enclosure of an extensive area, and the erection of a new building, containing thirty-six sleeping cells for males, 16 cells for females, two dark cells, male and female infirmaries, and matron's apartments, comprising a sitting-room, bed-room and kitchen.

Dimensions of Cells.

Old Building.—Sleeping cells 8ft. 8in. by 6ft. 3in.; 8ft. 6in. high; division walls between the cells 1ft.

New Building.—Sleeping cells 10ft. by 8ft.; 10ft high; division walls between the cells 14in.

The condemned, or solitary cells, twelve in number, consist of an inner and outer cell.

Inner cells 7ft. 9½in. by 6ft. 7in., 10ft. high.
Outer cells 7ft. 9½in. by 8ft. 4in., ditto.

The condemned cells are heated by hot air, the cells in the new building by hot water. The cells in the old prison are not supplied with heat. The exterior wall of the prison is of brick, cased with stone. The material principally used in the erection is free-stone; the doors of the cells are iron; the roofs of the new cells are arched; the old ones are flat, roofed with Yorkshire paving. The water closets and drains are perfect: they are cleansed twice a-week by the contents of the reservoir being discharged through them. Upon visiting the prison late at night, the new cells, which are constructed in double ranges with galleries in the centre, seemed to be very deficient in ventilation. There is no provision made for the sufficient admission of air nor light. The old cells are free from this disadvantage.

Diet.—Breakfast, 1 quart of oatmeal gruel, 1 lb. of bread.
Dinner, 1½ lb. of potatoes.
Supper, 1 quart of oatmeal gruel.

On Sundays and Wednesdays, each prisoner has an additional allowance of one quart of broth, and half a pound of meat without bone. Two ounces of salt to each, weekly. The untried are permitted to purchase bacon, bread, or milk. The persons who sell it come into the prison and dispose of it in the presence of a turnkey. A turnkey purchases the bacon for them at a shop in the city.

Clothing.—Felons; a suit of parti-coloured frieze of green and crimson, cap, and clogs. Untried; a suit of grey frieze. Linen changed once a-week, and all prisoners are clothed in the prison dress upon committal.

Bedding.—Iron bedstead, palliasse, bolster, three blankets, and rug.

Fuel.—Some of the cells heated with warm air; others are not.

Cleanliness.—The prison, and persons of the prisoners, clean.

Health.—The surgeon attends three times a-week, and oftener, if required. He does not inspect the prisoners upon committal before they are classed, nor is there any general inspection of them made by him. He is not present at corporal punishments. Indigestion is the most prevalent ailment, with occasional inflammatory fevers. The habit of the prisoners is generally to constipation, owing to their sedentary lives, and the diet. The diet is amply sufficient. He has watched the effect of solitary confinement, it generally causes constipated bowels. Is of opinion that if the periods were prolonged, it would be necessary to increase the vegetable portion of the diet. The silent system is not observed in the infirmaries. The hospital servants are prisoners. Upon visiting the infirmaries, I found in that for the males a slight want of ventilation; it is provided with fire-places and water-closets. The female infirmary is at the top of the building, and has no fire-place, which, in the case of lying-in women, is attended with great inconvenience. The surgeon states scorbutic complaints to be most prevalent in the county. He says, "I think that eight out of ten families are afflicted with it, and latterly a disease termed 'the Derbyshire neck' has become prevalent." The surgeon's journal records the entries of his attendances, and orders for alterations of diet, and is exhibited at sessions. He likewise keeps another book, arranged under the following heads:—Name—when prescribed for—when sent into the hospital—diet—extras—decrease—result.—Number of sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services on Sundays, prayers and lecture on Wednesdays and Fridays, and administers the sacrament once a quarter. He visits the hospital in cases of serious illness. The prisoners are supplied with Bibles and tracts, but he has restricted the general distribution in consequence of their being mutilated. A Roman Catholic priest attends the prisoners of that persuasion. There is a schoolmaster, and regular system of instruction pursued with the prisoners. The chaplain states, "I do not consider the schoolmaster under my immediate charge. I did not recommend the schoolmaster, but most highly approve of him. The progress made by the prisoners does not indicate that they set much value upon learning. I do not frequently visit the school, only at intervals, by which I am better able to judge of the progress. I went a few days ago, and was much struck by the little advance made by those under tuition. The remark of the schoolmaster was that 'Those who had been long in the school read no better than those who had just come in.' The attendance at the school is compulsory. Every prisoner attends school in turn. I do not think the teaching to write any advantage. No prisoner goes out sufficiently perfect in the moral and religious instruction to be obtained by reading, as to induce me to think he might be put to writing. Very much less progress is made by the prisoners than by voluntary scholars out of doors. I do not habitually visit prisoners when in the punishment cells. I have visited those who have been sentenced to solitary confinement by the Court. I have not observed any depression of spirits, and the principal conversation has been asking me to interfere and obtain their pardon. A boy, whose conduct in the prison was exceedingly bad, was placed by the keeper in solitary confinement. He hung himself, and life was nearly extinct when he was discovered. The confinement was relaxed, and I saw him afterwards in my private room. He appeared silent, patient, passive, and not at all impressed with the idea of his having attempted a great crime. He was kept in the hospital some time, and was again visited by me once or twice. He completely accomplished his purpose of not submitting to the solitary confinement, and behaved pretty well afterwards. There is a prisoner under sentence of death for murder. His state of mind is unsatisfactory. He still denies his crime, although convicted upon the clearest evidence. He is not confined alone. He attends the school, with the other prisoners, five hours a-day. He could not read when he came in, but has learnt a little. I have the highest opinion of the silent system; it is a most valuable preventive agent to contamination. It has made the prisoners doubly desirous of, and attentive to their religious books. I can perceive no possible good from such severe mental punishment as solitary confinement. Punishment has no effect, nine times out of ten, but to harden. I do not think punishment, as abstractedly taken, is salutary to the human mind. I find the feeling that transportation is a much severer punishment than was heretofore the case, is fast spreading among the criminal population. The number of the recipients of the sacrament is very few, except the debtors, nor have I found many in a proper state of mind." The matron reads prayers every morning to the females. The chaplain does not attend regularly every week to see them. The chaplain selected the prayers made use of by the matron. The female prisoners are instructed in reading, about an hour in each day, by the matron or her assistant. The chaplain keeps no private character book. His journal, laid before the Quarter Sessions, contains entries of his attendances and duties performed.

Schoolmaster.—Five minutes before ten the bell rings. At this signal the prisoners of all classes assemble in the school-room. "I call the roll, and each answers to his name. I then read a portion of the Scriptures, 10 or 12 verses, afterwards a short prayer from a publication by the Religious Tract Society, entitled 'Family Prayers for every morning and evening during a month.' The men who are employed in the hospital, garden, and about the prison, go out first. The prisoners are divided into three classes; one remains in the school-room. I give a Bible to each. I select a chapter; I name it, and any man who cannot find it out stands up. I then find the chapter for him. I read the first verse myself, and they follow me alternately; and after I think they have read sufficient, I make a motion of my hand for them to stop. I gather the books in, and give them the Church Catechism, hear them once over, then point to the door. They go out, and another class comes in, and the same course is pursued during the whole day, concluding with prayer in the afternoon. In the intervals of attending school, the prisoners are employed picking cotton. I question the classes upon the subject they are reading, asking them the meaning of words. They are very ignorant. The word 'Bishop' having occurred while reading St. Paul's Epistle, I asked a prisoner, if he knew the meaning of it. He seemed angry, and replied, 'Yes, to be sure I do; what they put before girls to keep them from dirtying themselves,' a pinafore being so termed in this county. There are some of the prisoners who, I believe, attend from a good motive, others not. One boy now here is perfectly incorrigible, and him I cannot teach. Every prisoner is at the school one hour and fifty minutes daily. Many prisoners who have come in have learnt to read, and have returned me their grateful thanks upon their discharge. They often express a desire to write. One of the Liverpool boys, under sentence of transportation, only 9 years of age, has signified this wish repeatedly. He is a very bad boy, but quick. I gave him a psalm to learn by heart, which he did on a single Sunday. The Roman Catholic clergyman came to visit the school, and stopped there some time. He had been seeing a transport of that persuasion, and the prisoner told me that the priest had charged him to pay every attention to the instruction given by me." The schoolmaster keeps a book, well arranged, under the following heads: number—name—age—tried or untried—religion—state of education—when received in the school—when and how disposed of—description—conduct—progress—remarks. He also enters in a book the number of prisoners and how disposed of, every morning and evening, with the names and the cause of the prisoners' absences from the school.

Classification.—All the prisoners are brought together at meals, at school, and at labour. I cannot but think that the untried should, in all cases, be separated from the convicted. This moral distinction is entirely neglected in this prison, and the men, before trial, are subjected to nearly the same discipline, and, what is worse, the presence of those under the sentence of the law. No doubt contamination is prevented by the rigid silence that is enforced, but this does not appear to meet the difficulty of associating men in such different situations.

Labour.—The prisoners, both tried and untried, are employed in picking cotton, for which the manufacturers allow ½*d.* a pound. The labour of the prisoners is credited to the country at the nominal price of 1*s.* a-day, as shown in the accompanying statement of the occupation and employments of the prisoners on the day of inspection :—

No earnings are paid to the employed transports, and only a sufficient sum to prisoners, on their discharge, to carry them to their homes; but upon a certificate signed by some one or more respectable persons, and dated one month from their discharge, signifying that he or she is either at work or living in a respectable manner, the balance is paid over to them. The task-master states—"I am a practical weaver; I have taught many of the agricultural labourers who never saw a loom before. Any man, who has common intelligence and activity, will learn in six months; others have been twelve, and not able to learn then. The age makes a considerable difference; if they are above forty, they are very awkward. An agricultural labourer is much more difficult to teach than the inhabitant of a town; his hand, being used to hard labour, is less fitted for work at the loom. My opinion is, that no man could teach more than two or three prisoners in separate cells, without their spoiling a great deal of material."

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences are quarrelling and talking; punished by solitary confinement.

Scourge.—Handle of ash, 19½ inches long; nine lashes of small whip-cord, 23 inches long, with five single knots in each.

Irons.—Used in the conveyance of convicts,

The executioner formerly inflicted corporal punishments, but none have taken place since his death. The number of lashes never exceed three dozen, and the extent and severity are determined by the magistrates who hear the case. The number of punishments for the breach of prison rules, for the year previous to the silent system, and during the first year of its enforcement, are as follows:—

Visits and Letters.—Each prisoner is permitted to receive one visiter a month. Letters are inspected by the keeper; those going out are written in the school-room, in the presence of the schoolmaster.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The tradesmen's bills are sent into the prison quarterly, and, after being classed, and a schedule of their contents annexed by the keeper, and audited by the visiting magistrates, they are laid before the Finance Committee at Quarter Sessions, and when signed as approved, are paid by the County Treasurer. The oatmeal, bread, and meat are supplied by contract.

General Discipline.—The silent system was introduced here in April, 1835. It has been attended with a decidedly beneficial result, as regards the conduct and bearing of the prisoners. It was carried into effect with little or no difficulty; some trifling attempts at insubordination being promptly checked. The following evidence of the turnkey in charge of the convicted prisoners, exhibits the mode in which the duty is carried on:—" I have charge of the convicted prisoners; unlock them at six. I inspect their bedding and the cells, before they leave them, to ascertain that the bedding is in order and the cells swept and clean. At the word 'March' they all come down, in single files, and wash themselves at the pump, four at a time. They are then marched to work. At eight, the whole of the prisoners are marched to the general eating-room, for breakfast. Every man takes his place opposite his number, there being boxes affixed to the wall for each, in which their allowance of bread and provisions are kept. The wardsman touches each man on the shoulder, as his name is called over by me. The prisoners then sit down. They then rise, and each man holds his provisions over his head, so that I can see they all have their portions. As soon as that is done I say grace, they all, after responding 'Amen!' sit down and eat their breakfasts. No man is allowed to quit his seat but the wardsman, who collects the spoons and other utensils. A quarter of an hour before the period allotted for return to labour I give the word 'Rise,' each man stands up, and at the word 'March,' walks out in single file for walking exercise round the yard. They are locked up at 6 o'clock in summer. This is the daily routine." They are never left without the presence of an officer during the day. The system is not so rigidly adhered to as it regards the females. The matron states, " We keep the females to silence as much as possible. When it was first enforced they cried a great deal. It has had a very good effect. They used frequently to sing and quarrel. This is entirely put a stop to. They pay much greater attention to their books. I am sure the women dread transportation more now than formerly; they are possessed with the idea that the punishment is more severe. I have found it necessary, at times, from the depression I have witnessed in some women, to watch them carefully; it would not have been safe to have left them alone. We do not hear of any reforms; when they go out they get to their old associates, and then they forget everything."

All the officers bear testimony to the improved conduct of the prisoners since the introduction of the silent system. The keeper says, " I cannot, as yet, give a decided opinion of its effects upon the criminal population; sufficient time has not elapsed to admit of my doing so, and labour has been so much in demand that any diminution in crime might have reasonably been attributed to that circumstance. I am decidedly of opinion that the fear of the punishment of transportation has a great and increasing effect. Several thieves, who have been convicted once, cautiously abstain from offences which render them liable to that penalty. I have known them, with this view, to become utterers of base coin, which is not a transportable offence." He considers solitary confinement in the refractory cells to have been generally beneficial. One of the turnkeys, formerly in the army, states, " That the flogging is generally inflicted upon boys; it is not severe. That he has seen several soldiers sentenced to solitary confinement; that they care little for it, and the boys still less."

I do not admit the silent system to have been carried out to its full extent in this prison. Sufficient care is not taken, by frequent visits of a night, to prevent intercourse between the prisoners in their cells. Upon going round at night, on one of the cells being opened the smell of tobacco was strongly perceptible. On the prisoners' clothing and bedding being searched, tobacco, flint, steel, tinder and box, and one shilling, were found secreted. The mode in which these articles were introduced was satisfactorily traced the next morning, and the probability of a recurrence prevented. A practice detrimental to the uniformity of prison discipline in this county arises from the circumstance, that from there not being a sufficient number of untried prisoners to perform the necessary duties of the prison, they are brought from the House of Correction, at Knutsford, for this purpose. The labour at one is the treadmill, at the other the light one of picking wool. It would be much better if the Castle were restricted to the reception of prisoners before trial; then the very objectionable amalgamation and neglect of distinction which now exists between the untried and convicted would cease.

The keeper states, " That the prisoners are occasionally brought by the constables in a state of intoxication."

Debtors.—The average number of debtors is 32, inclusive of prisoners from the Courts of Requests. Those who maintain themselves are allowed to purchase two pints of beer daily, one at 12, the second at 4 o'clock. Those who have the county allowance of 1 lb. of bread and 1½ lb. of potatoes, are not permitted to purchase beer. The weekly allowance of coal is 3½ cwt. for 12 prisoners. The turnkey who has the charge of them states, " There are two debtors who board others at a certain rate. There is no doubt, although we do everything in our power to prevent it, that they sell beer to visiters. I have seen them, occasionally, intoxicated. Two or three have been so lately. They still, although it is forbidden, demand garnish. It is only a few shillings to expend in knives, peat, &c. If there is any overplus, they divide it. One of the debtors, named ——, who has been here five years, keeps a shop, and sells bread, cheese, tobacco, &c. The debtors have been detected in introducing tobacco to the criminals. When they go for their potatoes they have an opportunity of seeing a man employed by the taskmaster, and upon one occasion they gave a small quantity to him. I conceive the debtors to be a much inferior sort to what they were." Debtors requiring bedding from the keeper pay for its use at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly. The debtors' apartments in the prison were very clean, a circumstance which I have so seldom found to be the case as to make it worthy of record.

Keeper and Constable of Chester Castle.—The keeper holds this office by patent from the Crown, and is bound in the penalty of 3000*l.*, to resign it when required. He was appointed in 1822, having held the situation of keeper at the County House of Correction for three years.

He has coals, candles, and soap. When first appointed, his engagement with the magistrates was to receive one guinea a-head for conducting transports to the hulks, independently of the expenses incurred. This arrangement was done away with, and he receives 50*l.* per annum, and a mileage of 6*d.* for each transport, the county being at the expense of a van. This contract includes all prisoners sentenced to transportation in the county; and they are brought from the sessions at Knutsford to the Castle, by which the distance to the hulks is increased, and an additional sum of 14*s.* a-head paid to the keeper for their removal.

The keeper, according to agreement with the magistrates, appoints and pays, out of his salary, three turnkeys, and a porter.

County House of Correction.

KNUTSFORD—COUNTY HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

This prison, together with a sessions-house, were erected in 1818, on the present convenient and airy site just without the town of Knutsford. The principal front, comprising the sessions-house and part of the boundary wall, is of an ornamental character, and built with free-stone; in the interior of the prison and subordinate parts the material is red brick. There are two entrances to the prison; in the lodges of the principal one are apartments for the officers, bath and visiting rooms for prisoners, and a very convenient school-room, with a small enclosed yard and privy attached to it. At the second gate are two small residences, for turnkeys, with four rooms in each. The original design of the prison comprised a central building with four detached radiating wings, three of which have been completed, and the foundations of the fourth laid, but is not intended to be further proceeded with until circumstances should render it necessary. The wings contain three stories or floors, the basement divided into refectories and workrooms, the upper ones into sleeping cells. The cells are built in single ranges, with separate galleries to each range.

Dimensions of Sleeping Cells—10ft. 5in. by 6ft. 10in.; height 10ft.

Each cell has a large semicircular aperture for the admission of light and air. There is a detached building specially erected for solitary confinement. It contains two stories with double ranges of cells, and small airing yards in the front and rear. The cells are warmed by steam. Had these cells been constructed as in the body of the prison, in single ranges instead of facing each other in double ones, much of the communication which takes place between the prisoners would have been prevented. The central building contains in the basement a kitchen for cooking the prisoners' food, which adjoining the one made use of by the keeper, gives facilities to intercourse between the prisoners and his servants. First floor, three parlours, second, two chambers, and chapel, attic, two bed-rooms. The dimensions and style of the rooms in the keeper's house appear to me far above what is requisite, and detrimental to the domestic comfort of the class of occupants for whom they were intended. The chapel is of semicircular form, disposed into parts for females, for felons before trial, for convicted, and the gallery for misdemeanents. It is rather small for the number of prisoners, and is described as being very close in summer. The hospitals for males and females are apart from the other buildings, and sufficient for their purpose. There is also a small detached house for the matron. The sessions-house abuts into the interior of the prison, and diminishes, in some degree, its security, particularly as several of the windows at no great distance from the ground are without the protection of iron bars.

Diet.—Breakfast and supper, ½ lb. of bread and 2 ounces of oatmeal made into gruel at each meal; dinners, Sunday and Wednesday, ½ lb. of meat of this weight uncooked, 2 lbs. of potatoes; Monday and Thursday, a quart of pea-soup made of the liquor the meat was boiled in the preceding day, with a gill of peas to each man, seasoned with salt and pepper; Tuesday, Friday, Saturday, 2 lbs. of potatoes, with salt. The soup, meat, and bread, the latter coarse, but all of most excellent quality. Women with infants are allowed a pint of milk and ½ lb. of bread daily additional.

Clothing.—All prisoners untried, or convicted of felony, are clothed; the convicted, in a parti-coloured suit of blue and yellow frieze, with cap and clogs; the untried in a suit of light blue of the same materials; misdemeanents sentenced to six months' imprisonment or upwards a suit of drab; untried misdemeanents only when requisite. The females of all classes are clothed; a variety is made in the dress of each class.

Bedding.—Bedsteads of iron and wood; paillasse, two blankets, and rug; an extra rug to each cell, in winter.

Fuel.—No artificial heat applied to the sleeping cells. Complaints are frequently made of the cold in winter.

Cleanliness.—The persons of the prisoners, and the prison, clean. The prisoners are put into the bath, have their clothes fumigated on first coming in, and are examined by the surgeon before they are classed. On Saturdays the prisoners are inspected by the keeper, to see that their feet are clean, hair properly cut, and that each receives his change of body linen.

Health.—The surgeon attends the prison daily. Colds, scrofulous affections, venereal and eruptive disease, are the most common cases. The prisoners who are received here are an admixture of the town and agricultural classes. Scrofula is very prevalent in this county, and equally so among both. Low fevers were very prevalent among the prisoners until last year. The hospital was always full of fever patients. At one period there were four or five cases of typhus, besides other fevers of a less alarming character. Meat was then only issued to the prisoners in the proportion of ½ lb. to each once a-week. At the representation of the surgeon and keeper, the diet was improved by the substitution of a larger quantity of animal food. In a very short time fever disappeared altogether, and not a single case of typhus has since occurred. The surgeon states, "I have had occasion to observe the effects of the diet at three different periods. When I was first appointed to the prison it was a full diet, and there were no fevers; it was afterwards reduced, and fevers appeared; it was again increased, fevers disappeared. An 18 months' imprisonment almost invariably shows itself injurious to the human frame, and after two years very few go out who are fit to undertake laborious employment of any kind."

The prisoners sentenced to solitary confinement suffered materially in health when they were restricted from exercise. At the surgeon's recommendation they were allowed to walk in the airing-yard, upon which the unfavourable symptoms yielded. The hospital attendants are prisoners. The surgeon is present at all corporal punishments (see offences and punishments). The surgeon keeps a day-book, in which he enters the names of the prisoners, and the medicines prescribed. No journal kept, nor laid before the Quarter-Sessions, according to the Gaol Act. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services in the prison on Sundays, reads prayers on Tuesdays, and prayers with lecture on Thursdays. The sacrament is administered four times a-year. He attends the prison almost every day to visit the sick, and see those prisoners privately who may wish it. On Saturday he hears the females read, in order to ascertain what progress they make, and takes that opportunity of having serious conversation with them. He has the superintendence and distribution of the books. He peruses all the tracts before delivering them to the prisoners. The prisoners mutilate the books, and do not always bring them to chapel, nor attend to them while there. He superintends the school. The instruction is confined to those only who cannot read; and as soon as a prisoner is sufficiently advanced to be enabled to do so tolerably, he is sent back again to his labour, but has still the means of improving himself, if he pleases, by the books. There have been instances of men pretending to be unable to read, that they might be sent to the school-room and avoid a portion of labour. The schoolmaster takes one at a time. The female prisoners are divided into three classes, consisting of those who can read, those who read imperfectly, and those who cannot read. One of the prisoners is selected to act as schoolmistress, for which service she receives 9*d.* a-week. The chaplain's journal contains entries of his quarterly reports and of his visits, but is not, in accordance with the Gaol Act, laid before the Quarter-Sessions. The following is a specimen of a very useful register of the books received and in use by the prisoners, and kept by the chaplain:—

I cannot but think it highly necessary that, in an establishment of this magnitude, divine service should be performed by the chaplain at least daily to the assembled prisoners, that all prisoners in solitary confinement should invariably be seen by him, and that his visits to the females should be oftener than once a-week. The system of instruction appears to me very imperfect. A man may learn to read and forget all he has learnt before leaving the prison. Moral and religious instruction cannot be too much extended to human beings, under circumstances and in situations which of themselves demonstrate their deficiency in such knowledge.

Classification.—Classification is, I think, here injuriously and unnecessarily broken in upon by placing the tried and untried at work in picking wool, and eating their meals together.

Labour.—The hard labour is the tread and crank wheel.

The employments are hand-loom weaving, shoemaking, and picking cotton-wool. The untried receive an extra ½ lb. of bread twice a-week for picking wool. Shoemakers and weavers before trial are paid half, and the convicted one-eighth of their earnings. The tailoring done is the prison clothing; the shoemaking is obtained from a master shoemaker at a fixed price. Many of the prisoners have been sent back to the tread-wheel as unable to learn to weave. The earnings of the prisoners have been much increased, and the labour simplified, by abolishing the manufacturing of a multiplicity of small articles, each requiring competent superintendents. The present taskmaster is not a practical manufacturer. His duty is to superintend the work generally, to keep the accounts of the prisoners, and with those who supply the raw materials. He is the keeper, and issuer of all stores in the prison. The faultiness of the principle of allowing earnings in any shape to convicted prisoners, is practically developed in this prison. Shoemakers and weavers tried and untried sentenced to hard labour or not receive a proportion of their earnings, while those who have not a knowledge of a trade, nor sufficient dexterity to acquire one, are sent back to the tread-wheel or to the picking of wool, for which no payment is made. The females are still paid in money, for services done in the prison, at the following rates:—

|---|---|
| Constables . . . . . . | 9*d*. per week. |
| Schoolmistress . . . . . . | 9*d*. ,, |
| Untried Washerwomen . . . . | 1*s*. 6*d*. ,, |
| Convicted ditto . . . . . . | 1*s*. ,, |

The female hospital servant receives ½ an oz. of tea, and ½ a lb. of sugar, weekly. At present there is no one so employed, but the matron says she gives the tea and sugar to such women as may appear to be unwell. The prices paid to the convicted females for work are as follow, the untried receiving double:—

|---|---|
| Making aprons . . . . . . . | 1½*d*. each. |
| ,, caps . . . . . . . . | 1½*d*. |
| ,, shirts . . . . . . . | 1½*d*. |
| ,, bedgowns . . . . . . . | 1*d*. |
| ,, petticoats . . . . . . . | 1*d*. |

Offences and Punishments.—The average number of prison offences is about 3 a-day to 20 prisoners. The penalty for talking of a night is keeping them in their cells until 12 the next day. The ordinary punishments are stoppages of food, and confinement in the refractory cells.

Number of Punishments, see Table.

Weight of irons, 7 lbs.

Scourge.—Whip-handle 18 inches long, nine lashes 21 inches long, with nine single knots in each. The whipping is inflicted by the beadle of the parish, who receives 2 shillings for each punishment. I witnessed the infliction of this punishment upon 5 boys, sentenced to be whipped at the previous Sessions. Four received 3½ dozen lashes each, and the fifth four dozen, which is the ordinary number inflicted unless the surgeon interferes, who is always present. The punishment was as severe as that which I have witnessed in the army, but I do not consider it to have been excessive. They are generally sent into hospital afterwards for a day or two, rather as a measure of precaution than of necessity.

Visits.—The male prisoners receive visits the first Monday, and females the first Saturday in the month, and also at other times, by order of the magistrates; on the regular days several prisoners are placed together at the same time, and all see their friends at once. A turnkey says, "I remember as many as seven or eight people (at a time) came to see the prisoners," no distinction being made between the tried and untried. This appears to me, to say the least of it, a very inconvenient arrangement.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The provisions and stores are contracted for yearly by tender. The bills are collected by the keeper quarterly, handed over by him to the taskmaster, who compares the items with the entries previously made in his receiving-book, and signs them, if correct. They are then, with a schedule of their contents, delivered to the auditor. This officer enters them under their various heads, makes out a check for the sums required for the payment of salaries and other disbursements, which is referred to the Finance Committee of Magistrates for examination, and finally for approval to the Quarter-Sessions. The keeper pays the salaries, and all bills not exceeding ten pounds in amount.

As the office of auditor (in a prison) is rather an unusual one, I subjoin that officer's own account of his duties:—"In the year 1831, I was requested by the Magistrates, acting as the Gaol Committee for the House of Correction, Knutsford, to organize a system of book-keeping for the several departments in the prison, and in consequence I modelled and prepared the various books kept by the taskmaster, matron, &c. Since that period I have had the constant inspection of these books, and the examination and auditing of the tradesmen's bills, the correctness of which I regularly report previous to every Sessions. I also prepare in a book a regular statement of the whole of the disbursements, analyzed from the bills, and classed under different heads, specifying the prices of all the articles, so that, by referring to the contracts, the Committee may see that there are no overcharges; and they have thus also, without the trouble of going through all the bills, the whole expenditure of the quarter at one view, affording an easy mode of reference from quarter to quarter, and ascertaining where any excess or deficiency takes place. At the foot of this account I state the average number of prisoners per day during the quarter, as well as the average cost of provisions for each, the goods sold, money received, &c., giving, in short, a concise history of the pecuniary transactions of the establishment.

"I have so framed the provision-book, that, instead of its being to be checked by the tradesmen's bills, it serves as a check upon them; for the baker, butcher, &c., can only make a charge for the actual number of prisoners supplied, without having to keep the account in their own books, and must therefore make out their bills from this.

"After all the accounts have been passed and paid, and previous to the ensuing quarter, I reduce them to double-entry in a waste-book, carrying them from thence into a ledger, in which every tradesman having demands above 10*l.* is credited with the amount, and debited, when discharged, by the county treasurer, whose account is also headed as such. Similar accounts are also opened for the keeper, taskmaster, and matron, for all the disbursements made by them; and every head of disbursement enumerated in the account current before alluded to has a corresponding one in this ledger, thus serving as a record and reference for futurity. This ledger I think proper to keep in my own custody, to enable me, when I am proceeding to examine the quarterly accounts, by having the previous balances before me, to discover whether the books left in the prison have had any alteration made in their balances subsequent to my examination and passing; but of course I consider these books, a ledger and day-book, as belonging to the establishment, and to be delivered up when required."

Books.—Keeper's Journal, containing the number of prisoners in custody every morning, male and female, with the names of those received or discharged during the day, and the names of prisoners who have subjected themselves to punishment by misconduct, and also the punishment they are ordered to receive, &c.

Discharge-book.—Containing prisoners' names, by whom committed, when committed, offences, punishments, by whom and when discharged.

Weekly Report-book.—Containing the number of prisoners, male and female, according to their different classes and the nature of their employment; tread-wheel, crank-mills, solitary confinement, woollen-weaving, cotton-weaving, silk-weaving, shoe and clog making, tailoring, blacksmiths.

Incidental Employment.—Knitting, spinning, sewing, laundry, cooks, &c.

Quarterly Report-book.—Containing the total number of prisoners one week before the Sessions, number of misdemeanors, number of felons, number of untried prisoners, number of prisoners above 17 years of age, number of prisoners under 17 years of age, number of prisoners employed, number of prisoners unemployed, punishment for offences in the prison, number of prisoners who have been committed before, cases of sickness, deaths, &c.

This book seems admirably adapted for its purpose, that of a complete check on the receipt and issue of all provisions and stores.

Stock-book of cleaning utensils, containing the numbers received and issued of hair-brushes, scrubbing-brushes, woollen-mops, birch-brooms, rubbing-stones, &c.

Weaver's Account-book.—Showing the quantity of work performed by each weaver employed, opposite their respective names and classes, and their amount of earnings.

Shoemaker's Account-book.—Showing the description of shoes received, made, and returned, with the amount of each pair chargeable to the employer.

Wool Account.—Showing the quantity of wool received, picked, and returned to the employer.

Account-book of Prisoners' Clothing and Bedding.—Showing the quantities manufactured or purchased, and the items issued to prisoners.

Discipline.—The restraint of silence was made a part of the discipline of this prison in June, 1835. The keeper states that "he has the highest opinion of the system; that among other good effects already observable is the great increase in the payment of fines for assaults and small offences by those who used to say they would rather lie in prison than pay. The quarrelling, fighting, and stealing of each other's provisions has almost ceased."

Number of re-committals from October 1832, to October 1833, previously to the introduction of the silent system, also from October 1835, to October 1836, since its adoption:—

A regulation is enforced here of the prisoners exchanging their cells every night, which is done in the following manner:—Before leaving the supper-table, the prisoners are told off in sections of the same number as there are cells in a gallery; one section is then marched off and locked up, and so on in succession, the gallery for each being named by the keeper, so that each prisoner is ignorant of the cell he is to occupy for the night. This might probably not be an unobjectionable arrangement if a separate sleeping cell were provided for each prisoner, but where the prisoners sleep three together, it appears to me only to afford additional and more extensive means of communication. Upon going round the prison at night, in all the cells where there were three prisoners, I found they had clubbed their bedding, and were sleeping together. There is another practice, which I consider most objectionable and improper, that of placing two prisoners, after locking up in the galleries, without light until 10 o'clock, and in the morning from 5, for the purpose of detecting talking in the cells. These men are furnished with a bit of chalk to mark the doors of the cells in which they have heard talking, and these cells, as a punishment to the occupiers, are not unlocked until 12 the next day. It was until lately the custom to pay those employed in menial services, but this, as regards the men, has been changed into an additional allowance of food; the females still continue under the old regulation (see Labour). I consider the change thus made but a palliation of the evil. The payment of earnings to men who owe so large a retribution to society for outrages against its laws, is as indefensible as it is mischievous; but remuneration for slight and unlaborious services, which of themselves tend to dissipate the irksome but wholesome monotony of prison discipline, seems a needless extension of from bad to worse.

In the course of my inspection, I noticed a want of assimilation and concert in carrying on the discipline of the two sexes in this prison. This I consider mainly attributable to the disunion which unfortunately prevails among certain of the officers. The matron, it seems, has authority to appoint the female turnkeys, whose salaries are rated and paid by the county at 20*l.* a-year each. These turnkeys receive from her only 8*l.* each, the remainder being supposed equivalent to their board; they are in fact as much her household servants as officers of the prison. The matron also employs a prisoner as a servant, who occasionally sleeps in her house. The turnkeys are allowed the services of a prisoner during a portion of the day in their respective houses in the prison. The keeper likewise employs one in cleaning knives and forks. Prisoners also work in the gardens. The keeper and matron have their body linen washed by the female prisoners, a practice prevailing in many prisons, but which, I think, ought to be abolished. The turnkeys are in the habit of receiving gratuities from the numerous visiters to the prison, which ought, considering the liberal salaries paid to them, to be strictly forbidden. A male turnkey, a single man, is permitted to reside in the female hospital. The building originally destined for solitary confinement, is not appropriated entirely to this purpose, which circumstance has a tendency to diminish its effect. The cells are used as ordinary sleeping cells, and prisoners while under treatment for the itch, are also placed in them. The officers state that they have observed no particular good effect to result from solitary confinement. One of them says, "The sentences, from Sessions, are generally for 14 days. I do not think it is any punishment to keep them for 14 days, in a solitary cell, upon our full diet. They feel it much more when confined for three days upon bread and water for a breach of prison rules. Has known soldiers in solitary confinement for many weeks without any observable effect." It is the opinion of the officers that transportation is much more dreaded as a punishment than formerly. Constables are described as being decidedly improved, and coming much less frequently intoxicated to the prison, either themselves or prisoners, than was formerly the case. They still occasionally send them by other persons, who, when asked why the constable has not brought the prisoner himself, reply, "The constable is busy." In the cases of men convicted of bestiality, a crime by no means unfrequent in this and other agricultural counties, no provision is made for their separation from other prisoners, which, I think, would be desirable.

The inconvenient state of this prison, from the want of unanimity among its officers, has already excited the attention and investigation of the magistrates; the results, however, as yet are not such as to make any diminution of their rigid surveillance at all prudent or advisable.

CHESTER.—City Gaol and House of Correction.

II.
Northern and Eastern District.
Reports on Separate Prisons.
Cheshire.
Chester City Gaol.

This prison is conveniently situated in the city, detached from other buildings. It is surrounded by a brick wall of an oblong form, slightly cut off at the angles. The prison buildings consist of two stories. The principal entry opens into a corridor or passage, 7 feet 4 inches wide, on the right and left of which are apartments for the keeper and matron, the day-rooms for the females, and the day and sleeping rooms for the male prisoners. A similar disposition is preserved in the upper floor, where the female prisoners sleep, with the exception of its being intersected in one part by the chapel. The keeper's apartments are a parlour, two kitchens, and four chambers; the matron's, a kitchen, and one chamber. The chapel has four divisions, but the prisoners are exposed to each other's view. There are no means of inspecting the prisoners in their day-rooms. The space between the airing-yards and the boundary wall being but a few feet, gives a great facility to carrying on communication with the prisoners. The airing-yards are only enclosed with a slight stockade, requiring but little ingenuity to be applied to dangerous purposes. Beyond the main enclosure at the rear of the prison, is a walled yard, with a range of workshops, two of which are appropriated for the reception of vagrants; a gateway and lodge for the turnkey, and two lock-ups for male and female night charges. The distinction of Gaol and House of Correction, as to their being separate establishments, is merely nominal.

Diet.—Weekly, to the untried and convicted prisoners, 7 lbs. of bread, 10 lbs. of potatoes, 1½ lb. of oatmeal; disorderlies, 1 lb. of bread and 1 lb. of potatoes daily; vagrants, 1 lb. of bread daily, and 1 lb. of potatoes, in addition, when picking oakum. The bread is of good seconds quality, and is contracted for. The greatest irregularity prevails in everything connected with the victualling of the prisoners. The week's bread is served out on Tuesdays and Fridays in loaves of 3½ lbs. each. The potatoes and meal are issued only once a-week. The whole quantity is, in many instances, eaten at once or disposed of by the prisoners. There is no place for cooking the food but at the fires in the day-rooms. The keeper permits convicted prisoners at hard labour to purchase extra provisions, such as pork, &c., portions of which were lying about. Two prisoners, convicted of riot and assault, were in the misdemeanant's day-room, carrying on their business as tailors, receiving the amount of their weekly earnings from without, and allowed to support themselves, purchasing whatever description of food they chose, and a quart of beer daily.

Fuel.—Ample allowance of coals the whole year round.

Bedding.—Iron bedsteads, straw palliasse, three blankets, woollen rug. Vagrants, one rug and a litter of straw.

Clothing.—Convicted felons, parti-coloured suit of red and green frieze; misdemeanants, and untried on charge of felony, a similar suit of drab frieze. Body linen once a-week.

Cleanliness.—The privies and drains in a most filthy state, from want of cleansing, and faultiness of construction. The day-rooms dirty and untidy, their chimneys smoking and rendering them at times almost uninhabitable. The females are not cleansed upon entering the prison. The matron says, "There is no bath, nor any means of doing it. Their bedding is at times covered with vermin. Last week there was a dreadful case; the bedding was swarming. Sometimes women of a more decent class come in, and they frequently complain of being thus subjected to the filth of others. The women affected with the venereal are not separated from the others. Recollects the chaplain, one Sunday, when in the pulpit, being obliged to stop the service, from the offensive state of a woman who was present while undergoing treatment for the itch. She was ordered out of the chapel."

Upon visiting the rooms in the prison-yard allotted to vagrants, the filth and wretchedness of their situation was quite revolting. In the apartment appropriated to females were five women and two small children. At one end of the room was an inclined plane, or guard-bed, with a quantity of dirty littered straw. A single rug is allowed to each prisoner of this description for bedding. They are strictly confined to this room. There are no privies, the only means provided them being iron pots. No soap nor towels allowed, and in this frightful state they occasionally remain for a fortnight or a month. The condition of these human creatures, as they appeared to me on the day of inspection, is impossible to describe with any hope of being credited. The turnkey who had the charge of them said, "I have been nearly poisoned by the stench when I have thrown the doors open in the morning; I have frequently been obliged to retreat back from it. They have no privies, and make use of iron pots, both day and night. They make a noise at the door when they want them emptied. I have known some of the better class complain of the filth of the others, and declare it was impossible for them to sleep alongside of them. They are generally confined here about 14 days, and sometimes for a month. I have frequently had eight or nine in a room." The surgeon, upon being shown their condition, considered it "very hazardous to health." The vagrants do not attend chapel, nor are the females considered by the matron under her charge, and therefore not exclusively, nor even at all attended to by one of their own sex.

Health.—Venereal, itch, and slight inflammatory fevers are the prevailing ailments. One prisoner died of typhus during the year. He was placed in a separate room. The surgeon visits the prison three times a-week. There is no infirmary in the prison. The surgeon states, "that it has often been desirable to remove prisoners, which could not be done. There is no itch ward, no bath, the want of which has been much felt. There are frequently sick persons who require to be separated from the others, and for which there is no provision, no person appointed to attend on the sick. There has been difficulty occasionally in getting necessaries for the sick, nor have they, when obtained, been what they ought to have been and what he considered proper." The surgeon attends all corporal punishments.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services on a Sunday, and prayers on Wednesdays and Fridays. He likewise visits the sick. Two days a-week he sees the prisoners in their day-rooms. He has not administered the sacrament, nor does it often happen to him to feel disposed to do so, from the state of mind of the prisoners. There is no systematic instruction. Occasionally a lady has attended to teach the females, and the prisoners sometimes learn from each other. The matron states, "that a lady, indeed several, formerly visited the females on a Friday and Sunday, but they used to insult and jeer them. I do not know how they bore it. When singing, they would break off into laughter in the midst of it." All the books admitted into the prison are subject to the chaplain's approval. They are provided with Bibles, prayer-books, and tracts in the day-rooms. Strangers are admitted into the chapel on Sundays, a practice I consider very objectionable, especially where the division of the prisoners is so imperfect as is the case in this prison. The chaplain's journal contains nothing more than entries of the duties performed by him.

Classification.—The male prisoners of all classes sentenced to hard labour, are placed in the same room to pick oakum. The untried females under charges of felony and misdemeanors are also together in one day-room.

Labour.—There is no continuous labour, but whenever junk is to be procured, the prisoners are employed in picking it into oakum. There have been intervals of three or four weeks when the prisoners have been without employment. The price allowed for picking oakum is 5*s.* per cwt., of which the keeper receives $\frac{1}{8}$th, the prisoner $\frac{1}{4}$th, and the remainder is credited to the prison. The female prisoners receive no portion of their earnings, although employed in picking oakum. I am unable to discover upon what principle this distinction is made. Two females, convicted felons, the only ones of this class at present in the prison, are employed exclusively in washing and cleaning. The males, of all classes, pick oakum in the same room, without any one to overlook them, and the labour, as to quantity, appears quite left to their own discretion.

Offences and Punishments.—It is the illegal practice in this prison, to place all prisoners in irons immediately upon their being sentenced to transportation. Francis Petit, a foreigner, sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment with hard labour in the City Gaol, and to be afterwards transported for 14 years, had been kept for the whole term in single irons by day, and double ones by night, without any labour, and in constant companionship with the other prisoners. The good to be produced by such a mode of carrying a sentence into effect it is difficult to conceive.

Weight of irons used in conveying convicts, and on refractory prisoners, 12 lbs. The usual punishment for refractory conduct is confinement in the solitary cell. Whipping is occasionally inflicted upon boys by sentences of Court. It is done by a prisoner, who is paid for it, and in these cases a birch rod is used. The keeper neglects to keep a register of sentences, or punishments inflicted. The cell for the refractory, or "Black hole," as it is rightly termed, is below ground, and is reached by a flight of steps from the main passage of the prison. It is damp, without light or ventilation. A litter of dirty straw was laid on the floor, the boards of which were broken in many places. I consider it as an improper place of confinement for any human being. I requested the surgeon to examine it. His opinion was, "I consider it an improper place of imprisonment. The prisoners who are placed there run very great risk. It is quite wonderful how they escape ill health." A practice also prevails, which, to say the best, is unauthorized; that when prisoners under charge are lodged in the lock-ups during the night by the police, and they happen to be drunk and noisy, the turnkey removes them from these places adjoining his lodge, takes them into the interior of the prison, and places them in the refractory cell, where the uproar and shouting they make disturb all the inmates.

Visits and Letters.—Prisoners may be visited the first Wednesday in every month by an order from a magistrate. Letters, at the discretion of the keeper.

Benefactions.—The Marquis of Westminster sends 3*l.* 3*s.* at Christmas, which is divided among the debtors.

Accounts, Books, Expenditure.—The books and accounts are most unintelligibly kept. A prisoner has for several years been employed by the keeper in making the entries. The expenses of the gaol are paid by the Corporation, and a portion of those of the House of Correction out of the poor's rate. The provisions are contracted for, and, with the exception of the bread and meat, which is paid for at three and six months, there does not appear to be any regulated periods of payment.

Register, with the following heads for entries:—Name, age, feet, inches, complexion, hair, eyes, trade, town, county, by whom committed, date, offence, when committed, sentence, discharged, remarks.

Bread-book.—Containing the prisoners' names, and the quantity of bread issued to them on Tuesdays and Fridays.

Weekly Number-book.—Containing the number of prisoners in the gaol and house of correction, made up for the use of the magistrates.

Matron's Account-book.—Entries of articles received for the use of the house of correction.

Visiting Magistrates' Book.—There is no recorded visit of any magistrates to this prison from October 29, 1834, to January 9, 1836, since which the visits have been frequent.

Account of Labour.—There are several books, relative to the labour performed by the prisoners, which have not been kept up for years.

Debtors.—The debtors who hire beds from the keeper pay at the rate of 3*s.* a-week. They are allowed to purchase a quart of beer daily, if they support themselves. The keeper has, upon particular occasions, provided a debtor with board and washing for which he has charged 1*l.* 1*s.* a-week. They are described as being occasionally noisy.

General Discipline.—There is nothing here that merits the term. I found tobacco-smoking although forbidden in full practice; likewise drafts and other implements for idle games in the day-rooms, and the walls of the vagrants' and felons' rooms defaced with names and low drawings. Upon going round, at night, a large fire was blazing in the grate of the vagrants' sleeping-room. The turnkey says "that a man must be a great deal worse when he goes out. They are constantly laying schemes and cursing and swearing. Attempts at escape are very frequent, and it is impossible to prevent communication from without. Tobacco, provisions, &c., are frequently thrown over the walls." The matron describes the conduct of the women to be extremely bad; frequently she is at a loss what to do with them; that loose and idle talking and swearing are their constant habits, and they communicate with the male prisoners, talking at night to the men below from their sleeping-cells in the upper story. The prisoners occasionally work in the keeper's garden, on the exterior of the prison as well as within, for which they occasionally get a pint of beer. The prisoners employed in domestic services by the keeper, turnkey, and matron, get broken victuals occasionally from their tables. The average number of prisoners is about 40; the greatest number is invariably during the race week. On the 7th of May last the period of the races there were 85 prisoners, many of whom were obliged to sleep on the floors, in addition to those in the upper story contiguous to the females.

The single observation I have to make is, that an entire change is indispensable in the mode of carrying on the duties of this prison. I pointed out its various imperfections to the mayor and magistrates, and have every reason to trust that considerable amendments will take place forthwith. I strongly recommended them to contract with the county magistrates for all prisoners sentenced to corrective discipline, and also to enter into a further arrangement, so that their transports may be conveyed to the hulks with those of the county, by which the absence of an officer, and some expense, might be spared.

Keeper.—Age 54; appointed 1826; formerly in business; married; salary, 80*l.*, sixty pounds paid as keeper of the gaol, twenty pounds as such for the house of correction. Gives a bond to the amount of 1000*l.* for the security of debtors. He receives 9*l.* 3*s.* a head for taking convicts to the hulks. Small garden. A prisoner employed by him in domestic offices.

Turnkey.—Age 53; married; appointed 1833; resides at the lodge, in the rear of the prison; salary, 52*l.*; employs a prisoner in domestic offices.

Matron.—Age 65; appointed 1822; salary, 30*l.*; employs a prisoner in domestic offices.

Chaplain.—Appointed 1823; salary, 100*l.* Has also the incumbency of the chapel of Little St. John's, in the city of Chester in the patronage of the Corporation. It was anciently the chapel to the gaol. The chapelry is extra-parochial and involves no cure of souls.

Surgeon.—Appointed 1836; salary, 30*l.*, inclusive of medicines.

Congleton. Borough Gaol.

CONGLETON.—Borough Gaol.

This Borough Prison, so called, is under the same roof with the Town Hall. It consists of three cells in the basement without light or ventilation; one very difficult of access by a narrow stone staircase, and all improper for imprisonment of a longer duration than a few hours. A cell has also been built in the upper story of the Town Hall for debtors under process from the Borough Court. There are no means whatever of affording either air or exercise to this class of prisoners. There is a fire-place and water-closet in the room, and it is well lighted by two glazed windows.

Dimensions.

Debtors' Cell.—16½ ft. by 9½ ft., 8 ft. high.
Staircase Cell.—12 ft. by 6 ft., 6½ ft. high.
Basement Cell, No. 1.—7 ft. 8 in. by 7 ft. 8 in. } 9 ft. to the crown of each arch.
Do. No. 2.—8 ft. by 7 ft. 8 in. } Prisoners under criminal charges only remain here while under examination, and upon committal are immediately sent to the County House of Correction at Knutsford. There were two prisoners in confinement at the period of inspection. The prison was not altogether clean. The keeper furnishes the prisoners with food, for which he receives at the rate of 6*d.* a head per diem from the overseers of the poor. For this he provides them with bread and butter or cheese and tea for breakfast, bread and butter or cheese or meat for dinner, and with supper the same as breakfast. He does not receive the sixpence for a prisoner who supports himself. Medical assistance is provided when required. The bedsteads are iron, the beds a loose straw litter and rug. The keeper makes no entry of the prisoners' names, nor description. There have been only two debtors imprisoned here for a very long period; one in 1834, for six weeks, and a second in 1835, for 14 days. It has been the custom, in consequence of the imperfectness of the prison, to permit the debtors to reside in the bailiff's house during their confinement. This illegal mode of disposing of them is discontinued, and they are in future to be restricted to the single cell, where any long continuance must be hazardous to health. Neither the keeper nor any other person resides in the prison. The keeper receives a yearly salary of 5*l.* is also mace-bearer to the Corporation at a salary of 10*l.* and has fees amounting to 30*l.* in addition.

Macclesfield. County Lock-ups.

MACCLESFIELD.—County Lock-ups.

At this County Divisional Police-office there are six cells and two day-rooms for prisoners under examination. There is a lock-up fee to the keeper of one shilling for each prisoner in charge for assaults or as disorderly. The sheriff's officers occasionally lodge debtors there for safe custody; they pay the fee of 1*s.* One debtor who was reported to be insane remained here 3 days. Sixpence a-day is allowed for the prisoners' maintenance; they have bread and water. The county furnishes coals, but candles if required are paid for by the prisoners. The cells and day-rooms clean. The keeper is special high constable of the Macclesfield division, comprising 43 townships. Has a house, coals and candles.

| Forage for a horse . . . . | 45 |
| Keeper of lock-ups . . . . | 16 |

The keeper has eightpence a-mile for conducting one prisoner to Chester, and one shilling for two.

The lock-ups for the borough of Macclesfield are placed at the back of the Town Hall. They consist of 14 sleeping-cells and two day-rooms. Sixpence a day is allowed by the Corporation for the maintenance of such prisoners as do not provide themselves, while lying here under charge or remand. Tobacco and beer are allowed to be purchased. The usual bedding is provided. At the period of inspection the cells were only partially supplied with beds, and were under the process of lime-washing. There are no privies attached to the building. This establishment, as well as that of the county, is well suited for the temporary detention of prisoners.

Macclesfield. Debtors' Gaol.

MACCLESFIELD.—Debtors' Gaol for the Hundred and Forest Courts of Macclesfield.

The origin of this gaol is of great antiquity—it is traceable as far back as the reign of Edward the Second. The King's Justices in Eyre either stopped here in their way to Chester, or appointed a Commissioner to hold the Courts for the Liberty of the Hundred, and for the Manor and Forest of Macclesfield. Subsequently the Stewardship of the Franchise was granted by the Crown to the Stanley family, and is enjoyed by them to the present day. This prison was then in existence and termed "The King's Gaol" and the Crown granted to Sir John Savage the freehold office of keeper, without doubt a place of some profit. The office became vested, by descent, in the Cholmondeley family, and in 1792 the Earl of that title sold the gaol house and land adjoining for 1140*l.* These premises were afterwards divided, and one moiety went into the possession of the Corporation of Macclesfield, who disposed of it, and they are now the property by purchase of two private individuals. A considerable difficulty occurs in ascertaining (which I have not been able to do) upon whom the right of maintaining the prison legally devolves. The different conveyances of the property contain no reservation of it for that specific purpose, and I have searched through a multitude of deeds, and sought information, without being able to form any conclusion. The individuals in possession have charged themselves with the maintenance of the buildings, and from time to time have laid out considerable sums in repairs, and providing beds for the prisoners. There can be little doubt that the site originally occupied as a gaol for the franchise, has been greatly encroached upon, and it is now almost entirely covered with buildings. The prisoners are, however, traditionally aware of the extent of the ancient limits, and point them out as within their rules, and where no action for escape could be maintained. The prison now consists of a detached house for the keeper, one for the prisoners, and a small airing-yard.

The keeper receives no salary, and it is a matter of some difficulty to find anybody willing to undertake the charge. The person now in that situation is collector of the Corporation market-tolls, for which he receives 1*l.* 16*s.* a-week, and is inspector of weights and measures at a yearly salary of ten pounds besides fees. No allowance is made to the prisoners in case of extreme distress, and they have been occasionally relieved by the other prisoners, or the keeper. No attempt to preserve order or discipline among them; they do as they please. Drunkenness is frequent, and upon the admission of a fresh prisoner, the gaol is described as being a scene of uproarious hilarity. I found the following inscribed, in a fair hand, upon a board suspended in the day-room :—

"The Rules and Regulations of the Earl of Derby's Prison in Macclesfield, Chester.

Stone Jug.

It is ordered, that, in future, every fresh member shall pay a garnish of 10*s.*, to be applied and disposed of as the majority of the members shall direct.

NICHOLAS DUNSTAN.
GEORGE LOWE.

Earl Derby's Parlour,
1st June, 1834.

The Lay, on a Members' Introduction.

'Cease rude Boreas.'

Welcome, welcome, brother debtor,
To this poor *and merry place ;
Where there's neither bum nor bailiff
Dares to show his frightful face.
Ne'er repine at your confinement
From your children and your wife,
Wisdom lies in true resignment
Through the various scenes of life.
Every island is a prison
Strongly guarded by the sea ;
Kings and Princes, for this reason,
Prisoners are as well as we.
But since, kind Sir, as you're a stranger,
Down your Garnish you must pay,
Or else your coat will be in danger ;
For you must either strip or pay."
God save the King.

Two debtors at present confined here state that the above-mentioned garnish of ten shillings is lowered to five which they paid, and it was expended in liquor. The keeper makes each prisoner pay 3*s.* 6*d.* a-week to him for bedding and coals, the bedding not being his property. A debtor of the name of Wagstaffe, who had been confined 12 weeks died on the 26th March, 1836. No coroner's inquest was held on the body, and the keeper was obliged to provide surgical attendance at his own expense. It was discovered that the man had subscribed to a benefit society, and the keeper was reimbursed. The keeper states "That the prisoners are sometimes in the greatest distress. One man came in, and remained there for three months.

To prevent him from starving, he employed him in trifling offices about his house and supported him. The prisoners generally come in to take the benefit of the Act. The exterior doors are not kept locked, unless there is a prisoner whom he is suspicious may make his escape. The longest period of confinement he has known has been from 10 to 12 months. There was once a female prisoner, and from there being no accommodation, he was obliged to give her up one of his own beds. There are no rules, nor does he know who has the power to make them. There is no regularity. They see their friends at all times. He has often seen them fresh. He serves writs occasionally by special appointment. The caption fee in execution is 1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*"

Observations.—If this prison must of necessity be continued, a responsible person with a salary however small, should be appointed, and regulations laid down for his guidance. On whom the responsibility rests is a legal question apparently of some difficulty.

LANCASTER CASTLE—County Gaol.

The magnificent pile known as Lancaster Castle comprises within its area the duchy and county courts, and a gaol for Crown prisoners and debtors. In adapting a part to the purposes of a prison, the retaining portions of the ancient structure, and connecting them with new buildings under the restraint of a peculiar style of architecture, have seriously interfered with the requisite arrangements for health, discipline, and convenience. Exterior form and security appear to have been the main objects kept in sight by the projectors. The prison is entered through the noble and ancient indented gateway, with massive towers standing boldly in relief on each side for its defence. The interior of the towers is appropriated to offices for the keeper, reception room for prisoners, turnkeys' apartments, and lodgings for male debtors. A spacious court or airing yard for debtors first presents itself on passing through the exterior gate; the criminal prison for males shows itself on the right, and the one for females with windows overlooking the debtors' yard on the left. The keeper's house adjoins the debtors' prison, and has the following accommodation:—Basement, kitchen and offices; ground floor, breakfast, dining, and drawing-rooms; first floor, four chambers; attic, two chambers. The penitentiary, or prison for females, is a detached building of four stories, each containing a range of sleeping rooms, of a semicircular shape, fitted at one end with open iron railwork, for the purpose of inspection; the inspection room being within the circle. The female debtors' ward adjoins that of the criminals, but is subjected to the inconvenience of having the cells for refractory prisoners under the same roof; nor are there any means of reaching them but through the debtors' day-room. The matron's apartments are a chamber and sitting room. The space for air and exercise, allotted to female debtors is very limited. The day-room attached to the laundry appears to be much exposed to accident from fire; the heat is conveyed from a stove, and the flooring consists of wooden laths laid at intervals of a few inches. I was informed that during the last summer they caught fire and that a portion of the wood-work was destroyed. The principal accommodation provided for the male criminals is in two massive towers of ancient form but of modern construction, containing eighty sleeping cells; they are mounted by well staircases, with ten landings in each, and eight cells in each landing, deficient both in light and ventilation. Portions of the old edifices have been incorporated into the chapel, male infirmary, and two dormitories, each capable of containing from thirty to forty prisoners. The principal turnkey's lodge is in the centre of the criminal prison, overlooking the yards, but is far from accomplishing the purpose of a complete general inspection of the prisoners.

Two of the dark or refractory cells have a small airing-yard, a third a day-room and fire-place, with a yard of larger dimensions; they are all sunk ten feet below the level of the surface, are not warmed and are described as extremely cold in winter.

I am not aware of any establishment of this kind, where with so noble an exterior, the interior arrangements are so deficient in that valuable adjunct of discipline—inspection. It is a work of considerable time and labour to ascend the towers where the prisoners are placed in small sections at each landing, and the noise of footsteps must be heard long previous to their near approach, making ordinary vigilance a business of extraordinary difficulty.

MALES AND FEMALES.

7 lbs. of wheaten bread, weekly.
2½ lbs. of oatmeal, weekly.
10 lbs. of potatoes, weekly.
4½ oz. of salt, weekly.

All such articles of food and provisions for criminal prisoners shall be cooked in the regular cooking houses within the prison, and not by the prisoners individually.

One lb. of rice and four red herrings weekly are added to the county allowance to poor debtors, the expense of which is defrayed from the charity fund. The females all take their meals together in one room: the males in their day-rooms.

Clothing.—Males:—Woollen jacket, waistcoat, trowsers, cap, clogs, and shirt. Convicted felons—Yellow and blue. Misdemeanants—Blue. Untried—Brown. Females:—Woollen jacket, petticoat, cap, body linen, and clogs.

Bedding.—Hammock, hair mattress, two blankets (three in winter), and rug.

Heat.—The females' wards are warmed by steam. The humidity is very great in the towers from the porous quality of the stone, and the want of proper ventilation. Stoves are placed in the interior with pipes through the staircases, which afford but an imperfect remedy to the evil.

Cleanliness.—The prison and persons of the prisoners clean.

Health.—The attendance of the surgeon is daily and oftener if required. The prisoners are always inspected by him before they are classed. Medicines are provided by the county and dispensed in the prison. The surgeon states "that scurvy and pulmonary complaints are observable among those who have undergone a long imprisonment. Of a large proportion of these cases, there has probably been a predisposition to these complaints, which has here been called into action. The situation of the building being very exposed and cold catarrhal affections are very frequent: there is also a tendency to laxity of bowels among the prisoners. It is difficult to account for the cause; it may be in the locality. In the autumn and in wet weather such derangements are most frequent. A considerable proportion of the deaths ensue from pulmonary complaints and chiefly of men under long sentences. Imprisonment may be borne for twelve months without injury, but a period of two years is almost invariably detrimental to health. The periods of confinement at Lancaster Castle, from the serious cases being sent there, exceed the other prisons in the county in their duration, in the proportion of about 3 to 1."

The following valuable table of deaths, and analysis of the corresponding periods of imprisonment, seem to corroborate this position:—

In forming an estimate of the proportion of deaths amongst the prisoners for the longer and shorter periods of imprisonment, it is important to observe, that out of the twenty-three deaths under six months, eight arose from cholera and dysentery, during the time those diseases prevailed epidemically in the prison, and six from diseases under which the prisoners laboured on coming into gaol, which were as follows:—

|---|---|
| Cholera and dysentery | 8 |
| Acute bronchitis, eleven days after coming to prison | 1 |
| Asthma ditto ditto | 1 |
| After operation for strangulated hernia, thirty-eight days from admission | 1 |

| Organic disease of the stomach, of long standing | 1 |

August 16, 1836. ———— Surgeon to the Prison.

The surgeon says "the scurvy yields immediately to improved diet and treatment; there was considerably more of this disease previous to the increase of the food. The labour within the prison is less, and the prisoners enjoy a superior diet to those of their class beyond the walls: at the same time I think it not a particle more than they ought to have, for the long time they are shut up, and the depressing nature of the confinement. I have frequently observed prisoners under depression. From time to time attempts at suicide have taken place. The improved diet has lessened the general debility of the prisoners, and enabled them to support themselves under these circumstances. Formerly the mortality was much greater than at present, and many left the prison in such shattered health as to be unfit for labour. The women are upon the whole, more healthy than the men; their sleeping apartments are much superior to those occupied by the male prisoners, and it is to this that I attribute the variation in the health of the sexes. The debtors have not the tendency to low diseases observable among the criminals: on their side of the prison inflammatory disorders of the digestive organs, dropsy, and the usual tissue of complaints following intemperance are of constant occurrence. The result of lowering the diet in 1826 and 1827 was the appearance of scurvy, tabes mesenteriæ, atrophy, and chronic diarrhœa, in an increased degree. Since my connexion with the prison it has never been free from a tendency to diarrhœa, and I consider it imperative that the present diet should be maintained in its perfect integrity, in order to counteract this disposition." In illustration of the surgeon's statement, the following Table exhibits the increase and decrease of mortality in the prison, analogous with the alterations in the diet:—

A TABLE exhibiting the average Number of Prisoners and Deaths, for three successive periods of four Years each, from 1822 to 1833.

(1.) Average number of prisoners and deaths, for four years immediately preceding the reduced dietary of 1826, and before the operation of the New Prison Discipline Act of 1823.

| ,, 1825 . . . | 247 | 2 |
| | 4) 945 | 4) 6 |
| Average . . . | 236¼ | 1½ |

The years 1824 and 1825 are included in this period, notwithstanding the Act was passed in 1823, because it is chiefly, if not altogether to the reduced dietary of 1826 that the increased mortality which ensued is to be attributed; for although the regulations of the Act, strictly confining the prisoners to the county allowance, and prohibiting their purchasing food of any description from their allotted portion of earnings, or receiving any articles of food from their friends as formerly allowed, under certain restrictions, were strictly enforced. We have only three deaths for the years 1824 and 1825 out of 508 prisoners, which is as nearly as possible in accordance with the average of prisoners and deaths for the two years preceding the operation of the Act.

(2.) Average immediately succeeding the reduced dietary of 1826.

In consequence of the increased mortality of 1826, the dietary was improved in 1827, and again reduced in 1828. In 1829 it was again improved, and with some slight modification, has remained the same as at present.

There are many cases of simulated disease. It is common for the prisoners to create ulcers on the legs, by mixing the lime from the walls with soft soap. Two such cases are in hospital at the present time. The practice with such malingerers is to send them to the hospital, put them upon a reduced diet, and confine them strictly to their beds, and if there be reason to suppose they continue their tricks, to lock up their legs in a tin boot. There are separate infirmaries for the debtors and male and female criminals. The surgeon attends corporal punishments. A female nurse, a paid servant, attends the sick. The hospital servants are prisoners, selected for good conduct. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services upon Sundays. All the Crown prisoners attend chapel with the exception of the cooks and women nursing children. On week-days he reads prayers every morning to the male prisoners selected from the Liturgy, and a lesson from the New Testament, which he accompanies with an explanation. He visits the sick and those in solitary confinement occasionally. On Sundays the female prisoners attend Divine service, but not on other days, in consequence, as he states, of their being subjected to the gaze of the debtors on their way to the chapel. He casually sees the prisoners by themselves, but from their strict application to labour, it is not possible to do so to any extent. The Sacrament is administered six times a-year, but only to those he considers in a suitable state of mind, which he satisfies himself of by previous examination. Many of the prisoners have assigned to him the fear of being scoffed and jeered at as reasons for their not attending the Lord's Table; others, who have once communicated, have been called hypocrites, and laughed out of coming again: occasionally sees the female prisoners. The matron reads prayers to them daily, and they are instructed by the assistant matron. The debtors seldom seek his attentions; about one in fifteen of the debtors attend Divine service, except when any prisoner is brought in under extraordinary circumstances, or has been left for execution at the assizes, then they crowd the gallery to excess. The chaplain says " it is impossible that any man in the situation a debtor is here, can have a serious thought." The boys and young men, who feel disposed to learn are placed in classes under the schoolmaster, and instructed in reading, writing, and the first principles of arithmetic. The boys are formed by the chaplain into two classes, and on Monday and Wednesday mornings, he hears them repeat the Collect for the Sunday and parts of the Church catechism. Considers it would be better if the boys were entirely apart from the other prisoners, and the same means of correction resorted to as in public schools. All books are submitted to his inspection and approval. It is not uncommon for men to apply for permission to have books in unison with their own religious tenets, which, after examination, are given to them. They have likewise asked to be attended by their own ministers, Catholics, Socinians, and Unitarians. Does not think the present discipline of the prison has anything of a moral or deterring character; has often found, when he has flattered himself with making an impression upon a prisoner, it has been speedily effaced upon his return to his ward. A well educated man, who attended most scrupulously to all his religious duties, and received the Sacrament while in prison, and of whom he had the greatest hopes of a perfect reformation, was shortly after his discharge, detected in carrying on a wholesale system of robbery in the metropolis. Another educated at Shrewsbury under Dr. Butler, who was thought so highly of as to be employed to assist the turnkey at the gate, was found intriguing with a female debtor. He has met with numerous such instances of the inefficiency of the system as now administered. He is convinced that the punishment of transportation is felt as a severe one by the criminal population. There are three prisoners in the Castle sentenced for a burglary to six months' imprisonment, and afterwards to seven years' transportation; this he considers to be worse than useless: the men are mixed with the others in the yards and day rooms, and the intermediate imprisonment is regarded as a relief by protracting the evil. The chaplain keeps a register, journal, and attendance book (See Books).

Schoolmaster.—There is no regular system of instruction except for the boys. The labour is not interfered with on that account. The attending school is not compulsory; sometimes a man or a boy continues for a month or two, then gets tired, and gives it up altogether. Occasionally they quit for a day or two and then return. The boys who are utterly ignorant of reading are allowed a trifle longer time from their work at the school than others, and in some few cases they have learnt sufficient to enable them to read the Testament, and write to their friends, before leaving the prison. The schoolmaster considers that many of the boys attend the school for the purpose of breaking in upon the monotony of a prison life. The prisoners are very generally desirous of being taught writing. He says, " I instruct them in both at the same time; when a boy begins to read, and knows the meaning of a word of four or five letters, I put a pen in his hand and let him endeavour to form them. I am quite sure the reading is sufficient, and that the writing is of little real advantage." The prisoners are allowed the use of paper, pens and ink, indiscriminately, in the day-rooms. This is permitted with the view of mutual instruction, as many of them decline attending the school, and prefer learning from each other. There is no opportunity of knowing what they write. It is one part of his duty to instruct the prisoners in psalmody, which is done in the intervals from labour. Those who possess a good voice and are well conducted, are selected; they receive 3*d.* weekly, which is paid to them on their discharge. A circulating library has been formed in the prison, under the superintendence of the chaplain; it was first commenced by donations of books, but others were subsequently added by purchase: among the books are " Constable's Miscellany," and others of a similar description. They are selected from a catalogue by the prisoners themselves, or at their desire by the schoolmaster, and are changed every Saturday. The usual choice is for books of a short, or entertaining character, as history, voyages, travels. The " Saturday Magazine" is oftener called for than any other publication. The females are likewise permitted the use of the library, but are restricted to works of a religious tendency. The matron states " that the females refuse to avail themselves of the books, saying they want some of a livelier sort." She reads prayers daily to them. They are instructed, but not regularly; they are not anxious for it; if there is any work, by which they can make a little money, they prefer it to the school. The schoolmaster formerly kept a journal of the progress of the prisoners, but from the attendance being voluntary, and consequently very irregular, he discontinued it.

In the prison for females are four crank-mills for the grinding and dressing of flour. The prisoners sentenced to hard labour, with some few exceptions, take their turns at the wheels, of which a regular roster is kept.

The prisoners are employed in a variety of works, for which those before trial receive one-third of the set price; those not sentenced to hard labour one-sixth; those so sentenced one-eighth. The work done for manufacturers consists of the weaving of calico, by hand and power looms, at 1*s.* 1½*d.* a piece, the materials and gear being provided by the employer; the picking of cotton, at ¾*d.* or 1*d.* a pound; wool, at 1*d.* a pound; shoes, from 10*d.* to 2*s.* 9*d.* a pair; boot feet, from 4*s.* to 4*s.* 6*d.*; and boots closed, 7*s.* 6*d.* a pair. The tailors and women are also employed in making light clothing for the West India markets, at a rate of from 3*d.* to 4*d.* for each article; the women also knit and wash and mend for the male prisoners. The clothing, hammocks, bedding, &c. are made in the prison, and a nominal charge for them made against the county. Prisoners are paid their proportion upon their discharge, according to the following scale:—

The gross amount of prisoners' earnings, without any deductions for salaries or expenses, from 10th October 1835, to 10th October 1836, appears to have been 424*l.* 7*s.* 4½*d.*

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences are fighting, quarrelling, and jumping off the wheel, punished by confinement in the refractory cells. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Whipping is inflicted by the sexton of the parish, who receives a fee of 1*s.* The punishment itself is described as one of no severity; forty or fifty lashes is the greatest, and two dozen the ordinary number upon adults.

Scourge.—Handle of whalebone, 22 inches; nine lashes, 19½ inches each; seven knots in each lash.

Irons.—For males, 6 lbs. 8 oz.; females, 2 lbs. 4 oz.

Visits and Letters.—Untried prisoners, at the discretion of the keeper; convicted prisoners once in three months. Letters are permitted to be written without any restraint; pens, ink and paper being indiscriminately allowed to be purchased by the prisoners, or obtained by them from their friends (See Discipline).

The proportion of the fines due to the turnkeys upon conviction of persons detected by them introducing spirituous liquors into the prison, is also applied to this fund.

A regular debtor and creditor account is kept, balanced, and laid before the grand jury at the assizes. There appears to have been a balance, at the Summer assizes, of 93*l.* 11*s.* 9½*d.* in favour of the fund.

Accounts, Expenditure, Prison Books.—The salaries are paid quarterly, tradesmen's bills as they come in, and after examination by order of petty or quarter sessions. An audit of the county accounts, which are made up to the 1st of June in each year, takes place at the general sessions, held annually at Preston. The monies for the bills do not pass through the keeper's hands, but are paid by the county treasurer.

This book shows on the plan of a Military-Duty Roster, how often every prisoner of each class has been worked upon the Tread-wheel within a given space of time, and is invariably laid before those who complain of being irregularly worked. The letter P signifies the prisoner to have been absent on account of punishment. B W absent, employed beaming warps.

In addition to the books enumerated, a number of minor ones are kept by the turnkeys.

The accounts and books are kept in a manner very creditable to all parties.

Debtors.—The conduct and situation of the debtors in this prison presents no difference to that of others of the same class elsewhere, with the exception of those from the Courts of Requests, which are adverted to at large, in another portion of these reports (see p. 50). The officers state that they are frequently intoxicated; occasionally found playing at cards; they make rules for themselves, and in spite of every precaution, garnish is demanded from fresh men, on their coming in. That in two of the rooms a species of tavern or boarding-house is kept, on the following principle:—the debtors, each of whom is allowed to introduce a quart of ale into the prison daily, give the beer to the individual providing board, who makes an allowance or set-off for it, and then sells the ale at a higher rate to visitors or others requiring it. The price of the beer outside the prison is 6*d.*, but immediately it gets within the walls its value is enhanced to 1*s.* One-half of the poor debtors live out of the richer ones not only by bartering their beer for food, but also in selling it the moment it gets into their hands. It never occurs but what the whole quantity of one quart a head is taken, although it is notorious many of them are without a farthing, and drawing the county allowance. They are stated, as a class, to be very inferior of late years to those who preceded them; only one out of 117, the number on the day of inspection, was drinking wine, or living in any degree of luxury. The introduction of spirits appears to be carried to a very considerable extent; numerous detections have taken place—two persons were convicted within a fortnight. A female, who had been in the habit of bringing provisions to sell to the prisoners, was one of those detected. She said, "It was no use for a person who had a living to gain, not to bring spirits in, for they could do nothing without it." The debtors' rooms are dirty, which may be partly occasioned by there being no public kitchen, and their being obliged to cook in the common rooms. A prisoner under contempt of the Court of Pleas at Lancaster, for not signing certain deeds, has been confined for twenty years: he is now seventy-five years of age*. Every attempt has been made to induce him to comply with the order of the Court, but in vain. He has now been subsisted by the county for many years. The following sums are paid by each debtor on selecting his room, and he receives from the keeper a printed notice to this effect:—

Lancaster Castle, August Assizes, 1826.

Lancaster Castle, July, 1834.

Debtors committed to this Gaol are cautioned against the payment of any money (in addition to the contributions called room's-money), in the name of Garnish, Footing, or Present, which is by law declared illegal, and is forbidden by the prison rules to be paid or taken. It is also strongly recommended that no liquor be given as a present, or otherwise, on a new member's admission into any of the rooms.

The debtors are advised, as early as possible after their commitment to gaol, to attentively read the prison rules and regulations, and the caution relative to signing petitions to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors; printed copies of which are posted under the arcades.

No debtor is to remove from the room of which he in the first instance makes choice, or to which he is sent, without previously obtaining the consent of the keeper for such removal.

The keeper states "that the debtors' room-money is paid to the roomsman, or treasurer (a debtor) of each apartment; and it is, or ought to be, applied towards the general disbursements of the room for coals, candles, &c. It is altogether a private concern of the debtors themselves."

Discipline.—The ensuing remarks upon the discipline of this prison are not intended to apply to the administration, but to the system. The whole of the officers male and female, without exception declare their opinion that it has nothing of a deterring or corrective effect. The prisoners are frequently heard making comparisons with the other county prisons, and invariably giving the preference to Lancaster Castle. The labour here imposed is much less than would be requisite to earn a livelihood without: a hatter exclaimed a short time since upon his discharge, "I must now work a great deal harder than I have been doing here;" and prisoners are frequently heard to declare themselves a great deal worse off out of the prison than within. That prisoners should feel thus can create no surprise, when even those employments which most tend to dissipate and enliven the monotonies of a prison life are made the objects of temporal advantage, such as paying them for singing in the chapel, &c. It cannot be supposed likely that men in such circumstances will voluntarily attend a schoolmaster for instruction, their minds pre-occupied with the stimulus of gain. I annex a return of the forty-seven prisoners employed, on the day of inspection, and receiving weekly pay; and another, of the sums above 20*s.* paid to prisoners as earnings, for a period of seven months:—

The prisoners still occupy their day-rooms, silence is not enforced and the buzz of conversation still pervades this establishment. Pens, ink, and paper are indiscriminately allowed to all prisoners who are able to purchase, or have friends to do so for them, with which they occupy themselves without the least restraint as to subject or time. Another authorised evil is the constant practice of the prisoners writing petitions to the magistrates or the keeper, either for the redress of fancied grievances, or for the obtaining of indulgences. I annex the following extract from the surgeon's journal, as an illustrative example:—

"A petition signed by seventeen prisoners in the next ward praying the exemption of ——— from the labour of the tread-wheel, on the ground of his suffering under, what they call, a severe asthmatical complaint. I had ——— called out; he declared he knew nothing of this petition till last night, nor did he wish such a measure to be taken. He is a quiet orderly man, and is willing to continue the labour of the wheel, and I see no reason why he should not. He is not asthmatic, but has been subject to a cough. I consider this petition an impertinent interference, which ought to be treated as an attempt to dictate or intimidate."

A very extraordinary and which appears to me an injudicious privilege is, that the prisoners in two large dormitories are permitted to have candles until nine o'clock in the winter, without being under the immediate control or observation of any officer, the monitors solely being responsible for the lights being put out at that hour. These rooms are of themselves great obstacles to good discipline, but this license tends to make them still more detrimental. It is done, I understand, with the view of allowing the prisoners to read to, and mutually instruct each other. Fighting, quarrelling, and disturbances take place, and in going into one of the rooms at ten o'clock at night, the odour of tobacco smoke was strongly perceptible. I conceive this privilege creates an invidious distinction between equals in guilt, and increases immeasurably the power of the keeper by affording him the means of varying in degree the sentences of the law.

Until very lately, a convicted felon was placed at the exterior gate with occasionally the key in his possession, to assist the turnkey in his duty; he received for this office 2*s.* a-week, and was discharged on suspicion of intriguing with a female debtor. A debtor now performs this duty.

The debtors have the opportunity of communicating with the cooks, who cross their yard when carrying provisions to the females. A most serious inconvenience is that of the females having to pass through the whole extent of the debtors' yard to reach the chapel, and being frequently shouted at and signalled to on their way by this class of prisoners. This might easily be obviated, by the chaplain performing an additional daily service to the women on their side of the prison, no very material increase to his most important labours. The constant influx of visitors to this prison from motives of curiosity is replete with experienced inconveniences, and very objectionable.

One prisoner, named ——, is detained here during his Majesty's pleasure, who was acquitted of murder, upon the ground of insanity, and was sent to the County Lunatic Asylum on Sept. 4, 1835, and returned therefrom to the gaol as cured upon the 7th of March, 1836. Addiction to liquor is described to have been the exciting cause of his distraction of mind. He is now perfectly tranquil and free from excitement, but has never adverted to the circumstances of his situation. He attends the chapel regularly, and has partaken of the sacrament. He is placed in a ward with two or three prisoners for bail. He boards with the principal turnkey, taking his meals with him, is allowed tobacco, but no beer. He pays 1*l.* a-week for victuals and washing. The same turnkey likewise provides the prisoners with pens, ink, and paper, from which he derives a trifling profit, in both cases contrary to law. The general evidence of the officers is to the effect that transportation is much more regarded as a punishment than was formerly the case, and that the effect of solitary confinement varies according to the disposition of the prisoner.

In conclusion I have only to add the opinion of the keeper, who says " The discipline of the prison is not of a deterring nor of a reformatory nature, which is evidenced by the number of times the same prisoner will be found here. The duration of confinement has no beneficial effect upon the prisoners; in fact, I rather consider it the reverse: they cannot be improved by coming here." A complete revision of the discipline at present carried on in this prison appears to me absolutely necessary. The enforcement of silence, the total abolition of temporal advantages, a compulsory system of moral and religious instruction, with other healthful regulations, would palliate, if not altogether remove the great disadvantages of inconvenient construction, and at least clear Lancaster Castle from the moral obloquy of being preferred by the criminal population to the other prisons of the county.

Courts of Requests' Prisoners.

CHESHIRE AND LANCASHIRE.—Courts of Requests' Prisoners.

A great proportion of the prisoners for debt in Chester and Lancaster Castles are sent from the numerous Courts of Requests for the recovery of small debts in these counties, and my attention has been most forcibly drawn to the oppressive circumstances of the prevailing practice of these Courts both upon the creditor and debtor. The Acts of Parliament for regulating these jurisdictions compel debtors in execution to be taken to the county gaol, however distant, there to undergo their respective periods of imprisonment. Several of the towns possessing these Courts are at very considerable distances from Lancaster Castle. Stayley Bridge is 61 miles, Ashton-under-Lyne 62, Manchester 54, and the general average of distances from Chester Castle is 37 miles. The officers receive one shilling a-mile for conducting prisoners. The mode of proceeding in execution is similar in all these places, and I take Manchester as an example. The plaintiff must go to the officer of the Court and pay 5*s*., in addition to fees previously paid, and a further sum of 2*l*. 15*s*., at the rate of 1*s*. per mile, for conducting the defendant to Lancaster Castle, there to remain for as many days as there are shillings constituting the debt. If the verdict be for 5*l*., the defendant must remain in prison 100 days, and for a lesser sum in proportion. The officers of the Court who receive the writs against the person, and execute them, generally detain the prisoners at a public-house for the night, and early in the morning conduct them to Lancaster Castle. The following is the substance of evidence obtained from the officers of the two county prisons on the subject. " The officers of the Courts take the prisoners up late at night, without giving them opportunities to see their friends. I have known their friends frequently arrive here (Lancaster Castle) shortly after them, ready to pay the debt. According to the rule of some of these Courts, a prisoner cannot be discharged without an order signed by 3 Commissioners. The money cannot be received at the prison." An officer at Chester Castle says, " I have known four or five brought at a time, they seldom bring one. The coach fare is 7*s*.; I think if they bring 3 they make a profit of half the conduct-money." The debtors' turnkey at Lancaster Castle says, " The officers from the Courts of Requests bring six, seven, or eight at a time. The expense of bringing a man from Manchester by the fly packet is 7*s*., and I think the utmost possible expense to be a guinea. I have heard many of these prisoners complain that they have been brought all the way from Manchester without touching meat or drink, and they ask for the county allowance within 10 minutes of their being turned into the gaol."

The profits upon the conducting these prisoners to gaol must be enormous. The officer, if he holds two or three executions against the same individual, is entitled to the 1*s*. a-mile upon each. The grievous expense thus incurred in executions against the person in these Courts has given rise to another practice; the formation of Unions among the tradesmen to pay the expenses of sending prisoners to gaol, for in all cases these charges fall upon the creditor. Mr. Thomas, the intelligent deputy-constable of Manchester, says, " The tradesmen, from the harassment, inconvenience, and expense which they would otherwise be subject to in recovering debts from unprincipled and knavish debtors, owing to the distance of the county gaol from this town, have formed themselves into protection societies to reimburse the members the expense of sending them, of which there are two or three in Manchester. Fraudulently disposed debtors find out whether their creditors belong to a society or not; and if so, knowing that they cannot put them to inconvenient expense, they settle with them at once. If not belonging to the society, the debtor prefers a journey to Lancaster at the creditor's expense—never less than 3*l*. The officers who receive the processes here and convey the prisoners to Lancaster Castle are appointed by the Earl of Sefton, and Sir Oswald Mosley, Bart.; and at times, I am told, they take a number of small debtors together, making some 20*l*. or 30*l*. profit, at the expense of the unfortunate creditors."

The debtor, at the expiration of the term of his imprisonment, finds himself at a distance of upwards of 50 miles from his home, without resources. The poverty of this class of prisoners is such, that during the time of imprisonment they are, almost without exception, provided with food at the expense of the county. The evil here developed has arisen entirely from the obligation to commit this description of prisoners to the distant county gaols. I cannot forbear referring to the well-managed prisons at Halifax and Bradford, erected purposely for debtors from the Courts of Requests in those localities, and consequently free from such abuse.

I subjoin a specimen of a writ against the person where the debt amounted to 1*s*. 9*d*., the writ and conduct-money to 2*l*. 17*s*. 9*d*., and the imprisonment 20 days.

The Court of Requests, for the Parish of Ashton-under-Lyne, in the County Palatine of Lancaster; and the several Townships of Stayley, Hattersley, Matley, Newton, and Dukinfield, in the County Palatine of Chester.

To John Harrop and Charles Hibbert, sergeants of the said Court, and to the keeper of the common gaol of the said County Palatine of Chester.

The Commissioners present in the Court, on the nineteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, having, pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, awarded execution against the body of Levi Taylor of Stalybridge, debtor on a judgment of the said Court to Samuel Pearson, of the same place, for a debt of one shilling and nine-pence, and costs eight shillings, hereon indorsed, and the said Commissioners having ordered that the said debtor be committed to the said gaol, until he shall perform and obey the said judgment for the space of twenty days.

These are therefore to authorize and require you the said sergeants, to take within the jurisdiction of the said Court, and carry and convey the said debtor to the said gaol, and you the said keeper to receive and take into your custody the said debtor for the space of time aforesaid; whom you are not to discharge, or suffer to go at large before the expiration of the time, without a warrant or order for that purpose in writing signed in Court, by three or more of the said Commissioners, pursuant to the said statute, under the penalty of twenty pounds. Given under my hand and seal, this twentieth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.

PRESTON.—County House of Correction.

Preston. County House of Correction.

This prison is conveniently situate on an open space of ground in the outskirts of the town of Preston. The exterior wall is of brick, with flanking towers subsequently added for defence. They are loopholed for musketry, and furnished with small guns mounted upon traversing carriages. These defences were made some years ago at a very considerable expense, for the safety of the prison when threatened by the populace; and I cannot forbear remarking the futility of them in a military point of view, inasmuch as they protect every approach but the weakest, and where the most danger is to be apprehended; the one by the Sessions-house, which stands in a line with and forms part of the boundary wall, its windows looking into the interior of the prison. The keeper's house, but lately erected, is likewise built in the exterior wall; it is faced with rusticated free-stone, and neither corresponds nor harmonizes in design with the other prison buildings, and is deficient in the convenient quality of commanding a view of the interior. It contains on the ground floor two parlours, kitchen, laundry, &c.; first floor, two chambers; attic, four chambers and brewhouse. The adjoining lodge is appropriated to the porter, keepers' offices, armory, receiving-room, and two lock-ups for the borough prisoners. This prison, erected at the same time with those of Liverpool and Salford, under the direction of Mr. Howard, has been subjected to various alterations and extensions, from time to time, as the necessity for increased accommodation occurred, no less destructive of the simplicity of its original form than of its present convenience. The sleeping-cells are in single ranges, and differ in one respect from any I have yet seen; the staircases and galleries leading to them being on the outside of the building. The galleries consist simply of a stone coping or landing let into the exterior wall, guarded by a slight iron balustrade. These passages are unprotected from the weather by any covering. This arrangement affords great facility to inspection, and at night it is scarcely possible to talk, from one cell to another, without being detected by the watchman in the area below. The cells for the refractory are in the towers before-mentioned. They are dark, wanting in ventilation, and only fit for a confinement of a few hours' duration. The ordinary sleeping-cells are made use of in cases of prisoners sentenced to solitary confinement.

| 7 | Solitary cells, | 6 ft. 6 in. by 7 ft. 8 in. | do. |
| 6 | Refractory cells, | 7 ft. by 3 ft., | 8 ft. high. |

The part of the prison appropriated to females is very deficient in convenience. The upper range of cells look over the country; the inner divisional walls are not sufficient to keep the women from constantly clambering over them, and the matron's apartments, which are very circumscribed, afford no means of inspection. A better arrangement is very desirable. The hospital is detached and sufficiently commodious, but inconveniently situated. The chapel is light and well ventilated; it has a gallery with separate entrance for the females. The privies are very ill constructed. The soil remains in cesspools in the yards, and every three months the prisoners are employed in emptying and carrying their contents beyond the walls.

Diet.—Sundays and Wednesdays, 4½ ounces of meal, morning and evening; 20 ounces of bread, served in three portions, morning, noon, and night; ½ lb. of beef unboiled and with the bone, which, when boiled, will make ¼ lb. of solid meat; 1 lb. of potatoes, and ½ an ounce of salt. Mondays and Thursdays, meal, bread, and salt, as on Sundays; soup for dinner made from the bones, and broth left then, with ½ a pint of peas. Tuesdays and Fridays, meal, bread, and salt, as usual, ½ lb. of potatoes, and 2 ounces of cheese. Saturday, meal, bread, and salt, as usual; soup for dinner, made from one cow-head for every 20 prisoners, and 4 only to be used. For every other 20 prisoners, 12 lbs. of stew, and ½ a pint of peas to each. The untried are permitted, in addition to this liberal diet, to receive from their friends or purchase 2 lbs. of bread and 1 lb. of cheese weekly. The keeper furnishes the extra food ordered by the surgeon at the following rate: Dinners, 8*d.* each; broth as dinners; milk for tea, ¼*d.* each. An extra allowance of food, consisting of 10 ounces of bread daily, and ¼ lb. of cheese, is given to prisoners employed about the prison, and of 6 ounces of bread to those at the wheel. Women with infants receive an additional ½ lb. of bread and a pint of milk daily. The prisoners take their meals in a detached building of two stories, the felons in the upper floor, in the lower the misdemeanants and untried. Strict silence is maintained during meals, a turnkey being present in each room. The bread is good seconds, and all the provisions of excellent quality. The dietary appears to me sufficiently ample without any increase to those at the tread-wheel, or engaged in light employments. The surgeon states the diet to be equal in quantity to that of the class of labourers in the country. The principal turnkey states, " The boys, who have the same allowance as the men, cannot eat all their food. On Tuesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, and particularly on the latter day, when the soup is very strong, I have seen them leave half their food. I have heard prisoners say they get more to eat in the prison than outside." Another turnkey says, " There are a great many here who are better off than those without. I have heard them say so. Some of them have so much food they can hardly eat it; some pick out the best bits and leave the rest; others eat till they can scarcely bide."

Clothing.—Convicted felons, a parti-coloured dress of red and yellow frieze, two shirts, clogs, and cap. Convicted misdemeanants, similar to the felons; the colour of the frieze grey. Women, parti-coloured jacket, blue petticoat, white cap, clogs, and body linen.

Bedding.—Paillasse, two blankets, one rug in summer, two in winter.

Heat.—The sleeping-cells are not warmed. Fuel is allowed to the day-rooms from October to March.

Cleanliness.—The greatest attention is paid to this necessary quality. Frequent inspection of the prisoners' persons, who are regularly mustered for this purpose, and daily ones of the cells, are made by the keeper. The rooms occupied by the debtors are an exception to the general cleanliness of the prison. They were very dirty and disorderly on the day of inspection.

Health.—The attendance of the surgeon is daily, and oftener when required. He inspects the prisoners before they are classed. Cases of itch, gonorrhœa, and syphilis are common, but mostly confined to the vagrants; catarrhs and inflammatory fevers occasionally prevail. Cases of small-pox likewise occur. The surgeon states, "there is no prejudice, but much indifference to vaccination in the vicinity." The good health of the prisoners is remarkable. When a case of fever occurs, an order is procured from a magistrate, and the patient is removed to the Fever Hospital, a parochial establishment in Preston. A fixed sum is paid by the county, and the prisoner returns when in a state of convalescence. The surgeon keeps no sick-book nor journal. There is a room appropriated as a surgery, where the medicines are dispensed. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services on the Sabbath, and reads prayers daily from March to October at half-past seven, and the remainder of the year at half-past eight. He generally spends, upon an average, two hours daily in the prison. He administers the sacrament four times a-year. He states, upon this subject, "I have great difficulty about the sacrament. I have a great many applications, but am convinced by far the greater number of them are made with the view of grounding thereon a demand for future favours and indulgence." The usual number of communicants are about 8. The cooks, women with children, and the nurses at the hospital, do not attend divine service. He sees the prisoners privately; an opportunity is afforded him of doing so as they come out of chapel, but says, his ministry in this respect has not its full scope, in consequence of the labour. The books, with the exception of those provided by the Roman Catholic minister to prisoners of that persuasion, are under his superintendence. There is but an imperfect provision for the instruction of the male prisoners, it being restricted to the untried. A schoolmaster attends for two hours daily. All the convicted are so much occupied by the labour to which they are sentenced, that they are not spared for instruction. Many of the prisoners are supplied with elementary books, and at meal times and in the mornings in the summer, there is a kind of mutual instruction carried on among themselves. The uneducated form a proportion of about 3 to 1. A library has been established, on a similar plan to the one at Lancaster Castle. It contains the whole of the publications of the Religious Tract Society, and an extensive selection from those of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. On Sunday evenings the volumes are exchanged and distributed. The book most frequently asked for is Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. Bibles are not furnished promiscuously, but at the request of the prisoners. No attempt is made to instruct the females. The chaplain sees them three or four times a-week, in the matron's apartments. The chaplain further states, that the discipline of the prison is not of a deterring nor reformatory character; he considers that without total silence, or total separation, it is in fact injurious rather than otherwise, particularly as regards the boys; that if 5 boys came in charged with felony, 3 of them would continue coming in until transported. The boys are generally from the cotton-mills. The prisoners from the towns are most intelligent; the greater number who come from the rural districts are half weavers half farmers, and though uncouth, are more quiet than those from the towns. There is a great desire among them for instruction, and a great want of primary schools, particularly in the neighbourhood of Blackburn. The criminal population are much more fearful of transportation than they were. The debtors attend divine service. The chaplain keeps no general private character book, but a register of untried prisoners, from which the following are extracts:—

———, age 30, the wife of a spinner from Glasgow. She was discharged only four days ago from a short confinement for vagrancy. She admits her guilt, which took place at a public-house. Quite uneducated.

———, age 15, factory boy, from Preston. He admits his fault, which arises from idleness. The factory in which he worked had been stopped for a few days, and he committed the theft the day after it stopped. Quite uneducated.

He also keeps a journal of his attendances and duties performed. I make the following interesting extracts from one of the several valuable reports of the chaplain, to the quarter-sessions, dated October 1836, not only with the view of availing myself of its information, but likewise with the hope that it may operate, by example, in producing similar ones from other establishments:—

THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

The commitments upon charges of felony to the Preston gaol, during the year ending at the sessions of June last, were as follows:—

II.
NORTHERN AND EASTERN DISTRICT.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Lancashire.

|---|---|---|---|
| Tried at the October sessions, | 1835 | . . . | 54 |
| „ January „ | 1836 | . . . | 30 |
| „ April „ | „ | . . . . | 54 |
| „ June „ | „ | . . . | 49 |
| | | | 187 |

These numbers show an increase of 19, as compared to the criminals of the preceding year. It is, however, hoped that the offences themselves have been less serious in character, as there is a great diminution in the number of those cases visited by the penalty of transportation. The following will show the results of indictments for felonious offences for each of the last three years:—

| | 1835–6. | 1834–5. | 1833–4. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Transported for life | 1 | 3 | 9 |

* Less than one-eighth of the whole. † Less than one-fifth of the whole. ‡ Less than one-fourth of the whole.

Deeming it important, in a statistical view, to ascertain the age at which persons are most frequently led into crime, I present the following particulars for the last year:—

| | | | | About per cent. on the whole. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1st class | under 15 | 11, | including 2 females | 6 |
| 2nd | between 15 and 20 | 43, | „ 8 „ | 23 |
| 3rd | 21 and 30 | 65, | „ 13 „ | 35 |
| 4th | 31 and 40 | 41, | „ 10 „ | 22 |
| 5th | 41 and 50 | 14, | „ 3 „ | 7½ |
| 6th | upwards of 50 | 13, | „ 5 „ | 7 |
| | | 187 | 41 | |

A similar table, formed from an aggregate of the four years ending July, 1835, and presented in my last Report, showed that—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| The 1st class then furnished | 8½ | per cent. | upon the whole. |
| 2nd class „ | 29 | „ | „ |
| 3rd class „ | 35 | „ | „ |
| 4th class „ | 12 | „ | „ |
| 5th class „ | 8 | „ | „ |
| 6th class „ | 6½ | „ | „ |

It is thus seen that the commission of offences by young persons under 21 has diminished 8 per cent.; that the proportion of offences by persons between 21 and 30, and by those of 41 and upwards, is unchanged; and that there is an increase of offenders between 31 and 40 of no less than 10 per cent. The decrease of criminality among young persons may, I trust, be justly attributed to the efforts now made to extend the blessings of religious education. The great increase in criminals of the 4th class I confess myself unable to account for.

Every one anxious to discover means for the prevention of crime, will naturally be interested in discovering the causes which produce it. The unfortunate subjects of the following table have, themselves, voluntarily furnished the information from which the cause of their delinquency is inferred. In the great majority of cases, the information thus obtained is, I am persuaded, substantially correct. It will be remembered, however, that there are many instances of commitment for felony, in which the accused deny all connexion with, or knowledge of, the transactions in which they are supposed to be criminally implicated; and in these cases, of course, no information can be gained tending to show in what the offence, or at least cause for suspicion, originated.

CAUSES of OFFENCE in 187 Prisoners committed under charge of Felony during the Year ending 30th June, 1836.

| Causes of Offence. | 1st Class under 15. | 2nd Class 15 to 20. | 3rd Class 21 to 30. | 4th Class 31 to 40. | 5th Class 41 to 50. | 6th Class 51 and up. | Total. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Weak Intellects | .. | .. | .. | .. | 1 | .. | 1 |
| Temptation | .. | .. | 3 | 3 | 2 | .. | 8 |
| Want and Distress | .. | 2 | 4 | 2 | .. | 4 | 12 |
| Confirmed bad character | 3 | 18 | 1 | .. | 1 | .. | 23 |
| Allege Innocence, &c. and various causes | 8 | 10 | 23 | 12 | 6 | 7 | 66 |
| Drunkenness | .. | 13 | 34 | 24 | 6 | .. | 77 |
| | 11 | 43 | 65 | 41 | 16 | 11 | 187 |

When it is recollected that the above table is formed from the statements of the prisoners themselves, it may appear somewhat surprising that so few of them have urged the plea of want, in extenuation of their offences; but in detailing to me the circumstances connected with their faults, they manifest a remarkable degree of candour; and if they admit their guilt at all, they seldom attempt to palliate it by plausible excuses, or by any endeavour to explain away the amount of their guilt. Still, as already intimated, there is a certain and considerable portion of the class now under consideration who deny all knowledge of the offences charged against them—(either because they are really innocent, or because they are unwilling to lose any chance of escape at the sessions,)—though their guilt and its cause may subsequently appear upon their trials. These cases are included in the foregoing table, under the head "allege innocence," &c.,—though many of them ought rather to be referred, as the facts subsequently brought to light would authorise,—to the cause which stands next in order—"drunkenness." Under that head, great as its amount is, are included those offences only which took place in ale and beer-houses, or which were committed while the offenders were under the influence of intoxication. The criminality of the habitual drunkard, whose excesses have, at length, led him into a more serious violation of the law, but who may have been perfectly sober at the time when he perpetrated his offence, is not assigned, in the above table, to his besetting sin as its cause: but I entertain no doubt, that if all the particulars connected with a criminal's guilt were made known, or if the general habits could be ascertained, that origin of crime, which now appears accountable for only 77 offences out of 187, would manifest itself as little short of universal. In illustration of this opinion I will here mention the case of an offender, who, at my interviews with him, denied his guilt altogether, and asserted, what was true, that he was perfectly sober at the time when his imputed criminality took place. All the circumstances of this case were afterwards made known to me, from unquestionable authority; and it then appeared that the unfortunate subject of it had been constantly drinking for some time previous to the commission of the theft for which he was sent to gaol,—the money which enabled him to indulge his ruinous propensity having been, there is no doubt, improperly obtained, and the sum which he was charged with stealing having also been taken to furnish means for a continuation of his excesses. Here then was a man, rather well informed as compared to the great mass of criminals, committing a daily theft for the express purposes of daily intoxication.

Of the 198 male and female prisoners committed to the house of correction, between the 1st July of the present year and this date (16th October), for various offences, felonies, and misdemeanors, 88 of those offences are either the DIRECT consequences of drunkenness, or the offenders were more or less under its influence, when their apprehension took place. The following table will show some further particulars connected with this subject in a more precise form:—

The great origin of crime is here only too evident. Mere ignorance of religious truth does not necessarily lead a man into the more open violations of the law, because there still remains the check arising from the apprehension of human justice; but habits of intoxication, or even an occasional excess, are certain to produce forgetfulness of the penalties of the law, as well as of the precepts of religion, even with those who are not altogether uneducated; and it is worthy of remark, that of 22 men and 3 women who, in the table following, are classed as being able to read and write with facility, the offences of 15 of them are attributed to intoxication.

Considering it of importance to ascertain, upon every occasion of delinquency, the degree of education possessed by the offenders, I present the following result of a minute inquiry in every case of the 164 males and 34 females already mentioned:—

Of 164 male prisoners committed for various offences—

97 were altogether unable to read,
32 could barely read,
29 could read the easier portions of the Testament,
1 could read well, but not write at all,
7 could read well and write a little,
5 could read and write well.

Of 34 females—

16 were unable to read,
10 could barely read,
4 could read the easier portions of the Testament,
1 could read well, but not write,
2 could read well and write a little,
1 could read and write very well.

When occupied in the inquiries necessary to form this table, I become more and more sensible of the error which would confound the bare capability to read and write with what, in its most limited sense, can be termed "education." It is certainly mistaking the means for the end to suppose that a man is educated, when, by having been taught how to use books, he is only put into a capacity for attaining education—for cultivating his understanding and regulating his principles. Of all the persons comprised in the above tables, there are not more than 14 or 15 to whom the term "educated" is at all applicable. It is melancholy to find so many persons who, not having learned to read, are, consequently, incapable of much self-improvement—and so many, too, insensible to the advantages which this qualification places within their reach. But it is a far more melancholy thing to discover, that among all these unfortunate persons there are only eight whom I dare venture to consider as possessing a competent knowledge of the religion which they profess! Included in this small number are 5 who have been, at some period of their lives, regular readers of the Bible, and whom I found able to answer a few ordinary questions connected with its historical books. There were 10 men and 1 woman who appeared to have been occasional readers of the Holy Scriptures, but who were, nevertheless, unable to meet a very simple examination as to their knowledge of them; 33 females and 145 males could not repeat the words of the Lord's prayer; but 11 of the former, and 85 of the latter—added to 1 female and 19 males who could not repeat that prayer—appear to be totally destitute of all religious knowledge beyond a certain vague impression that there is a state of retribution hereafter.

It is difficult to form, and to convey to others a clear idea of the minimum of religious knowledge possessed by any class of persons; but it may afford some approach to a correct estimate of the pitiable ignorance of these criminals, when I state that the whole 116 were unable to answer the question, "Who is your Redeemer?" If the term "Saviour" were used in the inquiry, the reply, in some few cases, was a little more satisfactory; although in all there was evinced an entire ignorance of the nature and purpose of His mission. These facts will, no doubt, create a feeling of sad surprise in those who may be interested in the spiritual welfare of our brethren of the labouring class; and it will, perhaps, occasion no less surprise that, among this number of persons living in acknowledged habits of irreligion, I have not met with one instance in which the expectation of admission into heaven was disavowed. Wilfully neglecting the most important religious duties—not to say deliberately committing the most serious sins, they had no dread of consequences hereafter; while at the same time they would own, with strange and lamentable inconsistency, that eternal happiness is only attainable by, to use their own words, "being good!" It may well be supposed that public worship has not often been attended by these persons, and such is the fact: the great majority of them have entirely neglected all observance of the Lord's day for years, and some have owned to me that they have never entered a place of worship, except upon some occasion of idle curiosity.

The chaplain states that the most beneficial effects, as regards the decrease of crime, have resulted from the establishment of Temperance Societies within the town of Preston, and I may add on their behalf, that the cause they advocate is almost the only one in which enthusiasm can do no harm. The following are instances of reform in individuals residing there, who have been inmates of the House of Correction, or of Lancaster Castle:—

———, sizer: was once a respectable tradesman, but, in consequence of drinking, his affairs became embarrassed, and he was sent to Lancaster Castle for debt: has been a consistent member for more than two years.

———, painter: was in business for eight years, had a good prospect before him, and might soon have realized an independency had it not been for drunkenness; he also was sent to Lancaster Castle for debt. When liberated he joined the Society, and has been a member since 1833: is now attentive to business, and his prospects are of the most cheering kind.

———, wheelwright: has been a most abandoned character, was a terror to the neighbourhood where he resided; he states that he has been in almost every prison in Lancashire, for fighting, drinking, and neglecting his family. He joined the Society in October, 1834, and, though he had been a drunkard for nearly thirty years, has been consistent since that time. He is very industrious, and about nine days ago he was looking after a lot of ground to build a house and shop on for himself.

———, plasterer: was a confirmed drunkard for thirty years, and was one of the most abandoned characters in this town; he was a great fighter, and was commonly known by the name of "Young Spring;" he has frequently been in prison for disorderly conduct. He has been a member of the Society nearly four years: when he first joined it he was a poor man, scarcely any furniture in his house; he commenced business with four pennyworth of lime, and now he and his brother (who was almost as vile as he was) are in partnership; they have forty-three men and apprentices working for them; they have more work than all the other plasterers in Preston together; the houses in which they live are their own.

———, mole-catcher: was a drunkard for a considerable number of years; he also has been in prison, but, since he became a teetotaler, which is more than three years since, is quite an altered man in every respect.

Classification.—The debtors, from the Borough Court, are confined in this prison, and the females are most improperly placed with the criminals of the misdemeanant class.

Labour.—The tread-wheels are in four separate buildings, with open iron bars in front, forming a circular area, with the machinery in the centre.

The keeper and the miller purchase the grain in the market. The flour is disposed of by retail. The quantity sold daily averages about 310lbs., and the sum received weekly is about 14*l.* The purchasers are generally of the poorer class. It is sold at a trifle less than the retail price in the town. This retailing of flour at the gate, brings a number of persons to the prison, occupies much of the officers' time, and causes a prisoner to be occupied all day close to the gate in carrying the meal from the interior of the prison. Prohibited articles have been introduced, and a prisoner effected his escape by the facilities afforded by what I consider, to say the least, a very inconvenient practice. The employments are weaving, picking wool, cooking, painting, carpentering, gardening, &c.; the weavers receive one-fourth of their earnings: the others are remunerated with extra provisions: the females make, mend, and wash the male prisoners' clothes and linen.

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences, misbehaviour on the wheel, fighting, and climbing over the walls of the yards. The punishment inflicted is almost without exception three days' solitary confinement. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Irons.—Refractory prisoners, 19 lbs.; transports, 6 lbs. The keeper states that it is the practice to place the convicts in irons immediately upon being sentenced to transportation, and without the written authority of a magistrate. There were no such prisoners at the period of inspection.

Scourge.—Handle, oak, twenty-five inches long; nine lashes, twenty inches long, of common whipcord, eight single knots in each; the whipping is inflicted by the porter, who receives 1*s.* for each punishment.

Visits and Letters.—Convicted prisoners are allowed to write at the discretion of the keeper, and to receive visits once in three months; the untried, once a-week, and oftener if thought proper.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The contracts for meat, bread, meal, and coals are made quarterly, by the magistrates at sessions. The bills are also sent in at the same periods, and after being examined, and laid before the magistrates at sessions, cheques for their respective amounts are signed by the magistrates, and paid by the county treasurer.

Keeper's Journal, with entries of his daily inspection of the cells, and the number of prisoners received and discharged. Sundry other small books are kept in connexion with the work and discipline of the prison. I have much satisfaction in stating that the books are well arranged and well kept; the only inconvenience is the number, which might be easily remedied by consolidation.

Debtors.—The debtors are stated to be occasionally noisy, and were very dirty in their persons and their rooms, on the day of inspection. I have before adverted to the grievance of placing the female debtors with a class of criminal prisoners. They are supplied with bedding by the county, and are allowed to have one quart of beer daily, and the use of tobacco.

Discipline.—The discipline maintained in this prison is of a very moderate character. Prisoners of all classes are constantly without the walls of the prison, employed in the keeper's grounds, or clearing the walks and avenues to the prison.

The taskmaster states, "the men who work in the garden get the extra allowance of bread and cheese; men are frequently at work there; he is chiefly with them; the ordinary number at work is four, sometimes six. When cleaning the privies (every three months) eight or ten are outside the prison; when out, he has frequently seen people attempt to speak to the prisoners." The remunerating of prisoners for such employments is bad enough of itself, but paying them with an extra allowance of food, when the diet is more than ample, appears quite preposterous and likely to encourage the very opposite to habits of frugality. The keeper says, "he is of opinion that not the least benefit arises from the prisoners having money on their discharge, for they almost invariably go to the first public-house. Every prisoner who has not money in his possession, receives a sum on leaving prison, not exceeding a penny a mile to carry him home."

Silence is not enjoined here: the keeper states, "he has no authority to enforce complete silence; it would be a great advantage if he had."

There appears to be considerable laxity in personal conduct, as well as in the performance of their duties, by the entire of the under officers. One of them I found lying on the ground while on duty, as watch over the men at the mill; they require very severe and unrelaxing superintendence. I regret also to be obliged to notice among the upper officers resident in the prison, a want of that unanimity so essential to the good government of such an establishment. Communication is constantly taking place between the male and female prisoners; the cooks have the complete run of the prison. The matron says, "that three times a-week untried prisoners are sent to a yard on the female side, to pump water into a reservoir; they are not attended by an officer, and the window in the yard in which they are at work looks from the room occupied by the females employed in sewing." The keeper states, as his opinion, "that no good would arise from extending the instruction to the convicted prisoners." I am quite convinced to the contrary, and most strongly recommend that the hours of the schoolmaster's attendance, now from one to three, should be so enlarged as to enable him to convey knowledge to all classes. The taskmaster says, " they seem to like the books; I have frequently heard the convicted felons express a wish to learn to read; they have even solicited me to place them together in a cell, after the hour of labour, that they might instruct each other." A change in the discipline of this prison is as easy of accomplishment as it would be salutary in practice.

Lancaster Castle being simply a gaol, vagrants cannot by law be committed thereto, and are frequently sent from Ulverstone and other districts at distances of sixty miles from Preston. The officers state that they come, in many cases, from these distant parts of the county unaccompanied by any constable, but are sent by carriers, and coachmen, and frequently arrive drunk at the prison.

Reports on Separate Prisons.
Lancashire.
Kirkdale.
Gaol and House of Correction.

KIRKDALE.—Gaol and House of Correction.

This prison is built on a fine elevated spot, commanding a noble view of the Mersey and surrounding scenery, and is about two miles distant from the Exchange at Liverpool. The area enclosed is nearly a square, slightly broken in upon by the Sessions-house on the south side, containing 5 a. 3 r. 27 p. It is surrounded by a brick wall 27 feet high. The keeper's house adjoins the principal entrance to the prison on the north side, and contains a basement with kitchen and offices; first floor, 4 rooms; second floor, 4 chambers. The windows in the rear of the house look into the prison. The lodge contains several rooms occupied as offices, lodgings for the turnkeys, and cells originally intended for receiving prisoners on their first coming in, but now perverted to other purposes. Stepping through the gateway into the interior, instead of the awe and gloom which are so naturally expected to pervade the abode of guilt, punishment, and it is to be hoped penitence, the eye is refreshed with the aspect of a prettily laid-out garden, with a fish-pond, shrubbery, and prisoners interspersed here and there, engaged in the indolent hard labour of cultivating flowers. The buildings for the prisoners consist of two detached wings of equal size for the males and females of semicircular form, with square projections at each angle. There are three floors in each wing; in the basements are the day-rooms, with seven airing-yards, radiating from a central lodge for turnkeys. In the rear are ranges of workshops running parallel with the main buildings.

Dimensions of Cells.

Refractory cells, 5 ft. 9 in. by 5 ft. 8 in., 6 ft. 4 in. high.

Sleeping cells, outer circle, broad end, 7 ft. 4 in. narrow end, 6 ft. 11 in. wide, 6 ft. 9 in. long, 10 ft. high.

Ditto, upper range, 9 ft. high.

The square cells in the projecting angles, 12 ft. by 6 ft. 10 in.

The tread-wheels and mill stand on the right of the gateway; the chapel in the centre of the area, with the kitchen, vestry, and schoolroom in its basement. The chapel contains seven divisions, with an open space in front of them, for prisoners. The turnkeys sit on elevated seats, with their faces towards the prisoners. The great and irremediable fault in the arrangement and planning of this prison was the division of it into two equal parts, for males and females, as though the number of offenders from the two sexes were in the same proportion. From the want of sufficient accommodation for the male prisoners in the wing originally set apart for them, the one for the females has been obliged to be made use of, and from their contiguity, frequent communication has been the consequence. The walls between the airing-yards are very low. The infirmary for the females and the laundry are very inconveniently placed under one roof. The water-closets on the female side of the prison appear to be deficient in the necessary supply of water. The cells are well ventilated, the drainage perfect, and the buildings not liable to accident from fire. The great insecurity of the prison is occasioned by permitting a daily ingress and egress through the Court-house, which is in charge of a female, and beyond the inspection of any of the male officers.

Dietary.—Breakfast and supper, one pint of gruel and half a pound of bread. Dinners alternately. 1st, One pint and a half of scouce, made from one pound and a half of potatoes, with meat, salt, and pepper. 2nd, One quart of broth made from cow-heads, with vegetables, meal, salt, pepper, and half a pound of bread. 3rd, Two ounces of bacon, and one pound and a half of potatoes.

Clothing.—The untried prisoners have no prison clothing, except under special circumstances. The clothing for the convicted consists of a jacket, trowsers, and cap, of coarse woollen frieze, shirt, and clogs. The colour of the misdemeanants' dress is blue; for felons, once convicted, grey and yellow; for those oftener than once, red and blue. Females, linen bedgown, day and night cap, cotton and flannel petticoat and shift.

Bedding.—The bedstocks are made of iron, with 3 planks in the centre. The bedding consists of a paillasse, rug, and two blankets.

Fuel.—Fires are lit in the day-rooms during the winter months, but there is no regulated allowance of fuel.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean. The prisoners, upon their coming in, are not washed nor properly cleansed. The itch has been communicated frequently within the prison.

Health.—The attendance of the surgeon is described, by himself, as regulated by circumstances. He resides at Liverpool, a considerable distance from the prison. The prisoners are not inspected by him previously to their being classed, there being no cells appropriated for their temporary reception on coming in. He is not present at corporal punishments. Has no general inspection of the prisoners. The prison is very healthy; occasionally there are cases of typhus. Eruptive and venereal disease are those of the most common occurrence. Dysentery was prevalent some years ago, but is now quite eradicated. He considers the dry rubbing, instead of washing the cells and passages in the winter, to have materially contributed to its cessation. The diet is much improved, and the health of the prisoners also, since herrings are no longer a part of it. The surgeon says, "Simulated disease is very frequent. They feign rheumatic fever by tying tight the hands, or leaning the arm over the edge of a bedstead until it swells. Eight prisoners were brought into the infirmary with violent purgings, vomitings, and the appearance of cholera. One man was so ill as to oblige me to tell him, that unless he told me how the illness was brought on, I could not save him; he confessed it was done by placing tobacco chews in the fundament. I consider the situation of the prisoners to be better than some, and as well off as many of the labouring class." In cases of infectious fever the surgeon has allowed tobacco to the nurse, a prisoner, and also a pint of ale when any of the prisoners have been ordered the same allowance. In cases of lying-in a female midwife attends. The surgeon keeps a journal, containing the dates of the admission, and disease of patients, with remarks. He also enters the dates of the visits in a book kept for that purpose. I cannot but observe, that I think it absolutely necessary that the surgeon to an establishment of this magnitude should visit it daily, be present at corporal punishments, and that he ought to comply with the wholesome regulations of the Gaol Act, and examine the prisoners before they are classed. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services on Sundays; to the males in the morning, to the females in the evening. On the week-days he reads morning prayers at 8 o'clock to the male prisoners in the chapel, and immediately afterwards to the females in one of the work-rooms. He generally spends several hours a-day in the prison. He administers the sacrament six times a-year, but not without due inquiry. He says, "I am not always satisfied with the motives, for I have found prisoners carrying on a system of deceit while engaged in taking it. One woman in particular, immediately after partaking of it, persuaded a female in another class to commit a robbery." He sees those prisoners who wish it privately in the vestry, also visits the sick in the infirmaries, and those sentenced to solitary confinement. He superintends the delivery of books to the prisoners. The tracts are generally provided from the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge. He says, "The issue of books was formerly indiscriminate, but finding them very generally mutilated, he restricted them to those only who asked for them. There is a paid schoolmaster who instructs the boys. There is no system of general instruction. Previous to the introduction of the tread-wheel there was a great deal more reading and attention than since. He thinks that when the body is very much fatigued, they are rather inclined to lie down than be instructed. Gross ignorance prevails among the prisoners; many of them who can even read are ignorant of the first principles of religion. They have, generally, before coming here, absented themselves for long periods from attending public worship. They do not often express any desire for instruction. There is no essential difference between the men and the women. Considers the discipline of the prison to have little or nothing in it of a deterring character. Has found himself disappointed in his general expectation of beneficial results, from the almost constant communication kept up between the prisoners. In one instance, a female, who was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, a very clever woman, of whom he had the greatest hopes, and who was to have gone after her discharge, to the Refuge at Liverpool, unfortunately met a male prisoner who was employed in whitewashing. From that time she refused to go to the Refuge, and he has every reason to think that the parties met upon their discharge from the prison. The Catholics form a very considerable proportion of the prisoners; generally they may be estimated at a third of the whole number. They are attended by a minister of that persuasion. A Roman Catholic clergyman of Liverpool applied to be permitted to make use of the chapel for divine service, but was not allowed. He proffered his request upon the grounds of this privilege being acceded in the gaols in Ireland. The demeanour of the transports is more respectable than it was. It would be very desirable to circulate tracts descriptive of their hardships in the penal settlements. There are no reception cells for prisoners: they are sent to their classes immediately. Thinks it would be very beneficial if he could see them in the first instance, before they get into the body of the prison." The prisoners employed as servants at the different lodges seldom attend divine service on Sundays, and never on other days at early prayers. The male cooks 6 in number, attend alternately on Sundays, 3 at a time; never on other days. Allowing for the difference in number, the same may be said of the female servants in the lodges and cookhouse. The weavers and joiners are not in the habit of attending early prayers during the summer months when they work before breakfast, but in winter they attend with the rest.

A society of ladies visit the prison, read to the females, and employ them in ornamental and useful needlework, which is disposed of for their benefit. The charitable ministration in which these ladies have so praiseworthily embarked, requires the application of the nicest address, and the suppression of all warmth of feeling or temper on their parts, the more so from the circumstance of many of the female prisoners being of the Roman Catholic persuasion.

The chaplain's journal contains entries of all duties performed by him, with occasional remarks upon the habits and conduct of the prisoners.

Schoolmaster.—The school is entirely confined to the boys. The schoolmaster examines them, when they come in, as to the degree of information they may possess. They are mostly employed in learning to read. They are taught occasionally arithmetic, as a reward for good conduct. Writing, which they express a great desire to learn, is taught upon slates, but the slates are not permitted to be taken out of the school-room. When the class is crowded, a prisoner is allowed to assist. The greatest number of boys under instruction at one time was 40. They are mostly very ignorant, and the children of Irish parents. The schoolmaster says "At first coming in they manifest no inclination to attend the school; they have occasionally insulted me, but they improve in conduct after a time."

The instruction of the boys was most loosely carried on. Upon visiting the school at various times, I found the boys in it without any superintendence, crouched and idling over the fire. The schoolmaster was on the eve of being discharged, and it is to be hoped that a more effective system is now in action. The schoolmaster keeps no register of the progress of those under his charge.

Classification.—Generally as laid down by the Gaol Act; but it does not, in some instances, at least, appear to be strictly adhered to. Two prisoners for trial were in the same yard with the convicts under sentence of transportation, but were removed on its being noticed.

Labour.—The hard labour to which the prisoners are subjected is merely nominal, the old offenders being only six hours a-day at work upon the wheel. The grain for the mill is generally supplied by the baker who contracts for the bread.

The taskmaster receives one-twelfth of the prisoners' earnings; felons, one-fourth; misdemeanants, one-half. The calculations, as to the real amount of prisoners' earnings in this prison, as is the case generally in others, are entirely fallacious; the salaries of those officers charged exclusively with the superintendence, the wear and tear, and repairs of machinery being omitted altogether. The sum received for grist ground at the tread-mill, from the 1st of June, 1835, to the 1st of June, 1836, was 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, which is accounted as earnings; the wages of the miller for the same period being 63*l.*, besides having the assistance of a prisoner in the mill, who received 6*d.* a-week for his services. The females are placed on the tread-mill when in sufficient numbers to work it; their ordinary employments are washing the keeper's, the officers', and prisoners' linen, and in ornamental and useful needle-work, provided for them by the society of charitable ladies. The following is a list of the employments of prisoners with the weekly remuneration paid. I cannot forbear expressing the decided opinion I entertain of the impropriety of these money payments for offices which are mere relaxations from hard labour:—

The taskmaster states "that a great deal of work is spoiled by beginners in weaving, for which an abatement in the price is made by the manufacturer. Young men will learn quicker than the older ones, and boys readier than any; some there are who cannot be taught. Men who reside in the neighbourhood of the cotton factories have a greater aptitude than those from a district purely agricultural. He considers it would be a great benefit if the tread-wheel power were applied, as at Lancaster Castle, to weaving, as the work if not attended to in that case would be spoiled, and detection of any inattention must immediately take place. At present, from the situation of the workshops, they may leave off and neglect their work, during the intervals of his visiting them. He now finds a great want of willingness among the boys in getting them to work at all. He thinks it is from early habits of idleness. There was a vast difference between the boys at Manchester and those at Liverpool; before the Factory Regulation Act was passed, they used to work at seven years of age; he cannot help thinking they were a great deal better at work than they are now at Liverpool." The tailors and shoemakers in the prison work at an under price for the officers, the taskmaster fixing the rate: the taskmaster keeps all accounts and books relating to the work carried on in the prison.

Offences and Punishments.—The general offences are fighting, creating disturbances, bartering provisions and destroying work, punished by stoppage of food and confinement in the solitary cells. Whipping when inflicted appears to be merely nominal in severity; from eight to twelve is the ordinary number of lashes: it is inflicted by one of the turnkeys. A birch is applied to the very young boys. The whipping takes place privately, in the presence of the keeper. The surgeon does not attend. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Scourge.—Handle, hard wood, seventeen inches; nine lashes, fifteen inches each in length, of very small whipcord; a single knot in each.

Irons.—Double, 7 lbs.; single, 3½ lbs. It has been the custom, contrary to the Gaol Act, for the keeper, immediately upon prisoners being sentenced to transportation, to place them in irons without any written authority from the magistrates.

Visits.—Convicted prisoners receive visits by orders from magistrates; the untried, once a-week. Letters are inspected by the keeper, and the writing of them is at his discretion.

Accounts, Books, Expenditure.—The clerk and steward has the entire superintendence and control of the prison accounts, and is perfectly independent of the keeper. The daily duty of the clerk is to ascertain the number of prisoners to be provided for during the day; he calculates the proportions of provisions required, and issues them to the officers charged with the distribution. The books are kept by double entry. Salaries are paid, weekly, to the under officers; monthly, to the matron; and quarterly, to the keeper, chaplain, and surgeon. The cash book is balanced monthly, and laid before the magistrates; when cash is wanted for immediate expenses, the signature of one magistrate is sufficient; two are required for the payment of bills. A summons is sent by the clerk to apprize the visiting justices of the day for the monthly meeting, which is ordinarily the second Tuesday in every month; at this meeting all the books and accounts are laid before them, the transactions of the previous month are audited, the bills presented for payment in the current month examined, and if ordered for payment, marked by the chairman, or some other of the magistrates, with their initials, entered in the minute book, and an order made on the treasurer for the amount, signed by two magistrates, for which and every such order the clerk must produce a legal receipt at the next monthly meeting. The following is a summary of the various books kept and entries made by the clerk and steward:—

Journal, in which the various transactions are recorded and prepared for posting in the ledger.

Cash Book, wherein all monies paid and received are entered; closed at the end of every month and posted in the ledger.

General Ledger, wherein all accounts constituting the general expenditure of the prison, and the accounts of all tradesmen and other persons having any considerable transactions with the establishment are to be found.

Officers' Salary Book.—Ruled to correspond with the weeks in three months, the folio exhibiting the amount paid in that period, and the amount paid weekly entered in the cash book.

Cash paid to male prisoners at being discharged, under the respective heads of weaving, tailoring, wool and cotton picking, wardsmen, joiners and other builders, domestic labour, and under the Act 4 Geo. IV., cap. 64, classed at the end of every month, and entered in the cash book.

Cash paid to female prisoners at being discharged under the respective heads of needle-work —cleaning—cooking and washing—hospital servants and wardswomen, closed at the end of every month, entered in the cash book.

Daily Receipt and Consumption of Food Book.—Closed at the end of the month, and the stock carried forward to the next month.

General Store Book, containing the various descriptions of stores delivered to the respective officers.

I cannot but express my perfect approbation of the simple, clear, and clerk-like manner in which the books and accounts are kept.

The books relating to the discipline of the prison, and the register of the prisoners, are kept by the keeper, who likewise has the assistance of a clerk, paid by the county. They are as follow:—

Keeper's Journal, containing an account of the daily number of prisoners, and of those received and discharged, of all punishments inflicted, of reports to the justices, and occurrences as they take place, submitted to the magistrates at their monthly meeting, and at quarter-sessions.

Commitment Book, arranged under the heads of When received—number—name—age—height—eyes—hair—complexion—trade—read or write—on what charge—by whom charged—term—by whom committed—date of commitment—class—how disposed of—observations.

Register of Summary Convictions, arranged under the usual heads. Register of prisoners convicted at sessions, arranged under the usual heads.

Fine Book, containing Date—number of the prisoners in the general register—name—amount of fine—to whom paid.

Prisoners' Property Book, arranged under the heads of Date received—name—money received—other articles—money paid—articles returned—date of prisoner's discharge—remarks.

The matron in this prison appears to be more independent of the keeper than in any I have visited: she keeps a separate set of books.

Matron's Journal, containing entry of the visits of the surgeon, and of strangers, occurrences, offences, and punishments.

Character Book, with prisoner's name, occupation, age and state, abode, religion, state of knowledge, observations, number of times convicted.

Class Book, with the names of the prisoners in each class.

Provision Return Book, with the daily number of prisoners and the quantities of provisions drawn.

Discipline.—The general discipline, and entire system of management in this prison is, in my opinion, most faulty, and calculated rather to encourage crime than to repress it. Scarcely any of the penalties awarded by the law are inflicted with due severity. Hard labour at the tread-wheel is merely nominal, the prisoners being only at work for two, four, or six hours during the day; whipping, being only from eight to twelve lashes, is merely nominal; solitary confinement, from the want of proper refractory cells, is merely nominal; and imprisonment here generally, from the prettiness of the garden, the temporal advantages, and the constant communication which takes place between all classes of prisoners, is little more than nominal. The chaplain, in his evidence, states "that a female prisoner, upon being brought to the gate, appeared greatly distressed at coming in, but upon passing through and seeing the garden her grief vanished, and she exclaimed with astonishment, 'Dear me, what a pretty place!'"

Being a proportion of above one-fourth of the whole number of prisoners.

Good workmen are sure to meet with encouragement here. The evidence of the officers furnishes abundant proof of the ill effects arising from prisoners being discharged with earnings in their pockets. The clerk and steward says, "The lower classes are quite aware when prisoners are to be discharged, and the prison doors, at this time, are beset by people who come there to avail themselves of the trifling earnings they are known to possess." A turnkey states—"It repeatedly happens that when a number of prisoners have gone out in the morning, they get drunk before they leave the village." The employments of the prisoners are not confined to the walls of the prison; they are engaged in the hay season beyond them, in getting in the keeper's hay: one of the lodgemen attends to his horse; has been sent on messages to a distance, and together with the chaplain's servant, a prisoner, is constantly out of the prison. The joiner, who has charge of the work-people, says, "The casual repairs at the chaplain's, keeper's, and sessions house, are done by the prisoners. Four or five have been outside the walls at a time, painting. There would be no difficulty in their running away; it would be impossible for one man to follow four or five. People frequently speak to them while going backwards and forwards. I have reason to suspect they have obtained articles while out; I have frequently seen the prisoners, so employed, speak to the keeper's and the chaplain's female servants. There is a painter, now, who has been two or three months employed in painting the keeper's house. I have heard the other prisoners remark to those thus employed, 'You have got a good job, I should like it myself.'" Besides the keeper, the matron has two prisoners as servants, and the male and female turnkeys all enjoy the privilege of having one in their lodges. The reception cells are perverted from their most useful destination, by being occupied by the two lodgemen, contrary to law, and who have the complete run of the prison. The male prisoners upon coming in are sent into their respective classes without being cleansed, and the itch has been several times communicated in the interior of the prison. In consequence of the prisoners being employed in various parts of the prison, communication is ever taking place between the males and females. Tobacco and other articles are surreptitiously introduced, of which the following incident is an illustration:—It had come to my knowledge that it was the most improper practice of the wardsmen, over the boys, to beat them with a strap or rope's end, and that at times they had done so most severely. I sent for one of them and desired him to show me what he made use of; on delivering up a strong leathern strap, I heard something gingle in his pocket, and upon his being searched by the turnkey, a piece of bacon, tobacco, flint, steel, several pawnbrokers' duplicates, and a note, written in pencil, were found upon him. One of the boys over whom this man was placed, as wardsman, and slept in the same cell with him, said, "I have seen the wardsman get tobacco several mornings from the prisoner assisting the miller at the mill; he comes to the gate of the yard, makes a signal; the tobacco is exchanged for bread and money; the wardsman had 1*s.* 6*d.* in his shoe; I sleep in the same cell with him; he has a tinder-box, and he makes me get up in the night to strike a light for his pipe. He has sometimes made me get up two or three times in a night to do so." The miller's man being sent for and searched, 13½*d.*, materials for striking light, and bits of tobacco-pipe were found upon him. Dice and files were found upon another prisoner, connected with the transaction. The miller's man and wardsman were dismissed from their situations; the latter had been three times previously in the prison, yet was appointed wardsman over boys. The chaplain states, "that there is no inspection of the day-rooms; gambling is constantly carried on; I frequently see the marks of it. I recollect instances where men have sold their bread, and carried it to such an extent that great debility was the consequence. Their practice is to barter one allowance upon the agreement of its being returned to them the next day, that they may have the enjoyment of a large meal. The conduct of the female prisoners is even less satisfactory than that of the males; there appears to be a passion for tobacco among them, and the risks they run and the abstinence from food they undergo, in order to obtain it, by barter, are quite extraordinary. They frequently get upon the roofs of their day-houses for the purpose of carrying their provisions to male prisoners at work in the garden, to exchange for tobacco. Many who were not in the habit of smoking have learnt to do so in prison. They exclaim, 'It drives away melancholy.'" A female turnkey states—"We have had a number of prisoners addicted to the taking of opium, and the depriving them of it was like taking a child from the breast. A person, named ———, had broken her leg, and had been given opium during the time she lay ill with it; she came here as a prisoner, and was so importunate that I have often seen her cry like a child to obtain it. Some of the women used to be wild for it. They tell me that out of prison their custom is to buy twopennyworth at a time, make it into pills, and swallow them: I do not think there are so many of these opium takers now as formerly. All the female prisoners dine and go to chapel together; they talk to each other, and the classification is merely nominal. I do not think there is anything here to deter from the commission of crime. I am astonished how they can allow the prisoners 1*s.* a-week for such labour as washing; it is more, taking food and lodging into account, than they would get outside. I think it would be a great improvement if silence were observed." It is a common practice of the women to get upon the roofs; they have been so violent at times as to refuse coming down; they have remained up until ten o'clock at night, and the keeper has been obliged to order their being taken down by main force.

While engaged in my inspection, it was reported to me that three females had been placed in solitary confinement for getting on the roof. I immediately visited them. They had been there a whole night. Two were tolerably quiet; the third, by removing her iron bedstead, and placing it against the door of the cell, had completely blockaded the entrance, and refused the officers admittance. I heard her afterwards in conversation with the other prisoners, although they were not in adjoining cells. This want of proper cells for the refractory renders the awarding of this punishment a mere farce. The practice of permitting so many persons to visit the prison from motives of curiosity interferes with the other duties of the officers, and is otherwise productive of ill effects. There are sometimes two or three parties going round at a time, and the tread-wheel is left without an officer over the men at labour. The matron says, "she has had occasion to check the conduct of some of the male visitants. There have been as many as 15 or 16 at a time. Occasionally the females recognise some of the visitants, which gives rise to language of a most improper nature, particularly if any one is there who happens to have appeared against them." The keeper does not go through the prison, nor see all the prisoners daily. The officers, upon the subject of solitary confinement, by sentence, say, "The soldiers care nothing for it; I think it makes them worse." "I have not found any beneficial effect from the solitary confinement, although of a month's duration. They get their regular food. There has been scarcely one in ten so sentenced but has come back again." "To the regular thieves the mill is an annoyance, from their disliking labour of any kind. I think a regular thief would rather be in solitary confinement, provided he got as much to eat. The solitary has not half, nor a quarter the effect upon the town lad as upon the one from the country: the latter are often frightened at being by themselves. Both men and boys frequently sleep away a portion of their confinement. They can talk to each other under the doors and through the windows. I think a good flogging would be more effectual upon the boys than sending them, as they are in many cases, to gaol 14 days." I find, by the following extract from the keeper's journal, that he had made a representation to the magistrates upon the insecurity of the prison and the want of refractory cells, as far back as 20th July, 1835:—"When men are committed for any grave offences, the punishment for which may affect life, there is every inducement to escape, and I have already had several desperate efforts to contend with. At present, with the very few assistants which are afforded me, the gaol, I have no hesitation in saying, is altogether insecure; and I beg to call the magistrates' attention to these serious matters with a view to their immediate consideration. Solitary cells are absolutely required for the refractory. The day-rooms and sleeping-cells must be made more secure, and the yard walls require to be raised some feet higher." I fully concur with him as to the insecurity of that part of the prison adjoining the sessions-house. Several escapes have been effected through these premises. The communication to and fro should be entirely stopped, and iron bars placed upon the windows.

All the turnkeys are in the habit of smoking. I found pipes left carelessly about their rooms. With the constant presence of a prisoner as a servant in them, there can be little wonder at tobacco finding its way into the interior of the prison.

The system of discipline, or rather absence of any, as developed at large through this Report, would seem to call for a thorough change in the administration of the affairs of this prison. The first great and advantageous measure would, I conceive, be the abolition of many of the numerous employments in which prisoners are here engaged, and the putting an end to all money payments, either on such account or on that of labour, to the convicted. A code of Regulations is also much wanted. The visiting justices have been made acquainted with what appeared the deficiencies of the prison, and there is reason to believe their attention has already been directed to their remedy.

New Bailey, Salford County House of Correction.

NEW BAILEY, SALFORD.—COUNTY HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

The building of this prison was commenced under the direction of Mr. Howard, who laid the first stone of the part now appropriated to females. Alterations and extensions have been made from time to time to meet successive exigencies, and it therefore cannot be expected that this overgrown establishment can possess the advantages of well connected parts or conveniently adapted details. It is situate in the township of Salford, and is erected upon a foundation of rock-sand, close to the banks of a navigable river. The enclosure is an oblong surrounded by a wall of brick, with iron chevaux-de-frise, and flanking towers at intervals, loopholed for musketry. The keeper's house, offices, sessions-house, and lock-ups are in the principal front towards the river, in a line with the boundary wall, and abutting into the area of the prison. The house for the keeper consists of basement, with cellarage and two kitchens; first floor, three rooms; second floor, five chambers. The principal entry into the prison is, most inconveniently, the public one to the sessions-house, police-office, and lock-ups. In these lock-ups are daily assembled the whole of the prisoners from the neighbouring townships, for examination before the stipendiary magistrate. They look directly upon the female wards of the prison, where the noises and shoutings made by the drunken and disorderly inmates may be distinctly heard. The dimensions of these lock-ups are as follow:—

No. 1.—28 ft. long, 7 ft. 3 in. wide, 11 ft. high.
No. 2.—28 ft. long, 7 ft. 6 in. wide, 11 ft. high.
No. 3.—17 ft. 6 in. long, 15 ft. 5 in. wide, 11 ft. high.
No. 4.—19 ft. 6 in. long, 10 ft. 6 in. wide, 10 ft. 6 in. high.
No. 5.—19 ft. 6 in. long, 10 ft. 6 in. wide, 10 ft. 6 in. high.
No. 6.—18 ft. 3 in. long, 9 ft. wide, 10 ft. 6 in. high.
Receiving-room.—19 ft. long, 18 ft. 3 in. wide, 11 ft. 6 in. high.

The turnkey in charge of the gate and lock-ups has apartments in the lodge. Upon passing through the exterior gate the prison for females is in front, and the one for males to the left. They consist of 4 stacks of buildings for the males, 3 for the females.

The cells for refractory prisoners are apart from the other buildings. They are dark, and not being supplied with heat, are found to be so damp and cold as to be only habitable during the day. The prisoners return to their cells at night. Conversation between men thus confined in adjoining cells can be carried on with ease. The chapel standing in the centre of the area, the prisoners, male and female, have to traverse the open yard to reach it; it is divided into six compartments, of a fan-like shape, with a gallery containing two divisions, for males and females. The separation between the males and females in the gallery appears to me imperfect. While attending Divine service, a female prisoner went into fits, and had to be passed through the portion of the gallery occupied by the males. It would be a much better arrangement if the females were exclusively confined to their own part of the prison, and Divine service performed to them in the neat chapel attached to it, and which almost seems to invite the adoption of this beneficial regulation. In the laundry the mode of drying is well contrived, the heat being obtained from hot water, the intensity of which is quite sufficient for the purpose, and void of all danger from fire. The hospital for females stands very inconveniently in the midst of the buildings appropriated to male prisoners, and the women have to pass by them to get there. A double range of separate work-rooms for hand-loom weavers stands at the back of the men's sleeping-cells, with small yards in their front. They approach rather close to the boundary wall, and are subject to having articles thrown into them from the exterior. The privies belonging to these workshops were in an uncleanly and offensive condition. The buildings for the male and female prisoners in one part are almost contiguous, and communication is constantly taking place between them. I cannot but remark that the parts of this establishment appropriated to the females is far too public; they face the principal gateway, without any screen to protect them from observation. I have scarcely ever entered the prison without seeing a female prisoner either in front of the matron's apartments or traversing the yard. The workshop, where so many men are employed together in picking cotton and oakum, is very inconvenient, both in size and ventilation, for its purpose. The crowded numbers and the impurity of the air make it almost intolerable. The security of the prison will be much impaired by the Bolton Railway, now in progress, passing within a few feet of the exterior wall, and commanding, by its elevation, a view of the interior.

Diet.—Male prisoners, 10 ounces of bread and half an ounce of salt; and at breakfast and supper, one quart of oatmeal gruel made from 2½ ounces of oatmeal to each quart; for dinner, ½ lb. of beef, and 1 lb. of potatoes two days a-week; 1 quart of pea-soup two days a-week, 1½ lb. of potatoes two days, and 1 quart of stew the seventh day. For females, 16 oz. of bread, ½ an ounce of salt, 1 quart of gruel morning and evening, and 1 pint of stew, with 1 pound of potatoes, boiled, for dinner each day. The stew for males is made with one cow's head for every 20, seasoned with pepper and salt; the stew for the women is made with one cow's head to every 40.

Clothing.—All prisoners under charge of felony are clothed upon being received into the prison. Males, jacket, waistcoat, trowsers, and cap, of woollen cloth, shirt, and clogs; drab colour before trial. Convicted misdemeanants, blue; felons, parti-coloured blue and yellow. The females, wrapper, petticoat of woollen, body-linen, and clogs.

Bedding.—Bedstead consists of a canvass stretcher with wooden frame, straw paillasse, two blankets, and rug.

Heat.—The day-rooms for males are warmed by hot air from stoves beneath; the sleeping-cells are not, with the exception of a few on the female side of the building, where the heat is but indifferently conveyed, from the imperfect state of the apparatus.

Cleanliness.—The prison, and persons of the prisoners, clean. The prisoners' clothing, upon their coming in, is placed in a disinfecting apparatus, which seems perfectly to answer its intention. It is the invention of the late lamented Dr. Henry, and consists of a steam-engine of two-horse power, for the generating of hot air, which, on the clothes being placed in the receiver, is applied to them at a heat from 206° to 210°. A pipe, from the receiver, conveys the foul air to the exterior. It requires to be superintended by a person well acquainted with the process, and, from the difficulty of finding a prisoner sufficiently worthy of trust, a man has been hired to attend when required.

Health.—The surgeon attends the prison daily and oftener when required. The infirmaries are detached from the other buildings, and though, perhaps, sufficient in ordinary cases, may be said to be circumscribed, considering the magnitude of this establishment. They are not well ventilated, and afford little convenience in the case of epidemic. A female superintendent, or nurse, is employed, who is not a prisoner. The attendant upon the sick in the men's hospital is a prisoner. The latter office is stated to be filled most imperfectly: the prisoners being constantly discharged for irregularities. The prison is extremely healthy; chronic diseases are the most prevalent; low fevers, scorbutic affections, itch, and venereal, constipated bowels are of common occurrence. The most trifling medicine is always administered by the direction of the surgeon. He states—"That cases of simulated disease are frequent: he has noticed that the injuries inflicted by prisoners upon their legs and eyes are, generally from the greater facility of doing so, produced on the right side of the body. Soldiers furnish the most frequent cases; one of the 17th Lancers taught the manner of ulcerating legs to two or three younger prisoners. Epilepsy, spitting blood from pressure upon the gums, itch from pricking the fingers with pins, dysentery from mingling the evacuations with blood, and various other artifices have been detected. He considers the diet as excellent, but that it would be improper to lower it even with regard to short imprisonments: he thinks the entire absence of epidemic diarrhœa is a proof of the propriety of the diet. He visits the cook-houses frequently, and sees that the food is wholesome, and properly cooked. The cooks have strict orders to report to the surgeon any variation in the quality of the food. The soldiers care less for solitary confinement than other prisoners, but seem particularly to dislike the tread-wheel. He is present at all corporal punishments. There are no reception cells for the male prisoners, nor does he see them in every case before they are classed." He keeps a journal and hospital-book; the former contains a register of his attendance at the hospital, and of punishments and occurrences. The hospital-book contains the name, age, class, case, daily treatment, and discharge of every patient.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services on Sunday, and reads a selection of prayers to the males daily, excepting on Tuesdays and Fridays, which he devotes to the females. He visits the hospital daily; sees those prisoners privately who may desire to do so, and those to whom he is informed he may be of use. He administers the Sacrament four times a-year, and examines, previously, every individual who offers to communicate, and does not administer it unless satisfied of the propriety. A man, who was formerly a Catholic priest, having avowed himself a Protestant, applied, while in prison, to be admitted to the communion table; the chaplain exercised his discretion in not receiving him. He is now, a second time, in prison, and after deceiving many of the Protestant clergy, professes to be again a Catholic. No books are admitted into the prison but such as are examined by him. The tracts distributed are those of the Tract Society, and the Society for Promoting Christian

Knowledge. A very extraordinary practice prevails in this prison, of discontinuing the daily performance of Divine service during the sessions; and as from the short adjournments they are sitting for a period of two months of the year, the interruption is a very serious one; nor do the reasons adduced, of the confusion in the prison, and the attendance of the keeper upon the courts, sufficiently satisfy me of the necessity. The school is under the chaplain's superintendence. Boys under sixteen attend the school daily, including Sundays, unless old offenders. No writing is taught. The upper class is instructed from the New Testament; the lower, from the usual elementary books. The chaplain states—" Many of the prisoners, probably two-thirds, can read, but are mostly very deficient in religious knowledge; many of them when asked of what persuasion they are, say, 'I ought to belong to such a church,' and cannot even tell why the commonest festivals were appointed. There is no attempt made to teach adults. The females, who have been prostitutes, are less reclaimable than male offenders. One of the most beautiful women I ever beheld, a prostitute, was repeatedly convicted of theft, and at last was transported. She told me on her departure that all the young women whom she had known, in the same line as herself, had been transported, and that she had long expected it. I think that the criminal population here are more impressed with the terror of transportation now than formerly. I should not think the present discipline of the prison has generally a deterring effect; it may, in some few isolated cases, upon women. Boys come in much younger than females. The most depraved women we have are from Liverpool. One female has been here 200 times within the last six years; she comes here, generally, to recruit her health: another has been here fifty times, and cried when she was last discharged. I have visited prisoners in solitary confinement; none for longer than fourteen days. The sentence of the Court generally directs it to take place the first and last week of imprisonment. I saw a lad here the other day who had been twice in solitary confinement without the least good effect. In some cases I think whipping does good: I recollect an instance of an apprentice who had run away from his master, and behaved very ill, who was sent here, received a slight flogging, and has behaved remarkably well ever since. The schoolmaster makes use of the stick upon the boys; I think it would be impossible for him to carry on the business of the school, with such characters, without it. The school has been beneficial, particularly to females."

The number of female committals is greatly on the increase. The following are the average numbers of males and females, during the month of June, from 1827 to 1836 inclusive:—

| | Males. | Females. |
|---|---|---|
| 1827 . . . . . . . . | 479 | 128 |
| 1828 . . . . . . . . | 301 | 107 |
| 1829 . . . . . . . . | 441 | 92 |
| 1830 . . . . . . . . | 436 | 92 |
| 1831 . . . . . . . . | 392 | 120 |
| 1832 . . . . . . . . | 421 | 105 |
| 1833 . . . . . . . . | 414 | 95 |
| 1834 . . . . . . . . | 444 | 120 |
| 1835 . . . . . . . . | 456 | 124 |
| 1836 . . . . . . . . | 405 | 162 |

On the 13th May, 1836, there were 109 female misdemeanants; of this number 70 admitted drunkenness as the cause of their being in prison; 5 declared themselves prostitutes, but not drunkards; and 5 others for illicit distillation (an increasing practice among the low Irish in Manchester), who denied being addicted to the intemperate use of liquor. The whole of the prisoners attend Divine service, with the exception of 5 males and 3 females, employed as cooks. The chaplain keeps no private journal. Upon attending the chapel I observed scarcely any of the prisoners in the possession of either bibles or prayer books. They did not join in any of the responses, nor follow the chaplain in any prayer, with the exception of the Creed. The school is divided into classes of old offenders and first convictions. The schoolmaster permits the wardsman, a prisoner, to punish the boys slightly, a very objectionable liberty. On Tuesdays and Fridays he goes to the females and teaches them; when thus employed neither matron nor other female officer of the prison is present, which is also, I consider, an impropriety. The schoolmaster states—" I have met with many who could read, and have forgotten it; some who could not read had never entered the doors of a church, chapel, nor Sunday school; more than half the boys express a desire to learn, and this increases as they progress. I have observed some of the larger boys, above seventeen years of age, who are not permitted to attend the school, occasionally try to mix with the other boys, in order to escape the mill. The boys generally treat me with respect; I use the cane, and could not carry on the business of the school without it. There are many of the boys whom I think it would be of more service to give a day or two solitary confinement and a whipping, than a longer sentence of imprisonment. When a boy once comes in it is a great chance but that he comes back again. Their offences at first are of a childish nature, such as stealing of apples, and after having been in prison they get on from little to much. I believe many of them are better pleased to be here than at home. The women do not come into prison at so early an age as the boys: I consider drunkenness the cause of the great increase of crime among the females."

Classification.—The prisoners are classed in accordance with the provisions of the Gaol Act; the strict adherence to which involves the consequence that the felons are sleeping singly, while the more numerous misdemeanants sleep three and four in a cell. The felons take their meals together, other classes in their respective day-rooms.

Labour.—The tread-wheel and sand-mill. The tread-wheels are placed in four double stories of semicircular shape, with a turnkey's lodge and gallery in the centre for inspection.

| 12 Months | 10 Hours from March to October, and 7½ hours the remainder of the year. | In Summer 80, and in Winter 96 | 8 Inch. and a fraction. | 2 Revolutions per Minute. | In Summer one-half, in Winter three-fourths are constantly treading. | 19,400 in Summer, 14,550 in Winter. | In Summer 1200, in Winter 900. | In Summer 9700 Feet, in Winter 10,912½ Feet. | Multiply 16 feet 2 in. circumference of the wheel, by 120 revolutions in the hour, by the number of hours each prisoner works. | Grinding dye-wood. |

The mill for crushing stone into sand, used in cleaning the floors of the cells and galleries, is worked in the same way as a capstan, with bars manned by the prisoners. As "hard labour" it is little cared for, it being suspended at intervals, to remove the sand and supply it with stone. The turnkey over the men at the mill states—"That silence is pretty well observed, but not entirely; the boys are more apt to talk on the wheel than the men, and are much more difficult to manage. It would take two monitors to keep the same number of boys quiet when it would only require one for men. The soldiers are worse than any other prisoners; they continually refuse to work, and would much rather be in solitary confinement than on the wheel." Another turnkey says—"The mill is very unequal; I have seen heavy stout people suffer dreadfully from it, while others have not felt it at all: I have frequently been asked by the soldiers at the wheel, who have been sentenced in part to solitary confinement, whether the time for that portion of their punishment was not come, they appearing quite anxious for its arrival." The trades and employments in which the prisoners are engaged are most numerous; they consist of weaving, winding, wool-picking, hair-picking, rope-making, pin-heading, clogging, shoemaking, tailoring, cabinet-making, painting, gardening, &c.: all the repairs within and without the prison are done by the prisoners. Those before trial are allowed one-third of their earnings, and upon conviction one-sixth. In consequence of the scarcity of hand-loom weavers, their small profits having driven many from this to other occupations, and discouraged them also from bringing their children up to it, the taskmaster has introduced a new kind of work with every prospect of permanent advantage to the establishment. It consists of weaving light check cottons for the African market. This can only be done with two or three shuttles, an operation to which the power-loom has not been applied. The taskmaster, a practical and intelligent manufacturer, says—"This description of work cannot be manufactured by the power-loom, and I consider the prisoners will shortly do a great deal of it; what we only received 3*s*. 6*d*. a cut for six months ago we now receive 5*s*. 6*d*., and if things go on as they do now, I have every reason to believe the price will rise to 8*s*. Several manufacturers have been to offer this kind of employment. The prisoners are not put to learn to weave unless their sentences extend to three months; it would not be profitable to the county in consequence of the work they would spoil in learning: I have seven or eight, who have begun to learn to weave within the last three months, who are getting on very well in the practice. When a prisoner comes in, I go and ask him about his connexions, trade, &c.; one man, who had been very ill, told me he had neither father nor mother, had never learned any business, and was too weak in constitution for any hard labour. One of the turnkeys said I had better put him to winding. The prisoner said, 'I would rather remain in the prison twelve months than go out; I cannot earn a livelihood.' I put him to the loom, which he had never seen before; in ten weeks' time he was earning 10*s*. weekly for the county, and one-sixth of this sum for himself. Upon his leaving prison I recommended him to the master manufacturer who sends work into the prison, who employed him, and he is now earning from 12*s*. to 14*s*. a-week. He was convicted of felony. Winding bobbins is felt as the greatest punishment; they would rather go to the tread-wheel: they are kept hard to it. We have had more trouble to get the prisoners to wind than any other kind of work. They have been punished repeatedly for neglect. The misdemeanants, sentenced to hard labour, prefer the tread-wheel. We have lost, I may say, some weeks as much as 5*l*. by not being able to get the prisoners to wind. This is done by machinery in the factories." The taskmaster has charge of the stock, and keeps all accounts relating to the work carried on in the prison. His books are kept by single entry, he receives an advance from the treasurer to pay prisoners the amounts of their several earnings upon their discharge; the manufacturers settle their bills for work performed once a quarter. In making up the accounts, all labour done by carpenters, painters, and bricklayers, for repairs in the prison, is made a nominal debit against the county, at 2*s*. a-day. The officers of the prison are allowed and frequently do employ the prisoners to work for them at one-half the amount of wages for which the same work would be done outside. I find that cabinet-makers have been employed in making wardrobes and polishing tables for the deputy-governor, bookcases for the chaplain, and other works. I cannot but think this practice highly improper, and liable to great abuse. The amount of earnings credited to the county is here, as in other establishments, quite fallacious, as neither the salaries of the overlookers, nor the current expenses and wear-and-tear of machinery, are taken into the account.

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences are jumping off the wheel, quarrelling, and bartering food, introducing tobacco, &c., punished by confinement in the refractory cells, and stoppage of food. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Scourge.—Handle of hard wood 18 inches, 9 lashes of large whipcord, 7 knots in each lash. The whipping is inflicted by the turnkeys in the presence of the surgeon; the number of lashes is considerable, but upon looking at the back of a boy who had been punished ten days before, it did not appear to be beyond the necessary severity. The following are extracts from the surgeon's journal in reference thereto:—"Attended and saw Thomas Kershaw flogged; he received nine dozen lashes, October 30, 1835." "Attended and saw John Worthington flogged; he received five dozen lashes, 5th November, 1835. Saw two boys flogged; they received ten and fourteen dozen lashes each, January 5, 1836. James Watson, boy, a misdemeanant, received ten dozen lashes, January 5, 1836."

Irons.—Used upon transports 9 lbs., refractory prisoners 14 lbs., ditto ditto 27 lbs. Upon revisiting this prison twenty-one prisoners, under sentence of transportation, were in irons, without any written authority from the magistrates; this practice has since been discontinued.

Visits and Letters.—The untried receive visits by an order from a magistrate until the week before the sessions, when it is not required; the convicted, once in three months, by an order from the keeper or the magistrates.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The provisions are contracted for by the magistrates quarterly, notice thereof being given by public advertisement. The tradesmen's bills are sent in to the keeper quarterly, who, after examining and checking them by the quantities received, gives them over to the steward or deputy treasurer of the hundred, who lays them before the magistrates at quarter-sessions. After being examined, a cheque is drawn for the amount, and handed to the steward, who pays the separate items.

SPECIMEN OF CAUTION.

By the direction of the Court of Quarter Sessions, holden at the New Bailey, in Salford, the 16th day of July, 1827, the following copy of a clause in the Act of Parliament, passed in the 7th and 8th years of the reign of King George IV., is delivered to you as a caution not to offend again:—

7th and 8th Geo. IV., c. 28, sec. 11.

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the more exemplary punishment of offenders who commit felony, after a previous conviction for felony, whether such conviction shall have taken place before or after the commencement of this Act:—Be it therefore enacted, That if any person shall commit any felony not punishable with death, committed after a previous conviction for felony, such person shall, on such subsequent conviction, be liable (at the discretion of the Court) to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years; and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the Court shall so think fit), in addition to such imprisonment.

GORST and BIRCHALL.

A copy of this caution is delivered to each prisoner, convicted of felony, when discharged.

No. 10.—The Governor's Journal, of which the following is a specimen:—

Tuesday, 13th September, 1836.

Ordered Sarah Dochert, Maria Carty, Ann Rawson, Mary Taylor, Elizabeth Brown, Ellen Hall, and Mary Ann Collier, misdemeanors, breakfasts stopped for being disorderly; Mary Ann Butterworth, felon, three days' solitary confinement for swearing; Michael Cavelahan, convict, one day's solitary confinement for refusing to work. Received fifteen prisoners, discharged three, and eleven to be discharged in the morning. No. 557.

Discipline.—A partial application of the silent system has taken place in this prison, but with little, or at least no observable good result, as in similar cases where only half measures are resorted to, or limited means afforded for their execution. From the variety of employments carried on in various parts of the prison, and their want of concentration, it is quite impossible that any effectual supervision can take place. During the day prisoners of both sexes are continually traversing the yards. The men are carrying coals or bringing bobbins from the women's side; the women are fetching provisions, or passing to and from the hospital on the men's side; gardeners are digging by themselves in the keeper's garden. The matron states—"I have found a great inconvenience in the number of the male prisoners who come to the female side. They bring work, such as shoes to bind, wool to pick, cotton to wind, and every morning coals into the cookhouse, where they see the female cooks. They bring these articles generally without the attendance of a turnkey. I am very much troubled by the males of the vagrant class calling to the females after they are locked up of a night. I hear the voices of the males frequently after they are locked up. The two female prisoners who act as servants at the lodge I have frequently observed talking to the male prisoners employed there in the kitchen." Neither the cells nor galleries are ever visited by the turnkeys after locking up, and although the felons have each a separate sleeping cell, conversation still takes place. In the misdemeanants' class three and four prisoners occasionally sleep in one cell, making the enjoinment of silence an absurdity, by undoing at night what has been endeavouring to be done during the day. The workshop where the men are employed picking cotton is much too small for the number usually at this work. The felons only eat their meals under proper inspection, the rest of the prisoners in their day-rooms. The women at work are most imperfectly overlooked, from the inconvenient arrangement of the workshops. While I was visiting them a male prisoner was engaged painting the exterior window sashes, women being at work within, without an overlooker. Tobacco in large quantities is thrown over the walls, and from the facility of intercourse must find its way to the prisoners. In the midst of one of the most crowded thoroughfares of Manchester prisoners, under the charge of an old man of seventy, were painting the outside wood-work of the prison. Two female prisoners are allowed to act as servants to the turnkey at the lodge, and while thus engaged they frequently hold conversation with the male prisoners, who also are employed daily in cleaning thelock-ups. These female prisoners clean the sessions-house, and are often there by themselves; they remain in the house of the keeper of the lock-ups, engaged in washing, and the usual domestic offices, until seven o'clock in the evening, and during the session until eleven or twelve at night. Prisoners are employed every morning cleaning the boots and shoes and knives and forks of the keeper, and several of the turnkeys. An objectionable custom, liable to great abuse, also prevails, of permitting the officers to employ the prisoners upon work for themselves, paying for it at half the rate of the labour wages without the prison. Thus the keeper has employed cabinet-makers to make wardrobes; the chaplain, bookcases; and, indeed, all the officers occasionally avail themselves of this privilege. The keeper of the lock-ups likewise makes an illegal profit of from 14*l.* to 20*l.* annually, out of the food furnished by him for prisoners under temporary detention. Independently of the prisoners working at trades and receiving portions of their earnings, and besides extra food to monitors and singers, it appears by the following return that no less a number than 103 sentenced to hard labour were receiving weekly allowances in money:—

The keeper and under keeper say—"The monitors receive twelve ounces of bread daily and half a pound of beef twice a-week extra for their services; we cannot say how many have been discharged from their posts, but it often occurs; they are of very little use, and do a great deal of harm in the prison; their extra allowance enables them to purchase articles of clothing, &c. from the other prisoners; we are satisfied they would never make a report, and they only do so when any officer is about. The punishments since the first enjoinment of silence have been extremely numerous, and still continue to be so; upon an average ten a-day out of 540. There have been as many as forty in a day: the determination to talk is chiefly among the misdemeanants for short terms. When we first introduced this system we averaged a hundred less in number, but we are now again as high as ever."

There can be no doubt that the number of committals for trifling periods of three days or a week are obstacles to the perfection of any discipline, as not affording sufficient time to reduce the passions of some prisoners to subjection; but I am induced to think, from personal observation, that notwithstanding the imperfections in the system of discipline at present here in force, that an increase of activity and spirit in the execution of the duties among the turnkeys would be attended with some advantage; to the officers of a higher grade this remark is not intended to apply.

It is quite apparent that the effect produced by the established system has nothing of a deterring influence upon the fast increasing criminal population of this neighbourhood; but can it possibly be otherwise so long as it admits the principle of bestowing temporary advantages upon prisoners for duties which are in themselves relaxations of the pains and penalties of justice. The punishment of confinement in the refractory cells is merely nominal; prisoners talk from one cell to another, and do not remain in them during the night. The concentration and simplification of work, the abolition of temporal advantages, the extension of moral and religious instruction to those of maturer years, an increase in the number, and more precise arrangement of the duties of the paid servants, a decrease in the number of prisoners made use of as assistants in the discipline (the large class of misdemeanants, I consider, from the shortness of their terms, ought to be wholly under the charge and supervision of officers); the refractory cells made tenantable during the night by the application of warmth when required, a restriction of the females to their side of the prison, the institution of a night watch in the passages of the cells;—in fact, the enforcement of the silent system in its full integrity, with zeal and confidence in the officers, would, I am perfectly satisfied, bring this establishment closer to the real purposes of a house of correction than it can justly be said to be at present.

There are four women at present in this prison who have been sentenced to transportation, and who from age or infirmity have been rejected and sent back from the hulks. The continued presence of these prisoners is described as most injurious to the discipline. The under keeper says—"There are a set of old women, notorious thieves, who are perfectly aware they will not be received at the hulks for transportation, and carry on their practices with this view. There are some now in prison who are thus circumstanced; they inflict the greatest injury by corrupting others." The following is a return of prisoners under such circumstances, on the day of inspection:—

Liverpool Borough Gaol and House of Correction.

LIVERPOOL.—BOROUGH GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

This prison was built under the personal inspection of the benevolent Mr. Howard, and the street which it fronts is honoured with his name. It is detached from other buildings, and enclosed with a boundary wall of freestone, which if higher would be more secure. It comprises a central building, containing a house for the keeper with the chapel, and six detached wings for prisoners. The privies are badly constructed and offensive; the work-rooms having boarded floors are exposed to danger from fire, and the day-rooms are so placed as to defy inspection.

Dimensions of the sleeping cells, 6ft. 8in. by 7ft. 6in.; 10ft. high; division walls between the cells, 18in.

The borough of Liverpool having become a separate jurisdiction from the county, the maintenance of a sufficient gaol has therefore devolved upon the corporation. Without any consideration as to the fitness of the prison for their reception, the borough prisoners were sent there on the 21st of April, 1836. A considerable portion of the building had not been occupied since its appropriation as a place of detention for prisoners of war, and was found deficient in almost every requisite. This being at length discovered, workmen were employed in making the necessary repairs, and providing for the necessary security. The prisoners continued to accumulate, and were without the common supplies of bedding, clothing, or the means of cleanliness. It is quite impossible to describe the wretched condition of this prison and its inmates at the period of the inspector's visit. It is however due to the mayor, town-council, and magistrates to state, that on their attention being directed to it, the most praiseworthy activity was manifested in its amelioration. The insubordination of the prisoners was promptly checked, silence enforced, idleness superseded by employment, bedding and clothing provided, means of cleanliness afforded, a more convenient classification substituted, and arrangements entered into with the county magistrates for relieving the overcrowded gaol by sending a portion of the committals from the borough to Kirkdale. Measures are still in progress for supplying other deficiencies, which when carried into effect will place this establishment at least on a footing with others in the vicinity. The inadequacy of this prison for such a population as is contained within the limits of the borough, is sufficiently evident by its dependence upon the county house of correction for receiving a portion of the prisoners, and it becomes a question well worthy of the deliberate consideration of the municipal authorities, whether so important a town as Liverpool should not, in all matters connected with the exercise of its own jurisdiction, be complete within itself. The gaol contains sufficient accommodation for prisoners before trial, and those not sentenced to hard labour; but it does not furnish the means of carrying the latter sentence into effect, if the treadmill only is to be considered as such; nor does the area of the prison afford either a sufficient or convenient site for its erection. The greatest number of prisoners at one time appears to have been 443, and a provision for not less than 600 should be the basis of any calculation on the difficult subject of a new prison.

Diet.—The prisoners before trial who maintain themselves free of charge to the borough or parish are restricted to the introduction of one pint of beer or ale per day, and to a reasonable quantity of wholesome food.

The prison diet or gaol allowance shall be as follows:—First day—Breakfast, one pint of gruel and half a pound of bread; dinner, one pint and a half of scouce made from one and a half pound of potatoes, with meat, salt, and pepper; supper, as breakfast.

Second day—Breakfast as before; dinner, one quart of broth made from cows' heads, with vegetables, meal, salt, pepper, and half a pound of bread; supper as before.

Third day—Breakfast as first day; dinner, three ounces of bacon, and one and a half pound of potatoes; supper as before.

Such diet being subject in any special case to the consideration of the health of the prisoner by the visiting justices or surgeon, both as to increase and reduction, but not to be deviated from except under extraordinary circumstances.

Health.—The attendance of the surgeon daily in an establishment of this magnitude appears to me essential, as well as his inspecting the whole of the prisoners occasionally, and all upon their being received into the gaol. The salary of the surgeon is for attendance only, the medicines are supplied from a chemist's.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs divine service twice on the Sabbaths, and administers the sacrament every six weeks, and on the great festivals; reads prayers four times a-week, and lectures twice. He visits the prison and goes through the day-rooms and yards daily, sees and speaks to every prisoner twice a-week; he catechises and instructs the boys. As the improved state of this prison gradually developes itself, the provision of further means for affording moral and religious instruction will doubtless force itself upon the authorities. All the prisoners attend Divine service, except those employed in cleaning, cooking, attending the sick, and such debtors as decline from conscientious motives.

Labour.—Wool and oakum-picking, mat-making, tailoring. The amount of earnings is credited to the borough fund, after 8½ per cent. being deducted for the taskmaster.

Offences and Punishments.—Upon the inspector's last visit to Liverpool, he found 23 prisoners under sentence of transportation in irons. Among the number were 4 boys of 17, 1 of 16, 2 of 15, and 1 of 13; the weight of the irons being from 9½ to 4½ lbs., the heaviest being on those sentenced to 14 years. A representation was made to the magistrates, and the keeper has since informed me that "the practice of using irons on prisoners under sentence of transportation was discontinued immediately on the removal of those prisoners found in irons on inspector's last visit. Since then a small shackle or ring has been rivetted on one leg just above the ankle, intended as a badge or mark of his being a convict, and to accelerate his re-capture in the event of escape. No other links, fetters, or chains of any description whatever are now used in this gaol, except for refractory conduct.

Books, Expenditure, Accounts.—The books and accounts previous to the appointment of the present keeper in September last being in a very irregular state, and now only in the process of amendment, I therefore defer my report on them till a more favourable opportunity. The annexed account of expenditure is necessarily deficient, from the same cause.

Debtors.—The conduct of debtors offers no variety from that of others similarly situated.

Discipline.—I refrain for the present from making any further remarks under this head until the discipline of the prison, still in progress of improvement, shall have been more matured. The daily increasing mass of petty crimes in this vicinity require to be severely dealt with; and if the prison is to continue a House of Correction, some measures should be taken for the introduction of hard labour for its inmates. The picking of wool is but employment.

LIVERPOOL BRIDEWELL.

This prison, for the temporary detention of prisoners apprehended by the police and brought from the lock-ups for examination by the magistrates, is situate in Bridewell-street, near the Exchange. It is a substantial building, with basement, and first and second floor. It is faced with rusticated freestone. It contains apartments for the keeper, and cells for inferior and better classes of prisoners.

It is impossible to speak in too high terms of the admirable manner in which this establishment was conducted by the late keeper, now appointed to the same situation in the Borough Gaol. The rooms are thoroughly cleansed daily, and chloride of lime profusely applied throughout the building. Every attention is paid to prisoners either in a state of intoxication or illness, and property in their possession secured and registered. The parish of Liverpool allows 1½ lb. of bread to prisoners without food.

The officers employed in this establishment, and in conducting of prisoners to the different prisons after commitment, are keeper, with a salary of 120*l.*; matron, 20*l.*; five male turnkeys at 25 shillings a-week each, a suit of clothes yearly, and a great-coat once in three years; two female turnkeys at 12 shillings a-week each.

The books and registers are most accurately kept, and furnish very valuable data as to the state of crime and morality of this important town. The following is a specimen of the register which is laid before the magistrates daily :—

Prisoners' Property-book.—This book, together with the property entered therein, accompanies the prisoners from the bridewell to the gaol he is committed to; the keeper of which, upon the prisoner and the items of property being delivered over to him, signs his name thereto.

From the books above described the following returns have been compiled, exhibiting a most melancholy increase of immorality, particularly in the last six months, though allowance should be made for some portion of this excess to the praiseworthy activity of a newly-appointed and well-organized police.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY, LIVERPOOL.

Juvenile Delinquency, Liverpool.

My attention having been attracted to the extraordinary number of boys, many of them mere children, who are the frequent inmates of the House of Correction at Kirkdale and the Borough Gaol at Liverpool, I have thought it my duty to report such facts and information as came before me in the course of my inquiry, relating either to the cause, extent, the means of lessening or remedying this frightful and distressing mass of youthful delinquency. The following tables, drawn up at my request from the very complete registers kept at the Liverpool Bridewell, will suffice to convey some idea of the magnitude and progressive increase of the evil.

A Return of the Number of Male Juvenile Thieves and Suspicious Characters under the Age of 18 Years, brought before the Mayor and Sitting Magistrates for the Borough of Liverpool for Three Years, commencing 1st July, 1833, and ending 30th June, 1836, classed as follows:—12 Years and under, 12 and not more than 15, from 15 and not above 18; distinguishing the Number in each Year, and the Number committed from those discharged.

Several circumstances seem to concur to give this numerical preponderance in juvenile delinquency to Liverpool over other populous places in the vicinity. Among them may be cited the fluctuating variety and vicissitudes of the population of a great maritime town; the continual ingress of poor Irish, the absence of factory employment or other work for children; the number of destitute orphans, from the deadly visitation of cholera and fever; the temptation afforded to want and idleness by the comparatively unguarded and careless exposure of valuable property in the markets, stores, and about the docks; the excitements to criminal pursuits induced by the low shows and theatres, and the little attention paid to their condition by a community deeply engaged in the absorbing transactions of commercial enterprise. The daily employment of children appears to be greatly influential in saving them from falling into crime. The annual number of this class of delinquents in the New Bailey at Manchester does not increase. In the House of Correction at the busy Preston they are comparatively but few. At Carlisle Gaol, since the establishment of cotton-manufactories, the chaplain has, from their diminution, found it unnecessary to continue them as a separate class of prisoners.

On mustering these Liverpool boys, it is impossible to fail being struck with the resemblance they bear to each other, undoubtedly the result of similar habits and pursuits; they are short, stoutly made, active in body, and acute in intellect. The disproportion between juvenile offenders of the two sexes in Liverpool would, upon the first glance, appear highly favourable to the females, were it not accounted for by the ready means of support afforded them by prostitution. The females come into the prison older, and more frequently as disorderlies than for offences against property. The habits and conditions of these boys will be fully shown in the subjoined statements, taken by me verbatim from their own lips, while in the several prisons of Lancashire and the adjoining county. In Kirkdale House of Correction—

———, age 13, of Irish parents, both dead. Has not frequented chapel since his father and mother died, but used to attend the Catholic chapel occasionally. Went to school for a year and a-half: cannot read nor write now. I was taken up, once before, on account of some silver, and imprisoned fourteen days. I am now in for two months. I should like to go to sea: I have been down at the docks many days looking for a ship; I would go anywhere, or do anything by which I might be kept out of here. My sister's husband is a very drunken man, and when I used to cry at his beating her, he used to beat me.

———, age 13, born in Liverpool: parents both dead: has been living in lodgings in ——— Liverpool: Catholic; but never went to chapel. Frequents the pier-head and about the streets. He took up with bad company. It is not a pleasant life: he would do anything to get out of it to earn a living. He has been living by stealing anything he could get. Has been six times here before, and once in the Borough Gaol. The shows and plays first led him to thieving. Used to beg pieces of meat or anything: knows a number of boys who live in the same way. Used to pick pockets, and pawn the handkerchiefs, and tear the tickets up; used to pawn them at ———; he got 1*s.* 6*d.* and 1*s.* each. The boys told me to watch and see how they picked the pocket: did so. A number of these lads frequent the Circus and Sans Pareil; the admission is 3*d.* a night. Has been drunk himself, and seen many of the boys so. I should like to keep out of prison, but have no other way of living. I have often tried. I tried once to sell needle-cases, which I bought of ———, in Dale-street, out of some money I got for handkerchiefs, but I could not sell enough to buy victuals, and I had to go again and steal. If I could get work I would willingly stick to it; I am in constant terror. When I cannot pick pockets I go about looking for things at the shop doors, such as clothes. Many a time I have been without a meal.

———, age 13; mother alive, residing in Liverpool. I was learning to sweep chimneys; some boys asked me to go with them to sweep a chimney; I went with them, and while there, they asked me to steal something, and because I did not, they thrashed me. At last I stole a coat, and they took it from me, and beat me: I then went home. The sweeps came after me, and I used to go with them to the ale-houses, and take the money out of the drawers. Sometimes I had to stand at the doors to watch, and I was to whistle if anybody came. One of the sweep's father was a tinker, he lives ———; he used to coax the boys to bring the things to him. I left my mother's house, and the boys asked me if I would do a job. I went with them to the tinker's, and got a sooty blanket, and they blacked my face. I then went and stole, and took the things to the tinker's, where I lived above a fortnight. I went to the Circus, to Holloway's, and the acting, two or three times, by money I got by stealing.

———, age 12; father Irish, mother English; both alive: born in Liverpool: never went to school or to a church. His mother got him a place at a barber's shop, and, not finding him at home, some boys asked him to go and steal near the Exchange: he took a shirt: has been stealing for six months: he was coaxed by the boys to do it. The boys, who told him to steal, used to buy him penny pies. When he stole a blanket once they got 1*s.* 6*d.*, and gave him two penny pies. The lads are bigger than him, about 15 years of age. Used to go a thieving once a week, on a Thursday; the lads used to come for him. Has stolen, he thinks, about fifteen different things, all clothes, lying about the yards to dry. His father beat him well when he first went out. He lives in a very bad street. Will not go to a refuge, but he will go home to his father and mother, and never come here again.

———, age 11½. Liverpool Borough Gaol. Of Irish parents, both dead: reads and writes well; went to St. Patrick's school. His father has been dead six months, his mother six years. His father left about 12*l.*, and his friends at ——— kept him as long as it lasted, and he then set out for Liverpool with only one shilling. Went to sleep at a friend of his father's in Liverpool, and, in the day-time, was rambling about seeking employment; was taken up for stealing apples, and sentenced to three months. His father punished him once for stealing; he went into a cellar and stole a toy-watch, which he sold for a penny, and bought oysters. Has long been in the habit of stealing. When he was in prison at Kirkdale he made a number of acquaintances, some of whom he has again seen at the Liverpool borough gaol. He names ———. He was put to work at Kirkdale, and taught to weave: he did seven cuts, and received 4*s.* 1*d.* upon his going out of prison. He was cautioned by the keeper, on leaving, to be a good boy. He went out in company with three or four others. He and another boy went down together to Scotland-yard, and bought toffee and cakes; he spent all his money in two hours; he bought sweet cakes, which were dear. He went and slept at his father's friend that night, and left her the next morning against her advice. He rambled about all day, until he was very hungry, when he met another boy, named———, whom he had known at Kirkdale. He asked him to go and steal something. I said I would; I was hungry, and did not know what I was doing; stole a shirt from a line, and he gave me 5*d.*, with which I bought some soup and a roll. Was apprehended about a quarter of an hour afterwards. After coming out of Kirkdale he met ———, near the market, in Clayton-square, ———, in Park-lane, ———, in Queen's Dock, ———, in St. Patrick-street. They all knew each other from having been in the same yard in the prison. The boys talked in prison of what they had done, how they used to steal, and showed the way of doing it. The new market is considered the best place for stealing.

———, age 13. Irish parents. Father died of cholera; mother alive, three children, sells apples. His mother did all she could to do something for them: his sisters have little clothing. (He was in a state of absolute nudity, and was immediately clothed by a subscription made on the spot, while waiting at the gate to be discharged, his term of imprisonment having expired.) Many times been without dinner. Has lived a great deal better in prison than out. Went to school for about a month or two. Attended Catholic chapel regularly. Has been in the habit of stealing cabbages, and other things for dinner; sometimes got one given to him for going errands in the market. (Upon a subsequent visit to Kirkdale, a month only intervening, I found this boy again in prison for picking pockets. He explained his motives verbatim as follows.) It was the first time I went out to steal anything. I had been playing with boys in the day-time. I took the handkerchief out of a man's pocket: I did not want anything but some money to go to Holloway's, where there was acting. When I was last out, when you (the inspector) saw me, my mother did everything for me, she would rather be short herself than me; I am very bad to her, but it comes in my head, and I cannot help it. I am as well off here, in prison, as anywhere else, but sometimes I think of my mother.

Chester Castle. ———, age 9; under sentence of transportation for fourteen years. Father alive; Irishman: resided in Liverpool. His father is a Roman Catholic, a tailor by trade. He went to school. Was once in the bridewell for stealing iron. The magistrate told his father to take him home and give him a good whipping, which he did. Two years ago, when seven years of age, he got acquainted with some boys in Thomas-street. They used to be about the markets; they asked me to go for apples, and I used to take them off the standings when the people were away. Next I took some clothes, three cotton handkerchiefs off the hedge, where they were drying. This is called "snow dropping," they being put out to bleach: I got 2*d.* for one from a lad named ———. I gave another away, and kept the third for myself. I used to run away from my father and mother. I slept in privies and lofts, and went out thieving in the morning. I pawned the best things at ———, a pawnbroker, in ———, where I used to go for my mother. I sometimes got 1*s.* and 1*s.* 6*d.* A man in gaol, now transported for life, told me that he used to sell silver there, and that I might make use of it when I went out. There were four of us in a party, who used to keep together. ———, 7 years of age; ———, 14; ———, 15. We all went out together every day, and never separated: some used to watch, and we divided the money between us. We went to the shows. The most we ever got at once was 6*s.* I took it from a cake stand in Cleveland Market. We used, sometimes, to sleep in an entry in Vincent-street, where timber is kept: we slept upon the timber. I then left these boys and got acquainted with others, and my little brother, younger than me, came after me. I taught him to thieve; he used not to steal well, he was so frightened. We six went down to Princes Dock, and ——— went into a shop, and took some needles; he was caught, and put on shore after being beat with a rope. ——— asked me then to go and look out for back doors to get into of a night. I would not agree to it, and me and my little brother went away and stole together: the others went and got into a house, and stole boots, knives, and forks, and hid them in the entry where we were sleeping: two of the other boys were caught, sleeping in a privy, and told of the things: I and my little brother were taken up. The magistrates let me and my little brother go, and sent the others for three months to Kirkdale. I went home, and only remained there a week. I used then to follow the carts taking sugar from the docks, and eat it. I then picked up another lad, ———, 17 years of age: he took me to Manchester with him. His father kept a public-house there. I used to rob with him at Liverpool. I was taken to the office, and was a month at the poor-house, and was then sent by coach to my father at Liverpool. I left my father, and met with the Manchester lad again. We stole a parasol, but it was stopped by a pawnbroker. I then went home and was sent to school: I used to go some days, and stop away others, and tell my father, who cannot read nor write, that I had been. I used to go about the docks again, eating sugar. I met ——— again with his sister and ———; he coaxed me over to Birkenhead, telling me he had been very lucky there, having taken three dresses. We went and stole some linen from off a hedge; were caught, and myself and the other boy are sentenced to transportation. The girl, 12 years of age, was given up to her friends. I could not read until I came here into the prison; I can now read the Bible and Testament. Many of the boys in Liverpool drink rum. The chimney-sweepers are mostly thieves. Williamson-square is where the boys mostly go to. I once tried to pick a pocket. I used to spend the money I got in going to the shows, and in cakes.

———, age 11, under sentence of transportation: in Chester Castle. Father alive; stepmother Irishwoman. Went to school; could not read when he came to prison, though he was at school for some time. ———, one of the boys (mentioned in the evidence of his accomplice above), who lived next door, first taught him to thieve; he told me he would take me to a show and pay for me, which he did. When we came out, he said he knew a place to steal rope. We went to ———, and he got over into a yard, and put the ropes under a gate: he got 2*s.* 6*d.* for them, and I had 6*d.* out of it. I went home that night and gave my grandmother 3*d.*; she asked me where I got it; I said I had a carry for it. She told my father of it, and he said I had been stealing. I went again the next day, with the same lad, and got some joiner's tools and a clock, and hid them in a privy. I was taken up the next day with him, sent to Kirkdale, and sentenced to seven days, and to be whipped. I told the minister there all about it at first, but afterwards ——— told be not to say any more, and I did not. His mother brought him some pie, and he said he would give me some if I would plead guilty and he not. When he knew I told the minister, he pleaded guilty. When I came out of Kirkdale, my father took me to a joiner's shop, where he worked, in Liverpool. One day I went out to see the carpenters walk, and met ——— again. He went and broke open a shop, and wanted me to get through a pane of glass; I was afraid, and would not: he went in himself, and got a bag of books. We went on stealing for several days. He used to take me to the shows, which I was very fond of, but gave me no money. I was out two or three nights without going home. I slept in a hay-loft. My father beat me when I went home. I stopped at home until I met ——— again. I was with my sister, who had run away with me from home. My mother wanted her to clean a candlestick, which she would not. He took us, with ———, to Birkenhead, and we got transported for stealing there.

Lancaster Castle. ———, age 14. Father alive; stepmother. Was sent to school: can read and write. Was at a rope-walk, where he used to earn 3*s.* 6*d.* a-week. First went to the Sans Pareil Theatre without his father's leave, who punished him for it: took to thieving: often went to the acting with money he had stole. Used to drink porter and whiskey in the morning, when it was cold; it made him light-minded. When his father would not have anything more to do with him, he turned to stealing. Used to take what he stole to ———, and tore up the tickets: he has pawned many things there; it was well known to many boys that they would take in things there. He sleeps in vaults, or privies, or anywhere he can. He would do better if he could.

Question. What do you intend to do on leaving this prison?—Answer. To go to thieving again; I have no where to go.

———, age 12. Three convictions; first, one month in the house of correction at Kirkdale; second, nine months hard labour in Lancaster Castle; third, one year in ditto; a fortnight solitary, and to be twice whipped. Born in Liverpool; father and mother alive, and residing there. Can read and write: went to daily and Sunday-school. He ran away from his father's house; staid about the markets, and helped to carry things from the carts: stole fruit in the markets. Used to go to the Queen's Theatre; went with the money he got by stealing. He knows ———, who is now in for a second offence. Saw him at the market with his brother. He was looking to see what he could pick up, and supposes they were doing the same. He got 5*s.* for a shawl from a pawnbroker in ———; he had been there with his mother, who used to pawn her things. His father beat him for running away from school and going to the races. After he went to the theatres he was afraid to go home; he slept in hay-lofts, or where he could: he used to go twice a week to the theatres, sometimes to the Liver; the Sans Pareil is the one liked best. He has always found boys like himself there. He has often talked, and heard others talk, of what they have done both at Kirkdale and here; they have said that they would change their ground and go elsewhere and steal, when they got out. He is quite sure the pawnbrokers know the things are stolen; he thinks they give them half what the things are worth: they tear the tickets up. He thinks he shall be transported, but has nothing to do but steal. He began to steal again a few days after he was out the last time. There are a number of boys who like to live by thieving. He likes a theatre still. A great many of the boys drink; he has often been drunk with rum. He never met any of the Liverpool boys, either at Lancaster Castle or Kirkdale, who he had not seen at the theatres.

New Bailey, Salford. ———, age 11; born in Manchester, Irish parents. His father transported, and mother went to Ireland and left him. His aunt came for his little brother: he lived with a woman who used to take care of his mother's things; when she went away she turned him out, and he had nowhere to go to; used to sleep out-of-doors. He was in a factory: some boys coaxed him away the day he got his wages; he was obliged to leave it then, and go a begging. When I went out of prison nothing was given to me; when I went out nobody would trust me; I knew nobody, and was obliged to do what I could.

I find this boy has been in the New Bailey, Salford, the following number of times:—

———, age 16. Irish parents; stepmother. Does not read nor write. Was employed in attending a hand-loom factory, at 4*s.* 9*d.* a-week. It was on Patrick's day, two years ago, I met some lads in ———; they said they had slept out and had no breakfast. I gave them some of mine. They asked me to go with them to get some money. There was a procession; we went into the crowd; one of the boys wished me to pick a pocket; he was afraid to do it. He got the handkerchief, and got 1*s.* for it at ———. Staid out all night at ——— with the other boys; there were women and men there, match-makers. His father caught him the next day, and beat him: he went to work and run away to , the same place where he slept: it is a noted place, a good many go there. He lived there for six months stealing and picking up what he could. Made acquaintance with many boys. He is very well known. He has seen the boys teach each other to pick pockets: they all expect to be transported. I was at first in fear, but the gaol was not so hard as I thought it was before I was in. I thought I should be put into a black, dark place. I have never been in want of food: I could always steal something: I did not like work in the factory: there used to come fine days, and I loved to play in them.

This boy's career in crime is as follows:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| March 18, 1835, | Vagrant, confined | 1 month. |
| April 23, | Ditto ditto | 1 month. |
| December 1, | Ditto ditto | 3 months, 14 days solitary, and to be whipped. |
| May, 1836, | Ditto ditto | 3 months. |
| October, | Felony | Transportation for 14 years. |

It is manifest that the offences of these boys are generally confined to petty pilfering, but which, in the aggregate, is destructive of property to a great extent. In the neighbourhood of the docks and shipping, at Liverpool, their depredations of cordage, copper, and other marine stores is very serious. It is a singular fact, that in accompanying the intelligent superintendent of police at a late hour of the night through the numerous flash-houses, low brothels, and receptacles for thieves in Liverpool, in this motley assemblage scarcely one boy was to be seen, showing that hunger or childish gratifications are the principal objects of these youthful culprits. I firmly believe that it is quite illusory to expect that offenders of this class can be reclaimed who have become habituated to the exciting license of a vagabond life; their attachment is neither to be severed by the punishment of the law, nor shamed by public exposure. The withdrawing of their contaminating influence from those still younger, by transportation, seems to be the only alternative. But this remark does not extend to a very large proportion of the unfortunate children who are in these adverse circumstances. The magistrate, on their being brought before him for acts of vagrancy or petty pilfering, oftentimes the consequence of destitution and hunger, has no other resource but to commit to prison. The cheerful aspect, the laxity of discipline, the improper association, and the mildness of the punishment in these establishments, generally either confirm the depraved, or efface the salutary terrors of the less abandoned. They leave it only to return. Among a mass of other evidence, an intelligent officer of the House of Correction at Kirkdale related the following interesting incident which had occurred there. "Before the boys come in they dread a prison, but afterwards I have frequently heard them say they do not care about it. They say, when they go out, that they will go to their old places. I am quite sure that if a proper place were provided, many boys would be reclaimed. I have had the management of boys for 15 years. They can get nothing to do when they go out: nobody will trust them. One boy was in here for felony, whom one of the officers asked, on going out, what he intended to do, and told him transportation would be the consequence of his re-committal. He said he did not know what he should do. He had neither father nor mother, nor even a friend; nobody would take him. 'You had better go to sea.' 'Nobody will take me.' 'Then go and stow yourself away secretly aboard of some vessel.' We did not hear of him again for some months. When he came he was well dressed, and his appearance quite altered. He said he had followed our advice, and had stowed himself away on board of an American vessel, and was found when she was far at sea. The captain, who happened to be a most kind-hearted and benevolent man, took compassion, and kept him. He is now mate, and has been in the same employ six years. He called at the prison a few days since, and when the ship arrives here, he never misses coming to Kirkdale to see us, and say, 'What a blessed day it was when I took your advice!'"

The chaplain of the same establishment says, "The boys almost always say before they leave prison, that they must turn to their old habits; they have nothing else to do. I have talked to the boys before quitting, and they have often asked me if there was a Refuge they might go to. I think that the institution even of a voluntary refuge would be of the greatest service, and that there are numerous instances in which it would be availed of."

Extract from the Report of the chaplain of the Borough Gaol to the Recorder, at the July Quarter-sessions at Liverpool:—

> The thing that chiefly occurs to me as deserving particular notice is the crying necessity of something being done, and that without any avoidable delay, for more effectually intimidating and, as far as may be, reforming the juvenile offenders. They are, unquestionably, the most troublesome and, I fear, the most hopeless of any that are to be found here. The adults, especially the males, display something like rational behaviour; but the boys seem determined to set all restraints at defiance, and nothing but the strictest vigilance, and when absolutely demanded, considerable severity, have served to hold them within the bounds of moderation. For this lamentable depravity I am, I think, in some measure able to account, from inquiries I am constantly making into their habits of life when at liberty; and oh! Sir, were it not too foul a tale for such a page as this, and for my fears of harassing your feelings at such a time as this, I would attempt—vain attempt, indeed, and very painful it would be to me—to give you some details; but it is too shocking, too disgusting, to form part of a record like this. Suffice it to say, and I speak it with modesty, though confident, that such is the state of juvenile iniquity in this town, that unless some very active measures be speedily taken for checking this frightful evil, it is not in the power of man's intellectual vision to discover, or of his fears to surmise, the terrible result that may ensue. I would not be thought presumptuous, but with all deference I would venture to suggest, and I trust the suggestion, if at all offensive, will be pardoned on account of its motive, that some representation of this matter (most important as it appears to me) should be made by yourself or the grand jury, at the present sessions, to the "powers that be," for the purpose of accomplishing, or at least trying to accomplish, the object of my thus, I hope respectfully enough, laying before you the above distressing statement. As I have before hinted, with regard to the older prisoners, from their general conduct, some hopes may, perhaps, be entertained of occasional, if not frequent reformation even from the present mode of discipline, bad as it confessedly is: but I again take the liberty of repeating, and that too very emphatically, that as respecting the younger ones nothing worth while will ever be done under the existing system.

I cannot forbear thinking that the subject of juvenile delinquency has been involved in unnecessary perplexity, by attention having been almost exclusively directed to the punishing of this class of offenders rather than the prevention of their becoming such. In numberless cases where destitution or idle habits have been the incentives to a trifling and first offence prosecutors would joyfully forego prosecution, magistrates committal, were there milder institutions than prisons at their disposal, where the youth not thoroughly corrupted might be disciplined and instructed, and where the process of reformation could be fairly essayed.

The humane and useful operation of the Lancashire Society for the Destitute, on discharge from prison, is restricted to females. Badly located, with confined means, it is admirably managed, and has been productive of great good. An asylum for destitute boys, which, under a milder discipline than a prison, should combine the teaching of morals and religion with the art of industrious labour, would be of the highest advantage to this vicinity. I am satisfied that its efficacy would be manifested by a diminution of crime in a very limited period. The able and worthy stipendiary magistrate at Liverpool has often lamented to me the obligation he was under of sending children to a prison, from the want of some intermediate institution. That a sufficient number of these unfortunates would avail themselves of its protection to justify this appeal to municipal and private benevolence, is shown from the result of inquiries, a summary of which will be found in the annexed returns.

The more such institutions are retired and sequestered from the public, the greater results may be expected from them. The River Mersey offers many sites where, in default of a more suitable receptacle, a hulk of sufficient size might be moored, and these boys taught the multifarious employments dependent upon a sea-port, and thus acquire the capability, and with assistance the means of earning an honest livelihood. In this way I consider this interesting experiment might be temporarily tried upon a small scale, with a view successfully to its future extension and permanency. The subjoined tables exhibit the result of questions put to 60 boys, under 16, in the Kirkdale House of Correction, and 15 in the Borough Gaol of Liverpool, on the 26th of August 1836:—

LANCASTER.—BOROUGH GAOL.

This prison, or rather lock-up, for it is no more, adjoins the Town-hall, and consists of two rooms, deficient in light and ventilation.

No. 1 cell, 24 ft. by 12 ft. 6 in.
No. 2 cell, 15 ft. 9 in. by 11 ft. 3 in.

There are privies in each of the rooms. No airing-yards are attached, nor does any individual sleep on the premises. Prisoners under criminal charges remain here only while under examination. There is a Court of Pleas for the borough, and debtors both under mesne process and in execution are confined here. One debtor, in 1833, remained here for two months; another, in 1835, for 13 weeks; and a third, in 1836, for 14 days. This place is entirely unsuitable for imprisonment of any duration, and particularly for such a class of prisoners as debtors, who are here mixed with disorderlies and prisoners under criminal charges. The town serjeant acts as keeper, and attends to the wants of the prisoners during the day, salary, 4*l.* The corporation are fully satisfied of the insufficiency of this lock-up as a place of confinement for debtors, and would willingly contract with the county magistrates for the maintenance of such prisoners in the Castle, but the latter being extra-parochial, and not within the borough, there are legal difficulties in the way of such an arrangement. I have to repeat, that it is a most improper place for the imprisonment of debtors.

Wigan Borough Gaol.

WIGAN.—BOROUGH GAOL.

This prison consists of an insecure and dilapidated tenement in the town of Wigan, attached to other buildings, and liable to accident by fire. It contains two apartments or dungeons below ground, described as not being used; and I trust, for the sake of humanity, that this is the case. There are also two apartments in the second floor, for males and females.

Males' Room.—16 ft. by 14 ft., 7 ft. high.

As many as 13 prisoners at a time have been confined in the apartment for males, and 3 women were in the one for females on the day of my inspection. There are no privies nor airing-yards. The prisoners are maintained out of the poor-rate. They only remain here during examination. The corporation contract with the county to receive their prisoners at the House of Correction at Kirkdale. The prison was dirty. Tobacco-smoking is permitted. This prison is seldom without an occupant, and considering the extent and character of the population, and the irremediable defects of site and arrangement as above described, a new prison seems absolutely requisite, the more particularly since the borough has obtained a grant of Quarter-sessions.

Appleby County Gaol and House of Correction.

APPLEBY.—COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

This county prison is very inconveniently and insecurely placed at the base of a hill, which has been partly scarped away to afford sufficient space for its erection. The ground on which it stands was leased from Sir James Lowther in 1768 for 999 years, at a reserved ground-rent of one pound per annum. Many alterations have been made of late years to the prison, and it now consists of a mass of irregular buildings, rendering any effective system of discipline almost impracticable. It is without any detached boundary wall; the back part of the prison resting against the soil of which the hill is composed, generates damp, and is an impediment to the free and general circulation of air. It is overlooked from the windows in rear of the Court-house, and also from the adjoining height. Communication has taken place with prisoners by these means. The sleeping-cells of the male prisoners are deficient both in light and ventilation, and from their situation at the extremity of the airing-yards, as well as from their construction, are out of the reach of any inspection. There is no special accommodation for female debtors, and they are either placed with the criminals, or the matron is compelled to give up one of her apartments. The chapel is above the debtors' day-room; it is small and low, and very insecure. The wooden divisions between the prisoners are very slightly constructed and the doors are without fastenings. The keeper states, that he has been obliged, for safety, on some occasions to take the prisoners there handcuffed or in irons, and that communication takes place between them and the debtors as they pass through their yard to chapel. There is no male infirmary, and considerable inconvenience has resulted from the want of this necessary appendage.

Misdemeanants' Yard, Nos. 3 & 4.—8 cells of similar dimensions to the felons' cells.

Refractory Cells, No. 1.—12 ft. 9 in. by 6 ft. 6 in., 8 ft. high.
,, No. 2.—7 ft. by 6 ft. 6 in., 8 ft. high; dark, and deficient in ventilation.
Outer Room, or vestibule to the Refractory Cells.—7 ft. by 9 ft., 6 ft. 9 in. high.

Condemned Cell.—8 ft. 6 in. by 6 ft. 4 in., 6 ft. 3 in. high. This cell is in a small yard sunk below the surface. It is damp, unwholesome, and most improper for the confinement of any description of prisoner.

There are four day-rooms or workshops between the keeper's house and the sleeping-cells. They contain two crank-mills, and dressing-machines. One of these rooms is used as a kitchen, and is fitted up with a steam apparatus for cooking, and heating this part of the building. Heat is not supplied to the sleeping apartments of the prisoners. The part occupied by the females is built on a plan similar to that adopted at Lancaster Castle. The day and sleeping-rooms are of a semicircular form, with open iron railing at their extremities. They are completely overlooked from the matron's parlour and chamber, the latter being placed in the interior of the half circle. The privies throughout the prison are badly constructed, and are offensive.

I agree most fully in the following opinion, given in evidence by the keeper, as to the insecurity of the prison. "I consider the prison very insecure, and have represented it several times to the Grand Jury. Alterations have taken place, but its great want of safety is undiminished. It offers such a temptation to men to escape, that the hope of it unsettles their minds while in confinement: they are constantly brooding over it. Four prisoners have effected their escape, and the attempts have been most numerous. Is often obliged to have recourse to irons."

Diet, 1.—For prisoners sentenced to hard labour; for convicted prisoners, not sentenced to hard labour, but ordered by the visiting justices to be set to work; and for prisoners before trial who do not maintain themselves, but who work:—

Males.

7 lbs. wheaten bread weekly.
2½ lbs. of oatmeal ,,
10 lbs. of potatoes ,,

3½ oz. of salt ,,
2 oz. of onions ,,

Dinners.

Wednesdays—½ lb. beef, boiled, and potatoes.
Thursdays—1 quart of pea-soup, and potatoes.
Fridays—½ lb. beef, made into scouce.
Saturdays—Potatoes and cheese.
Breakfasts, 1 quart oatmeal pottage, and the same for suppers.

Females.

7 lbs. of wheaten bread weekly.
2 lbs. of oatmeal ,,
5 lbs. of potatoes ,,
1 lb. of beef ,,
5 oz. of rice weekly.
1½ gill of peas ,,
3½ oz. of salt ,,

Dinners.

Sundays—1 quart of stew made as above.
Mondays—½ lb. of beef boiled and 1 lb. of potatoes.
Tuesdays—1 quart of rice soup.
Wednesdays—½ lb. of beef boiled, and 1 lb. of potatoes.
Thursdays—1 quart of pea-soup.
Fridays—1½ lb. of potatoes, 1 quart of soup.
Saturdays—1½ lb. of potatoes.
Breakfasts, 1 quart oatmeal pottage, and the same for suppers.

2.—For prisoners before trial who do not maintain themselves, and who do not work, and for all other prisoners (except such as are sick) who cannot maintain themselves, and who do not work:—

Males and Females.

7 lbs. wheaten bread weekly.
2½ lbs. oatmeal ,,
10 lbs. potatoes weekly.
4½ oz. salt ,,

The above table, being the same as at Lancaster Castle, has been recently adopted. I doubt, from the diversity and number of articles of which this dietary is composed, whether it will answer in so small an establishment as at Appleby, and whether difficulties will not be found, and increased expenses incurred, in obtaining contracts for such minute quantities as must be required.

The debtors are permitted to purchase provisions, and a quart of beer daily, and also the use of tobacco, notwithstanding they receive the allowance from the county. The prisoners take their meals in their cells.

Fuel.—The male and female day-rooms are heated by steam. The debtors are allowed 1 bushel of coals weekly all the year round.

Clothing.—Convicted felons, a suit of dark brown frieze, and misdemeanant's of grey, with the word "gaol" in large letters on the back. Untried prisoners are only supplied with clothing when absolutely necessary.

Bedding.—The bedsteads are of iron, or stone. The bedding consists of a mat of straw, a paillasse, two blankets, one rug in summer, two in winter. Upon inspecting the bedding, the straw mats appeared to be saturated with moisture, and covered with mildew. The sleeping apartments of the males are damp, and seem to require the application of heat in the winter. I think it would also be an advantage if the stone slabs used as bedsteads were perforated, by having holes drilled through them, for the admission of air.

Cleanliness.—The prison, and the persons of the prisoners, clean.

Health.—The surgeon's attendance is generally two or three times a-week, and oftener, when required. There is a great want of an infirmary for the males. An epidemic fever, of a mild typhus character, prevailed in January last. The greater portion of the prisoners were attacked with it. The accommodation in the cells was so bad, as to render it obligatory to remove some of the most serious cases to the female infirmary. The fever was prevalent in the county at that time, and was not to be traced either to the building or the locality, nor were the cases more severe than met with in practice out of the prison. The surgeon considers the cells in which the males are confined as unwholesome. The effluvia in them is most offensive if a prisoner is only locked up in them for a few hours in the day-time. The site of the prison is damp. Generally speaking, he sees the prisoners before they are classed. Constipated bowels are of frequent occurrence. Itch, gonorrhœa, and rheumatism, occasionally. Considers the prison diet as much superior to that of the poorer classes of the county. Has been obliged to take men off the wheel from debility. The surgeon's journal contains an account of serious cases of illness, and the dates of his visits to the prison. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs divine service on Sundays, with one sermon. Prayers are also read twice a-day during the week, once by him, and once by the keeper. He sees the prisoners privately, visiting the prison once a-week for that purpose. He administers the sacrament three times a-year to such as he considers in a proper frame of mind to receive it. The cells being so inconvenient, in point of size and ventilation, he feels the want of a proper place to communicate with the prisoners. There is no attempt made to instruct the prisoners. They are provided with Bibles, prayer-books, and tracts, and no books come into the prison without his sanction. The insecure state of the chapel has often occurred to him. It is likewise too low, and most offensive in warm weather. A majority of the prisoners are uneducated, a third of them unable to read or write, and many even who can do so, are so ignorant upon religious subjects, as not to be able to explain the reasons for the celebration of the great festivals of the church. The ordinary class of prisoners in this gaol are not of a very bad description, but the large cattle fairs at Appleby and Brough Hill occasionally supply practised thieves from London and Glasgow. The prisoners express no desire for instruction. They generally feel the imprisonment at first, but the effect soon wears off; they form new connexions, and it becomes a new life to them. The chaplain's journal contains merely an account of duty performed by him.

Classification.—The classification of prisoners is not preserved while they are at labour upon the wheel.

Labour.—Tread-wheel for males, crank-wheel for females and infirm prisoners. The tread-mill was only completed the last year, and being without a regulator, its motion is at one time of great velocity, and at another the reverse. The labour is occasionally suspended in consequence. The keeper reported the cause to the magistrates, who ordered a regulator to be added to the machinery, nine months ago. The velocity of the wheel is at present endeavoured to be corrected by clogging it with a piece of timber, a very improper, if not a dangerous practice. Malt is crushed, and a small quantity of flour made and dressed by the crank-wheels, but no payment is received for this operation from the owners of the grain. 612 quarters of malt were crushed by the prisoners from January 11th, to June 24th, in the present year.

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences among the prisoners are creating disturbances, and purloining from each other; punished by stoppage of provisions, whipping, and solitary confinement. Whipping is inflicted by the turnkey, in presence of the keeper; a birch rod is made use of for the boys. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Scourge.—Handle of oak, eighteen inches long, with nine lashes of common whipcord, twenty-two inches in length, with eight single knots in each.

Visits and Letters.—The convicted prisoners are visited by an order from a magistrate. The untried, at the discretion of the keeper. There is no place in the prison conveniently fitted up for the purpose. They see the strangers in a day-room, in the presence of the keeper or turnkey. Letters are inspected coming in and going out.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The bills are laid before the visiting magistrates every quarter, and are then presented at the general sessions for approval, and after being signed by the chairman, are delivered to the treasurer, who disburses the respective accounts.

General Discipline.—The discipline maintained in this prison is not of a very severe character. On going round at night, I found one prisoner dressed in his sleeping cell, with the materials for striking a light, engaged in smoking tobacco. The faulty construction of the buildings, with the small number of the officers, make it a very difficult task to prevent such irregularities. Silence is enjoined as a rule, but with very imperfect means of enforcing it, either at the mill, or in the airing-yards, and none in the cells at night. The conduct of the debtors is described, by the keeper and turnkey, as very indifferent, and injurious to the general discipline of the prison; they carry on communication with the criminal prisoners, and have, generally, been concerned in the escapes that have taken place. They are noisy, dissatisfied, and always quarrelling; they do not regularly attend Divine service. Another obstacle to the discipline of this small prison is, the occupation of a whole ward and airing-yard by a person acquitted of the murder of his wife, on the ground of insanity, and who has been confined here for a period of fifteen years. He is allowed to purchase whatever provisions he pleases, with a quart of beer daily; he receives 2*s*. 4*d*. weekly, from the parish of Kendal, for his maintenance; he is permitted to walk outside of the prison, in front of the keeper's house; he has been of singular service, at times, in preventing the escape of prisoners, and has, in two instances, suffered severe personal injuries in consequence. The chaplain states "that he attends to his religious duties, and conducts himself perfectly as a sane man; he has administered the Sacrament to him; has sometimes, without being aware of the cause, found him irritated; he has generally found him irritable and out of his usual way when any prisoner has been committed for a crime which has resemblance to the one for which he was tried; he has never adverted to the circumstance of his own case, in the communication he has had with him." About two years ago, when a prisoner was committed upon a charge of murder, he was extremely excited, and the keeper notices that he is always in an irritable state at the period of the assizes. This person was a surgeon, and in a respectable rank of life. A female has also been confined here, under similar circumstances, for eight years; when first in prison, she attempted her own life; the chaplain considers her of weak, but not altogether of unsound mind; she is very ignorant, can neither read nor write, and has very imperfect ideas of any subject, but is very tractable and harmless; she appears a fitter subject for a poorhouse than a gaol.

There being no county asylum for lunatics, it happens that they are occasionally sent here for safe keeping until otherwise disposed of.

The chaplain, in his report to the October sessions, 1836, states "that the debtors are by no means regular in their attendance at chapel; one of them has not been there for the last eighteen months; they have been frequently quarrelsome among themselves, and troublesome to the keeper, so much so, that he has found it necessary to put one of them under restraint. The silent system has been enforced among the felons, as far as practicable; but when men are sentenced to long periods of confinement, in a prison constituted as this is, they must frequently be thrown into each other's society, and communications will sometimes be made which, in his opinion, no vigilance can prevent. The longer men are imprisoned, greater intimacies will be formed, and more frequent violations of this rule occur. This is one evil necessarily arising from long imprisonments where there is a want of means to carry this system into full effect. This, however, is not the only evil connected with long imprisonment. By long confinement and hard labour in prisons, from wearing the same dress, and using the same diet, whether the crimes be of greater or less magnitude, men gradually lose that feeling of self-respect so necessary to keep them in the path of duty. In lapse of time, from their degraded situation, they become callous to the opinion of the world, reckless of their own character, and at the end of twelve or eighteen months, instead of leaving the prison with that abhorrence of it which they had at an earlier period, they leave it in character more degraded, and in principle more demoralized, than they were when they first entered it. The chaplain has ventured to state this opinion from a conviction of its correctness; which conviction arises from his observation of men's conduct previous, and subsequent to their liberation; and upon the whole he is led to this conclusion, "that if the object of punishment be the prevention of crime and the reformation of offenders (as it undoubtedly is), that object may be more readily obtained by short than by long periods of imprisonment. Since October sessions, 1835, there have been confined in this prison, debtors 19, felons 44. Of the latter, 16 could read, 10 could not; and the remaining 18 could both read and write. The number of prisoners committed during the last twelve months is considerably greater than that of the preceding year. This, at first sight, might seem to reflect upon the morality of the county; but when it is stated that a much greater number of vagrants (who were neither natives of nor residents in the county), have been committed in the present, than in any previous year, it will do away with any imputation of that sort."

It appears by the keeper's report books, that from 1830 to 1836, inclusive, there were 276 prisoners committed to this gaol on criminal charges, of which number 152 were natives of the county of Westmoreland, and 124 were not. The keeper states that prisoners are brought in by the constables, nine times out of ten, in a state of intoxication, and the debtors on coming in are worse.

Keeper.—Age 53; appointed 1834; married; family in business; salary, 130*l.* Out of this sum he pays the turnkey, whom he hires, 30*l.* a-year. Receives 1*s.* a-mile for conveying a single convict to the hulks; 9*d.* a-mile each if more than one. The Earl of Thanet, the hereditary high-sheriff, who appoints the keeper, pays 15*l.* of the salary, and the county the remainder; he gives a bond of 2000*l.* to the sheriff; he has neither coals, candles, nor soap; he has to provide calendars at the assizes, also handcuffs and irons for prisoners, at his own cost. When first appointed he had to pay his predecessor 4*l.* for these articles.

I cannot help expressing an opinion, that the providing of articles of this kind, should not be imposed upon, nor left to the discretion of, the keeper. The county should certainly provide and pay for them.

Turnkey.—Age 39; appointed 1834; married; cabinet-maker by trade; salary, 30*l.*, and 3*l.* a-year from the chaplain for acting as clerk. Does not reside nor take his meals in the prison.

Matron.—Age 50; appointed 1834; has lived in the prison 37 years, the management having been in members of her family; salary, 25*l.*; she has also charge of the county court-house adjoining.

Chaplain.—Appointed 1834; salary, 42*l.*, out of which he pays the acting clerk 3*l.* The chaplain is second master of the endowed grammar-school at Appleby.

Surgeon.—Appointed 1834; salary, 10*l.* 10*s.*, including medicines.

Kendal County House of Correction.

KENDAL.—County House of Correction.

This prison stands on a rising ground at one extremity of the town of Kendal. It is surrounded by a boundary wall of stone, forming an irregular triangle. It comprises a house for the keeper, with a parlour, an inspection room, a kitchen, five chambers, and accommodation for fifty prisoners. It was erected and maintained at the joint expense of the county and the corporation of Kendal, but since the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act, the borough, being assessed to the county-rate, has discontinued the payment of its proportion The only prisoners, of a local description, at present sent there are those from a Court of Requests, for debts under 40*s.* The jurisdiction of this Court is confined to the borough of Kendal, and twenty-five neighbouring parishes. By an order made at quarter-sessions, which directs that all prisoners whose commitments are for a longer period than one month, shall be sent to Appleby, the number ordinarily sent to this establishment is so much reduced as to make almost its continuance a subject for consideration; at the period of inspection there was but a single prisoner on the criminal side. In locality it is certainly preferable, and in arrangement upon a par, if not superior, to the county gaol.

The successive alterations and additions to the prison have left it an irregular and inconvenient cluster of thirty-three cells, varying in shape and dimensions; among these are eleven cells 6ft. by 6ft., 7ft. high, dark and deficient in ventilation; two, 8ft. by 12ft., 8ft. high. Refractory cells, 6ft. by 6ft., 6ft. 6in. high. Yard attached to it, 14ft. by 9ft. 6in. The chapel is a small room, 18ft. by 15, and 8ft. high; without divisions. A canvass screen but ineffectually serves to separate the males from the females.

Diet.—To each prisoner, weekly, 10 lbs. of potatoes, 2 lbs. weight of beef, clear of bone; 5½ lbs. weight of meal, 7 quarts of skimmed milk, with salt, onions and pepper.

Clothing.—Convicted prisoners, party-coloured suit of grey and red frieze; misdemeanants, grey frieze.

Bedding.—Straw mat, palliasse, two blankets, and rug; an additional blanket in winter.

Fuel.—The day and work-rooms are heated by steam. The debtors are allowed from ¾ to 1 cwt. of coals per week, according to the coldness of the season.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean.

Health.—The surgeon attends when required; a medicine chest is kept in the prison; the surgeon's journal contains the particulars of each case, and the dates of his attendance. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs one full service, with sermon, on Sunday, in the afternoon. Wednesday is also a day appointed for prayers; but when there is not a sufficient number of prisoners to form a congregation, the chaplain sees them and converses with them individually. He superintends and sanctions the issue of tracts and books. The male prisoners are provided with elementary books, for the purpose of their mutually instructing each other. A committee of ladies, chiefly of the Society of Friends, visit the females twice a-week, and teach them to read. A practice prevails here of admitting strangers on Sundays, to Divine Service in the chapel, which appears objectionable, the more particularly as there is no real separation nor division between them and the prisoners. The chaplain's journal contains no register of his attendances, but merely the entry of his trimestrial reports to sessions.

Labour.—There are crank-wheels for grinding corn and crushing malt. Both male and female prisoners are employed. The grinding of corn is more laborious than the crushing of malt. The prisoners have no specific quantity given them to grind; there are no gyrometers attached to the cranks, the mills are kept going, the noise telling the keeper (as he states) whether they are idle or otherwise. The malt and wheat are sent by private individuals, and the grinding, for them, is gratuitous. The customary price for crushing malt in Kendal is 6*d.* per load. In the year 1835, before the number of prisoners was diminished, by sending them in almost all cases to Appleby, 1440 loads of malt were crushed in the prison, each load containing 2 bushels 16 quarts.

Punishments and Offences.—No scourge in the prison. Irons, 5¼ lbs. A very extraordinary and improper instrument for punishing refractory prisoners has been made use of in this prison; it is an iron gag, consisting of four bands of iron, each 8½ inches long, shaped so as to inclose the head, with an iron tongue-piece, 2 in. in length, roughed on its surface, which being placed in the mouth and secured by a padlock, at the back of the neck, effectually prevents the person so confined from shouting or talking. It goes by the cant name of "The Helmet," to which, in shape, it bears some resemblance. The keeper states "that he has seen it used twice, once on a male prisoner for half an hour, and once on a female for a quarter; they were both very refractory and noisy. He once heard it called by a Scotch prisoner, "The Iron Helmet of Kilmarnock." I called the attention of one of the magistrates then present to the impropriety and illegality of this instrument, and have reason to believe it will be destroyed.

Visits and Letters.—The prisoners are permitted to see strangers without an order from the magistrates, at the discretion of the keeper, but always in his presence. Letters are inspected coming in and going out of the prison.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The provisions are contracted for quarterly. The keeper lays the bills before the visiting justices every quarter, who examine into their correctness; they are then subjected to the approval of the magistrates at quarter-sessions, and after being signed by the chairman, the treasurer signs a draft for the whole amount, which he gives to the keeper, who pays the sums due to the respective tradesmen, and sends the receipts to the treasurer. The explanation given by the keeper why the treasurer does not perform this most necessary

The late regulations of the magistrates, by which prisoners whose terms of imprisonment exceed one month are sent to Appleby, in order that they may undergo the labour of the treadmill, has almost left this prison without an inmate, with the exception of the debtors from the Borough Court of Requests, who appear at present to be supported at the expense of the county. It seems doubtful, with such a population as that of Kendal, whether it would be prudent to abandon this prison altogether; but certainly a very considerable diminution may be made in the amount of salaries and expenses.

Carlisle County Gaol and House of Correction.

CUMBERLAND.

CARLISLE.—COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

This prison is a convenient appendage to the county courts of justice, and is connected with the one where the criminal business is disposed of by a curtain or screen of Gothic design, harmonizing with and assisting the imposing effect of these noble structures. The interior of the prison is constructed upon the plan of the one at Bury St. Edmunds; and so implicitly, in some instances, has this been followed, that the faults and deficiencies of the original building are here repeated. The principal front, with the gateway, is in English-street; and at its back, looking into the interior of the prison, a long range of buildings extend on each side the entrance, consisting of lodging for a turnkey, the keeper's office, bath and reception-room, male and female infirmaries, and other apartments occasionally occupied by debtors. The infirmaries are extremely ill situated, and being also deficient in ventilation and other requisites, are but seldom used. The accommodation for prisoners consists of six wings, radiating from a central building, the house of the keeper. The material used in their construction is freestone from quarries in the neighbourhood. Water is laid on to each airing-yard, and also to the privies. The ventilation and drainage are perfect, and danger from accident by fire completely provided against.

Dimensions of the Cells.

Double cells.—12 ft. by 8 ft., 9 ft. 9 in. high.

Single cells.—6 ft. by 8 ft., 10 ft. high.; division walls between the cells 2 feet thick.

Refractory cells.—10 ft. 4 in. by 6 ft. 9 in., 10 ft. 6 in. high; the walls painted black, and without light.

Contents of the Governor's House.

Basement.—2 rooms for matron, 4 rooms for keepers, kitchen, and offices.

First Floor.—6 rooms (one for magistrates).

Second Floor.—Chapel, chaplain's private room, and two chambers.

Third Floor.—6 chambers.

The roof of the chapel is low. The prison standing on the slope of a sharp declivity, the uniformity in the buildings is preserved by carrying them up to two or three stories, according to the inequalities of the ground. The exterior wall is of irregular shape. The prison is rather inconveniently commanded, within a short distance, by a factory, lately built. A large reservoir or iron tank, holding 1300 barrels of water, was constructed for the purpose of supplying water to the inhabitants of the city from the neighbouring river, and thereby making the labour of the prisoners remunerative. This, however, has proved a complete failure. Whether the source from which the water is supplied was not approved of, or from some other unexplained cause, there is but a single tenant at a rate of 10*l.* per annum. The labour of 8 men for 18 hours is required to fill the tank.

Diet.—Convicted prisoners, 1½ lb. of bread, 4 oz. meal, 2 lbs. potatoes, 1 pint of beer, daily; ½ lb. of beef on Wednesday and Sunday. Untried, 1 lb. bread and 2 ounces meat, daily. The washerwomen have a quart of beer each on Wednesdays and Sundays. The price of the beer is 7 shillings the 36 gallons. The untried are permitted to purchase meat, coffee, herrings, vegetables, &c. The bread is of excellent second quality, containing a small proportion of bran. The common debtors receive the same allowance of food as the prisoners before trial. The provisions are contracted for yearly. The keeper says, "A great proportion of the untried prisoners live upon their allowance; in one case an Irishman did so for four months. He, however, then began to sink, and he sent him food from his own table. He was convicted, and afterwards executed for murder. The convicted prisoners, even those under two years' imprisonment, are always in excellent health; they do not look so stout. The great proportion of people here are spirit-drinkers. The malt liquor is bad. Even among the better class of yeomen spirit-drinking is excessive."

Bedding.—Bedsteads, slabs of stone. The bedding consists of a straw mat or palliasse, two blankets, and a rug; three blankets in winter. The stone is of a very porous nature, and I observed the appearance of damp and moisture upon the straw mats. I consider the application of heat to the cells as most desirable in the winter, particularly as the prisoners are more confined to them now than formerly. The chaplain says, "The prisoners speak to me of the excessive cold; it is the universal complaint when I visit them in their cells during the winter." The matron states, "She has seen them suffer from the cold in the winter, and they complain of it frequently. Has observed them benumbed and unable to work from its effects." The debtors who desire it, are furnished with bedding at two shillings a-week.

Clothing.—Convicted prisoners, a suit of grey frieze, yellow stockings, and blue cap.

Fuel.—The common debtors are allowed ½ bushel of coals weekly to each day-room all the year round.

Cleanliness.—The persons of the prisoners, and every part of the prison, clean.

Health.—The surgeon's attendance is generally every day. He inspects the prisoners before they are classed. Constipated bowels were very frequent, until potatoes were substituted for cheese. The prisoners are very healthy. He is present at all corporal punishments. He considers the infirmaries very ill placed. He keeps a sick-book and register, the latter for exhibition at the Sessions. He enters the dates of his visits, also the name, disease, alteration of diet, and other particulars relating to the prisoners. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two services on Sundays, with one sermon. He reads prayers daily at half-past 8 in the morning; and if his duty in the Cathedral does not interfere, which is rarely the case, the dean and prebendaries being in constant residence, he is in the prison till 10. On Wednesdays and Saturdays he is there for two hours in the afternoon. He administers the sacrament on Christmas-day and Good Friday, but does not permit any to communicate if not satisfied they are in a suitable state of mind. In his visits he abstains from speaking to the prisoners in classes, being convinced of its inutility, and avails himself of the opportunity of conversing with them in their cells. There is no system of general instruction, nor any schoolmaster. The boys and females, who are willing to learn, are supplied with books of progressive instruction, easy to learn, and he recommends them to assist each other. He finds them improve, and even learn, from repeating aloud the psalms and responses in the chapel. A majority of the prisoners can read, but not write. He observes a difference between the prisoners from town and those from the country; the former are more educated, the latter more tractable. No general desire is expressed for instruction. The great proportion of the prisoners from the agricultural parts of the county,—that is, six out of nine,—are most deplorably ignorant upon religious subjects. He does not think that the increased severity of the discipline, which has been in practice for three years, has any observable effect, except that the gaol is quieter, and the general intercourse more restrained. Has visited prisoners in numerous instances under solitary confinement, and has seen no beneficial results. They may dread it, but it does not reform them. He does not even think his visit to them in their separate cells on Sundays is of any great effect. He judges of it from having been jeered at and insulted in the streets by the old offenders after their discharge. He finds soldiers to be the most unmanageable of any class of prisoners, and the most destitute of religion. Recollects a case of several being in solitary confinement for six weeks without their being subdued. He reasoned with them most ineffectually; they were obstinately silent. They were confined to a dark cell; the only relaxation was the daily attendance at chapel, and one hour for walking exercise. Their beds were taken away in the day-time. Very few juvenile delinquents. There is not that facility in Carlisle for petty thieving as in a metropolis; they are also well looked after by the master manufacturers. He has in his general intercourse with the prisoners been so excessively deceived, and witnessed so much depravity among them, that he is induced to believe, that if he was at their elbows from morning to night, many of them would be no better for it. He considers the sentence of transportation is much more felt by them now than formerly. The debtors attend Divine service. The officers of the prison are also present. The chapel, from the lowness of the ceiling, is very offensive in summer, there being a want of proper ventilation. He has a private room in the keeper's house. He does not keep a private character-book. His journal, laid before the Quarter-sessions, contains the entry of his attendances, and the number of Bibles, prayer-books, and tracts in use.

Classification.—As prescribed by the Gaol Act, excepting as regards the females, whom the nature of their occupation will scarcely permit of its being strictly adhered to.

Labour.—The tread-wheel, and pumping of water into the tank. The employments are, making and mending the clothing, and whitewashing the prison. The females, both the sentenced and untried, wash and mend the linen, and sometimes one, of very abandoned character, is put to work a hand-pump. The prisoners receive no part of their earnings, nor is there any account kept of the work performed by them. The men at the wheels are in two separate classes of convicted felons and misdemeanants, but with only one taskmaster. They are kept to silence on the wheel, but are not prohibited from turning round while on it.

Offences and Punishments.—The common offences are quarrelling and talking on the wheels, punished by solitary confinement. Whipping is inflicted by a prisoner. The keeper generally fixes on a vagrant or a deserter, and promises him half-a-crown upon his discharge, and to prevent his being recognised the prisoner is blindfolded. I conceive the employment of a prisoner to execute the sentence of whipping, under the circumstances above stated, to be very objectionable. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Scourge.—Handle of box-wood, 1 foot in length, with nine lashes of thick whipcord, each 15 inches long, tied with thread at each end.

Visits.—Convicted prisoners receive visits once a-month without a magistrate's order. The time allowed is only eight or ten minutes. The untried receive visits daily, from eleven till three, Sundays excepted; they have also the privilege of seeing their friends on the Sunday previous to the Assizes.

Debtors.—From ten o'clock in the morning until six in the evening, and during daylight in winter.

Letters.—The prisoners, in the first instance, write the letter on a slate, which is submitted to the keeper's approval; they are then copied by the prisoner. Letters coming in are inspected by the keeper.

Benefactions.—The Earl of Lonsdale sends 5*l.* 5*s.* at Christmas to the keeper. This sum is proportioned between the debtors and the criminals. The debtors have their share in money, the criminals in a dinner, consisting of an allowance of beef, and a pint of ale for each.

Expenditure, Accounts, Books.—The keeper has the management and disbursement of all the prison accounts. They are laid before the Sessions quarterly, and when approved, the treasurer gives him a cheque for the whole amount, and he discharges the bills. The contracts for the supply of the prison are made annually. The account of the provisions and other articles for the prisoners' use are entered, with the prices, under separate heads. The bread-book is in the following form :—

I consider it a very objectionable practice to allow the keeper to discharge the tradesmen's bills. The treasurer invariably should do it himself.

Receiving-book.—Name—age—trade—where from.

Keeper's Journal.—Containing a general entry of the names, and extracts from the commitments of all prisoners, and of punishment for refractory conduct.

Register of Criminals.—Arranged under the heads of, Name and when committed—last place of abode—age—trade or employment—by whom committed—offence—when tried or convicted—sentence—discharged—remarks on character and conduct.

Debtors' Register.

Magistrates' Visiting-book.—Containing copies of reports of the state of the prison made to the Quarter-sessions, but no entry of visits.

There is a want of a proper receiving-book, for entering the description, and the effects in possession of prisoners on their commitment.

Debtors.—The debtors are divided into two classes, viz. master and common debtors. The master debtors are allowed to have their yards unlocked in the day-time, and to walk to the outer gate, and have access to the governor's house. The common debtors, who receive the county allowance, are always confined to their respective yards, and do not enjoy this privilege, it having been taken away from them nine months ago, for misconduct. The friends who come to visit them are locked into the yards with them. They are permitted to purchase provisions and beer. They work occasionally in the keeper's garden. The master debtors have fire-places in their cells, and are allowed to have fires, they purchasing the fuel. The debtors are allowed to purchase three pints of ale daily, and are permitted the use of tobacco. The practice prevails among them of getting any quantity of beer they please, by claiming the allowance of three pints for those who do not require, or have no means to purchase it. They occasionally manifest symptoms of intoxication from this abuse. The debtors have been greatly on the increase the last six months; there are a greater number now in confinement than were ever before known. The receiving-cells have been obliged to be made use of for their accommodation.

General Discipline.—The discipline of this prison has been much increased in severity within the last three years. The day-rooms for the convicted have been discontinued and silence enjoined during the day. The prisoners retire to their cells to eat their meals, and remain in them on Sundays, excepting while at Divine service, and two hours allowed for exercise, which consists in their marching round the airing-yards in Indian file. Each prisoner has a separate sleeping-cell, but there is no precaution taken to prevent communication between them at night, which may take place with facility from one cell to another. In fact, much remains to be done to carry the silent discipline to the extent to which it is capable, and at which a judgment may be formed of its efficiency. The magistrates, taking into consideration the increased severity of the discipline, have made a corresponding diminution in the length of the sentences of imprisonment; in many cases they have been abridged a third of their former duration. The additional rigour appears to have had a beneficial effect in deterring vagrants and tramps; their average formerly being 15, and now scarcely 1. They seek other districts, where prison discipline is of a laxer character. Fines also appear to be paid in a greater proportion than formerly. The number of prisoners, however, has not upon the whole decreased under the new system, nor have the officers observed it to have exercised any deterring influence upon the old offenders. Tobacco occasionally finds its way among the criminal prisoners, but not in any quantity, the use of it not being general among the lower ranks in this county. Occasionally the misdemeanants work in the keeper's garden within the walls. A very considerable obstacle to good discipline is the continued presence of transports, reported by the surgeon at the hulks as unfit for transportation. There are three females at this time under these circumstances, who mix with the other prisoners in their various employments. Their names and cases, being all second convictions, are as follows:—

Peggy Fletcher, tried April sessions, 1833, sentenced to seven years' transportation. Has been four years unable to undergo her sentence.

Anne How, tried January sessions, 1835, sentenced to seven years' transportation.

Sarah Jefferson, tried March sessions, 1835, sentenced to seven years' transportation.

The surgeon states, with reference to Sarah Jefferson, that she was perfectly well when she left the prison, but having caught a catarrhal affection on the road, she was returned as unfit. The expense to the county, of bringing her back from Woolwich, was 7*l.* 16*s.*

The paucity of juvenile delinquents in this county, and particularly from the now manufacturing city of Carlisle, forms an agreeable contrast to the frightful proportion in other places. The chaplain states—"That, some years ago, the youthful offenders were so numerous, that he found it necessary to institute a Sunday school between the services on the Sabbath; but the numbers have so diminished, and their education so greatly increased, as to render its longer continuance superfluous." The improved state of this most interesting portion of the community is mainly to be attributed to the master-manufacturers in the neighbourhood, who, not confining their attention to the physical wants of their labourers, are most assiduous in providing every means to meliorate and exalt their moral condition; in this praiseworthy rivalry the Messrs. Dixons are among the most conspicuous. They are the liberal supporters of every good work and the zealous enemies of every evil one.

Keeper.—Age 32; married; formerly articled to a solicitor; appointed 1834; salary 380*l.*, 5*l.* additional paid by the corporation, which is supposed by the town-clerk to be allowed for conducting the debtors to and from court, when they appear personally to receive notice of declaration. Coals, candles, soap, mops, brooms, and brushes, and the use of the garden within the walls. He receives 9*d.* a mile for conducting one or two convicts to the hulks, but if more than two, the allowance is reduced to 6*d.* a head. He gives security to the amount of 4000*l.* to the sheriff. He pays one turnkey out of his salary at the rate of 12*s.* a week, and has the appointing of all the officers, except the matron. I repeat the objection I have made in other cases, to a diversity in the mode of appointing and paying the officers of a prison, as often leading to consequences injurious to discipline and unanimity.

Turnkey.—Age 54, married; appointed 1821: 11½ years in the Cumberland militia; salary 31*l.* 4*s.* Coals, candles, soap: resides in the prison.

Taskmaster.—Acting as turnkey; age 42; married; appointed 1828; 11 years in the 48th Regiment. Salary 36*l.* 10*s.*; does not reside in the prison.

Taskmaster.—Age 53, married; appointed 1825; 13 years in the Cumberland militia; salary 36*l.* 10*s.*; read and write. Does not reside, but takes his meals in the prison.

Porter.—Age 61, married; appointed 1825; 21 years in the army, pension 7*d.* a-day; salary 18*l.* 5*s.*; waits upon the debtors, and receives about 1*l.* 6*s.* yearly, for performing trifling services for them. The turnkeys receive small sums from strangers, for showing the interior of the prison, a custom which I conceive should be put a stop to.

Matron.—Age 56; appointed 1829; salary 50*l.*; coals, candles, and soap; resides in the prison.

Chaplain.—Appointed 1824; salary 125*l.* Is lecturer at the cathedral; his duty there is to preach in the accidental absence of the prebendaries; he also preaches on Sunday evenings in the parish church of St. Cuthbert's.

Surgeon.—Appointed 1832; salary 70*l.*, inclusive of medicines.

The parish pays 2*d.* a meal for an adult, and 1*d.* for a child. The vagrants are registered in a book under the following heads:—Date—name of parish—county—trade—where born—where from—where going—what reason for travelling—age—height—eyes—hair—complexion—wife and number of children—remarks as to dress, &c. Prisoners are occasionally detained here a day or two after committal, in consequence of the keeper not being able, from other avocations, to set off at once with them for the county prison at Carlisle.

Keeper.—Age 44; appointed 1823; stone-mason; does not reside in the prison; salary 25*l.* a-year; 9*d.* a mile for conducting prisoners to Carlisle. The keeper built the prison on the present site, his own property, and leased it to the county for 21 years, at a rent of 14*l.* 14*s.* His cousin, a married man, resides in the dwelling-house above the prison, which was originally and appropriately intended for the residence of the keeper. Prisoners are occasionally detained here for considerable periods. In case of their being committed within three weeks or a month of the sessions, which are held twice a-year at Cockermouth, they are not sent to the county gaol at Carlisle, but remain until tried. A man, for want of sureties, has now been confined for three weeks. The magistrates visit weekly.

WHITEHAVEN.—COUNTY HOUSE OF CORRECTION AND LOCK-UP.

Whitehaven County House of Correction and Lock-up.

This prison is situate in the most elevated part of the town of Whitehaven. It adjoins other buildings, and, although of considerable size, is devoid of every suitable convenience. There are no means of inspection, and ventilation and light are wanting in the cells, and from the quantity of wood used in its construction, it is by no means safe from accident by fire. It comprises four airing-yards, four day-rooms, six sleeping-rooms, and four cells for prisoners, and a dwelling-house for the keeper.

Dimensions of Day-rooms and Cells.

Males.—Ground floor.—Day-room, 20 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft. 11 in.; 8 ft. 2 in. high.
Sleeping-cell, 7 ft. by 12 ft. 11 in.; 8 ft. 2 in. high.
First floor.—Sleeping-room, 20 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft. 11 in.; 7 ft. 7 in. high.
Cell, 7ft. by 12 ft. 11 in.; 7 ft. 7 in. high.
Females.—Ground floor.—Day-room, 23 ft. by 13 ft.; 8 ft. 4 in. high.
Sleeping cells, 7 ft. by 13 ft.; 8 ft. 4 in. high.

First floor.—The dimensions of sleeping-room and cell the same as those on the ground floor. No. 3 and No. 4, detached buildings with yards, containing two rooms in each, 14 ft. by 16 ft., 8 ft. 4 in. high; these rooms are only made use of when the other parts of the prison are full. The keeper's dwelling consists of kitchen, parlour, two chambers, and wash-house. The privies were in a most offensive condition; many of the squares of glass broken, and the entire of the prison in a neglected state. It is chiefly used for prisoners while under examination, or for bail, and in some few cases for those under summary conviction.

Diet.—The county allowance for the subsistence of prisoners is 2*s.* a-week, which is paid to them in money, and they purchase such articles of food as they desire. The smoking of tobacco is permitted.

Fuel.—No allowance of coal.

Bedding.—Palliasse, blankets, and rug; there are only four bedsteads in the prison; the male prisoners place their beds on the floor, and the single prisoner, who was there on the day of inspection, was accommodated in this way, his bedding lying strewed about the room in no very cleanly condition.

Cleanliness.—Neither soap nor towels allowed the prisoners: the prison requiring a thorough cleansing and lime-washing.

Health.—When medical assistance is wanted it is procured.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The prisoners are supplied with bibles and prayer-books. The curate of the parish attended the prison twice a-week during the last year, but has not during the present, nor is any Divine service performed. The keeper should, at least, comply with the directions of the Gaol Act, and read prayers himself, particularly as prisoners here undergo, occasionally, three months and, not unfrequently, one month's imprisonment.

Discipline.—No rules nor regulations. The yearly average number of prisoners 35.

Books and Accounts.—A register of the prisoners is kept under the following heads:—Name—age—size—eyes—hair—person—marks and remarks—date of commitment—when received—by whom committed—county allowance—from —to —when liberated—by whom liberated—observations.

York Castle County Gaol.

YORKSHIRE.

YORK CASTLE.—COUNTY GAOL.

In compliance with the enactment of the 4th Geo. IV., cap. 64, prescribing certain classifications of prisoners under charge or sentence, the magistrates at the first court of general gaol sessions for Yorkshire, held on the 1st of April, 1824, took into consideration the insufficiency of their county prison, and at subsequent meetings a building committee of nine of their body were appointed, with powers to purchase such land as they should consider requisite, to select an architect, and to build a prison adequate to the necessities of the county. Mr. Frederick Robinson's plans were preferred, and under his direction and the superintendence of the building committee, the present costly structure was raised. The site being that of the ancient fortress or citadel of York, the architect has employed the castellated style in the new erections, which presents rather an incongruous appearance in connexion with the Roman façades of the court-house and other buildings within the same area. The amount and details of the expenditure are shown in the annexed abstract:—

Among the most important of the new works is the noble but incomplete boundary wall of solid masonry, enclosing at present only a portion of the area, and thereby compromising the security of the part occupied by debtors. The foundations of this wall being laid in the ancient fosse, the architect had great difficulties to contend with in the construction; it is 6ft. thick at the bottom, and gradually diminishes to 3 ft. at thetop, and is 40ft. high. The principal gateway is flanked by two towers, the interiors of which are apportioned to lodgment for turnkey and porter, reception room for prisoners who arrive after locking-up, store-room, office for the clerk of assize, and a depository for public records. The accommodation for the male criminal prisoners and the keeper's residence are also new erections. They consist of four radiating wings, with day-rooms on the ground floor, and two stories above with sleeping cells; the day-rooms are 49ft. by 6ft. 9in.

The sleeping-cells are very small, and light is but imperfectly admitted to them; they are quite sufficient for the exigencies of the system of prison discipline which the magistrates were required to meet, but are wholly unfit for what is termed separate confinement. The day-rooms are also deficient in light; the airing-yards are looked into from the back windows of the keeper's residence, and a covered passage for the purpose of inspection is carried round the exterior of the semicircle formed by the radiation of the buildings and yards. The keeper's house contains a basement story, with kitchen, bath, and store-rooms; ground floor, kitchen, two rooms for turnkeys, visiting-room, and two offices; first floor, seven rooms; second floor, seven. The accommodation for females adjoins that of the males, and is part of the old building; it consists of a number of irregular, inconvenient, but roomy apartments, with three airing-yards. The condemned cells and chapel are also in this building; the chapel is divided into eight compartments, secured with iron railings in front, for as many classes of male prisoners; the seats are on an inclined plane; it also contains two galleries for females and debtors. It would have been far preferable if the chapel had been placed in the keeper's house, by which the access of the males, always in greater numbers than females, would have been much more convenient. The building appropriated to debtors is detatched from the others; the rooms are commodious; the basement having been the old prison for male criminals; it has an airing-yard in its rear, to which the debtors are confined when the castle yard is used on public occasions. The privies and drainage are complete. The expense of the new buildings in this prison have undoubtedly been enormous and disproportionate, when placed in comparison with the extent of their accommodation. They are, perhaps, the finest specimen of modern construction in our country, and if the sole object of their erection was security, it has certainly been attained. It must, however, be admitted that a much smaller sum would have sufficed to build a prison similar as to size, but of plainer exterior, and of less cumbrous solidity. The division walls of heavy masonry between the airing-yards might have been lightened of material, a much less quantity of iron-work used in the apertures, without any diminution of security, and with a beneficial increase of light and air to the interior, and the truly magnificent covered passage, upwards of 100 feet in length, from the keeper's house to the chapel, might have been altogether spared. Among the deficiencies yet to be supplied, are cells for refractory prisoners.

Diet.—The prisoners receive 10 lbs. of bread, and 1*s.* each, weekly. Transports, sentenced at the assizes, receive 1*s.* 6*d.* a-head, those from the sessions, only 1*s.* I trust that this improper and inconvenient practice is already abolished, and a suitable dietary provided in the prison. The injustice of giving prisoners convicted and sentenced to transportation at the assizes, a premium of 6*d.* a-week additional, over those similarly sentenced at sessions, who are brought to York Castle to be conducted to the hulks, needs no comment. Soldiers in solitary confinement likewise receive the bread, and 1*s.* weekly. A frying-pan and boiler are allowed to each day-room, and privileged persons are permitted to come to the exterior railwork of the airing-yards, to sell provisions. The day-rooms, from the quantity of provisions lying about, cannot be kept in an equal state of cleanliness with the other portions of the buildings.

Clothing.—Untried prisoners are not clothed; the convicted, party-coloured dress of yellow and black.

Bedding.—Iron bedstocks, flock bed, three blankets, and one rug.

Fuel.—Twenty stone of coal in the summer, and thirty in the winter to each day-room weekly.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean: this observation extends also to the debtors' apartments.

Health.—The attendance of the surgeon is daily, and oftener when required: he does not see the prisoners before they are classed, there being no receiving-cells for them. The prisoners are in general very healthy; low fevers and occasionally typhus appear: venereal and eruptive diseases are common. The male infirmary is seldom in use, but is sufficient; there is an infirmary for the females on the Crown side, also separate ones for male and female debtors. The Surgeon's Journal is arranged under the separate heads of—Dates of visits—names of patients—diseases—observations and duration—new cases of sickness—number of sick—deaths. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—On Sundays the chaplain performs one full service, with sermon, in the morning, and reads prayers in the afternoon, after which he catechises and instructs the younger prisoners. Prayers are read by him every morning in the week but Thursdays, on which day service is performed by another clergyman, the explanation of which is as follows:—In the year 1634, Phineas Hodgson, one of the dignitaries of the cathedral, charged an estate after his death with the yearly sum of 40*l.*, of which amount, 35*l.* is paid to a clergyman, according to the terms of the bequest, for reading prayers in the gaol, on Thursdays, at eleven o'clock, at all times of the year except during the assizes, or the prevalence of an infectious disorder: the remaining 5*l.* to be distributed in bread to debtors who attend the chapel. The appointment is in the dean and chapter, who ordinarily select one of the vicars-choral for the duty; the magistrates have only to grant permission. The chaplain administers the Sacrament four times a-year; the number of communicants are generally about seven or eight, inclusive of debtors. He says, " there is a false idea among the population relative to the Sacrament, which prevents it being generally partaken, that if, after receiving it, they lapse again into sin, it is fatal to them hereafter." The chaplain does not visit the prisoners in solitary confinement, nor see the prisoners separately; there is no schoolmaster: he states, "he considers it would be beneficial if there was one; there is a boy now here who came in shortly after the last assizes, and will remain until the next, who from his talent and disposition would have reaped great advantage if there had. Some of the prisoners express a great desire for instruction, the males much more than the females. The proportion of those who now read and write is much greater than formerly; those from the West Riding are the highest in the scale of information. In the North and East Ridings they have all to learn. I fancy those who come here are either the most ignorant or the most clever of the humble classes." The books and tracts are provided from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; all the prisoners on the Crown side attend chapel except those in solitary confinement. The chaplain's journal contains a record of his attendances. I consider that under the head of Moral and Religious Instruction there are great deficiencies in this prison. Many of the prisoners under serious charges have to remain here for the long intervals between the assizes, without any attempt being made to soften their hearts by the consolations of religion, personally administered, or to improve their minds by the inculcation of morality. I have always considered the ministry of the chaplain to be much more important to the untried than the convicted prisoner. Although the former may be satisfied of his guilt, and at moments depressed with the sense of it, hope still agitates his mind with the chance of acquittal, some relic of self-respect yet lingers, comparisons between the advantages of following good or evil flit before him, perhaps only requiring communion with the minister of religion for their future realization, and, at least, manifesting this to be the more seasonable time and situation for such attentions, than after conviction, when the disposition too often becomes soured by punishment, and the heart rendered callous by despair. In illustration of the desire of knowledge among the prisoners, I found the ignorant, of their own accord, availing themselves of the acquirements of those most instructed; in several cases, with such imperfect means, considerable progress had been made, particularly in writing, to which some facility is afforded by their being gratuitously provided with the requisite materials. The want of superior direction was here conspicuous, as many of the sentences used for copies in the writing books were such as a more capable judgment would not have selected. The chapel clerk, with a salary of 20*l.* per annum, performs no other duty but that of attending Divine service. The extension of his office to that of schoolmaster, under the immediate superintendence of the chaplain, would I think be very desirable.

Classification.—As prescribed by law.

Labour or Employment.—The women are employed in washing and mending the linen; the males in tailoring, shoemaking, &c.

Offences and Punishments.—The conduct of the prisoners who are generally sent here under very serious charges, is described by the keeper as affording little cause of complaint. The ordinary punishment for offences is confinement in the cells. No whipping has ever taken place. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Irons.—Weight, 4 lbs. 6 oz., used in the conveyance of convicts.

Visits and Letters.—At the discretion of the keeper, subject to appeal to the visiting justices upon his refusal.

Benefactions.—A regular debtor and creditor account is kept of the receipt and disposal of all sums under this head, which is laid before the grand jury at each assize. The funds are generally applied in assisting the discharge of poor debtors.

Phineas Hodgson's gift of 24 rolls every Friday is distributed to every debtor in rotation. There can be no doubt that this bread was originally intended by the donor for such only as attended the Divine service provided for by him on the Thursdays (vide Moral and Religious Instruction). On St. Thomas's Day every debtor receives a loaf of bread. The Archbishop of York at Christmas sends a quantity of coals to be distributed among the debtors.

Debtors.—The behaviour and condition of the debtors presents no variety to that in other prisons. Garnish is paid, and they have rules for their government; a quart of ale is allowed to be purchased by each daily; they all take it, with a very few exceptions; they sell it to each other, and keep it for sale; they are occasionally noisy and intoxicated; they do not regularly attend Divine service, and those who do interrupt it by coming in after its commencement. The accommodation for this class of prisoners is very suitable; they have the large area of the castle-yard for exercise: their rooms are of sufficient size, and each debtor is allowed an iron bedstead, flock mattress, and pillow, three blankets, and a rug, paying 1*d.* a-week for their use to the keeper. One female has been confined for a contempt for 17 years, and one male for 11 years, receiving the county allowance for poor debtors, of 9 lbs. of bread weekly.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The expenses of this establishment, in which are included the county courts, are borne by the three Ridings, in the following proportions—West Riding, 12*s.* in the pound; North ditto, 4*s.* 6*d.*; East ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.* The clerk to the general gaol sessions has the whole management of the accounts relating to the expenditure, the keeper simply examining and checking the bills by the quantities received. Bread, coals, and printing are contracted for annually. The bills are examined and approved by the visiting justices, and are laid before the magistrates at the general gaol sessions, who authorize the clerk to draw upon the Ridings for their respective proportions. The general gaol sessions only taking place at the Lent and Summer assizes, a cash credit is necessarily given to the clerk for the payment of salaries of officers, and in discharge of contracts. The clerk's cash account-book contains entries of all monies received and paid on account of York Castle, which is duly examined, and balanced half-yearly: he likewise enters, in a separate book, the resolutions come to at general gaol sessions, and attends all meetings of the visiting justices.

The discipline to be administered is therefore of a very simple order, and its principal defects have already been adverted to under the heads of Diet, and Moral and Religious Instruction. Cells for refractory prisoners, as well as for those under sentence of solitary confinement, are much wanting. The salaries paid to several of the officers appear very considerable, particularly those of the keeper and the travelling turnkey.

YORK.—City Gaol.

This prison stands detached from other buildings, in a convenient and retired spot, close to the ancient walls of the city. In compliance with the enactments of the Gaol Act, establishing classification as the basis of prison discipline, it was, at a very considerable expense, enlarged and fashioned to its present size and form. It is now but little used, except in cases of prisoners under serious charges; one male prisoner for trial, and one female, were, with the debtors, the only inmates at the period of inspection. It is surrounded by a lofty boundary wall of brick, affording ample security from escape. The prison buildings appropriated to criminals are generally damp, from the want of occupancy, and the preposterous height of the walls dividing the airing-yards, which impede the free circulation of air through the interior. Similiar to other prisons where the old parts have been grafted on and applied to new purposes, this is deficient in general convenience and simplicity of arrangement. The windows of the rooms occupied by the male and female debtors open directly into the yards of male and female criminal prisoners, and to prevent communication between them under such circumstances is impossible. The rooms appropriated for debtors are of ample size, well lighted and ventilated. They open into a spacious gallery, affording sufficient room for exercise in inclement weather. The sleeping cells for criminals and refractory prisoners are of the following dimensions:—

Old Prison.

8 sleeping cells, 7 ft. 6 in. by 7 ft. 4 in., 9 ft. 8 in. high.
Female Ward.—8 sleeping cells, 7 ft. 6 in. by 7 ft. 4 in., 9 ft. 8 in. high.

3 Refractory Cells, New Prison.

Entrance cell, 6 ft. 6 in. by 3 ft. 6 in.
Cell, 6 ft. 10 in. by 6 ft., 9 ft. high.
1 refractory cell, Old Prison, 7 ft. 10 in. by 7 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. 6 in. high.

The refractory cells are dark, and well constructed for the prevention of communication, having an exterior door and passage leading to each. The keeper's apartments are connected with the main buildings, and consist of a basement, with kitchen for the prisoners; ground floor, three rooms; first floor, two rooms, with the chapel; second floor, two rooms. The chapel is of semicircular form, with a gallery for the debtors extending round its area; below are eight divisions for criminal prisoners. The premises occupied by the keeper are much affected by damp. The airing-yards are paved, and supplied with water and commodious water-closets. There are no adequate infirmaries. The prison has not been lime-whited the last year. Improper communication between male and female debtors is not sufficiently provided against.

Diet.—One pint of milk, and 1½ lb. of bread daily. I do not consider this diet by itself sufficient to preserve health for any long period of time. The prisoners are permitted to purchase or receive through their friends articles of food, tobacco, and occasionally a pint of beer.

Clothing.—The prisoners receive no regular clothing, and even when absolutely requisite, there is great difficulty in obtaining the necessary supply.

Bedding.—Iron bedsteads, palliasse, three rugs or blankets.

Fuel.—The criminal prisoners receive 6*d.* a-week for coals, which is paid to them by the keeper.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean.

Health.—The surgeon attends when required. Keeps a journal under the following heads: when visited—names—observations—new cases—total of patients—deaths. One death only has occurred during the year, that of a debtor from paralysis. The surgeon also attends the City House of Correction. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain, who also officiates at the City House of Correction, reads prayers twice on Sunday, and preaches a sermon; prayers also on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Bibles and prayer-books are provided for the prisoners. The chaplain states, "The debtors do not attend Divine service. If one-fourth attend, I think myself favoured. When any of the debtors are ill I always attend, and take the opportunity of speaking to them, and exhorting them to serious thoughts. I also visit the criminal prisoners when they are in their day-rooms." Keeps no journal, except of attendance and performances of duty.

Labour.—None, excepting cleaning the prison.

Visits.—Friends of convicted prisoners are allowed to see them three days a-week, without restriction. Letters allowed in and out as they please.

The books consist of criminal and debtors' register, keeper's journal, disbursement, letter, and return-book, and visiting magistrates' order-book.

Debtors.—The conduct of the few debtors in this prison is most disgraceful. Spirits are introduced, and intoxication is a common occurrence. A few days before my visit, the matron, upon locking up, found a female debtor in a state of deadly drunkenness, lying on the floor, with her feet under the grate. During my inspection, one debtor, who has been an inmate of the prison for seven years, was reported drunk in the middle of the day, and by order of the magistrate who happened to be present, placed in a refractory cell, and directions given to search all strangers presenting themselves for admission at the gate. Women dressed in men's clothes have been detected visiting the debtors, and communication takes place between the male and female prisoners.

York City House of Correction.

YORK.—CITY HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

This prison is similarly situated to the gaol, near to the old fortifications of the city. It consists of a central house for the keeper, with three detached radiating wings for prisoners. The keeper's house contains on the ground floor three rooms: first floor, two chambers, with chapel: second floor, four chambers. The chapel is partitioned off into four divisions for males, and one for females. The chapel is connected with the radiating wings by cast-iron bridges thrown across from the upper story, forming separate entrances for different classes of prisoners. There are six paved yards, with water laid on from a reservoir, and water-closets in each. The cells are arched, the floors of stone, and six double cells have fire-places. The buildings are of white brick. The exterior wall is of octagonal form, and there is a considerable plot of ground in the rear, the property of the city, applicable, if necessary, to a further extension of the prison.

Dimensions.

Double cells.—13 ft. by 8 ft., 9 ft. 4 in. high.
Single cells.—8 ft. 6 in. by 6 ft., 9 ft. 4 in. high.
Three refractory cells, dark.—8 ft. 4 in. by 5 ft. 10 in., 9 ft. 1 in. high.

There are no infirmaries nor reception cells. The lodge at the entrance gate consists of two rooms on the ground, and three on the first floor, occupied by the turnkey.

Diet.—1 pint of milk and 1½ lb. of bread. Those at hard labour have an additional ½ lb. of bread. I do not consider, and the surgeon is of the same opinion, that the pint of milk and 1½ lb. of bread is sufficient for prisoners under long sentences. The prisoners complain of the small quantity of food. Upon my first visit to the prison last spring, I found it to be the practice to allow each prisoner 6*d.* a-week in money, and to permit them to introduce whatever quantity and quality of provisions and tobacco they thought proper. This license has since been discontinued, and the good effects are everywhere visible in the prison.

Bedding.—Iron and wooden bedsteads and hammocks, palliasse, two rugs, and a blanket.

Clothing.—None allowed, but when absolutely necessary, second-hand clothes are purchased for the occasion.

Heat.—The cells are not warmed. Coals to the value of one shilling weekly allowed to each day-room.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean. Prisoners who require it are put into the bath upon their coming in. Straw litters are made use of instead of palliasses in some of the cells appropriated to vagrants and prisoners for short terms, which I think objectionable.

Health.—There are no infirmaries nor rooms set apart for the sick. A vagrant brought the typhus fever into the prison last year The keeper's wife, son, daughter, and a prisoner were in turn attacked by it. The surgeon states, that great inconvenience resulted and danger was hazarded by there being no proper place for the sick. The prisoners infected with the itch are kept apart in one of the day-rooms. The surgeon examines the prisoners before they are classed.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain reads prayers twice, and preaches one sermon on a Sunday. Prayers are read by him on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, and on the alternate days by the keeper. He sees the prisoners privately, particularly those of youthful age; hears them read portions of the Scriptures, and elementary books are given to them for the purpose of teaching each other. They seem to desire instruction. There is a lady who visits the female prisoners weekly, reads to them, and distributes tracts under my direction. When she is prevented attending, from ill health, the chaplain's lady sees the females in both prisons. The chaplain's book is simply a register of his attendances and duties performed. A private individual attends at this prison and the city gaol on Sundays, for the purpose of instructing the prisoners in singing, for which he receives 6*l.* 6*s.* a-year, which I think might be well spared.

Classification.—Classification not at all times adhered to, from the want of accommodation. Transports have occasionally been placed with the untried prisoners.

Labour.—A tread-wheel was erected in this prison, but has been taken down and sold. The prisoners are now employed in breaking stones for the roads. They are brought from all parts of the prison to work together, the only overlooker being the turnkey at the lodge, whose numerous other avocations render the proper execution of this most important duty quite impossible. The labour of the prisoners is of no great intensity. The proceeds are most properly applied to the maintenance of the prison. The labour is frequently impeded, from the want of stone. The prisoners are also employed pumping water and working in the keeper's garden, and in cleaning the keeper's boots, shoes, knives, &c. The women wash the prisoners' linen. The untried prisoners are employed breaking stones, at their own request, receiving for it the extra allowance of bread.

Offences and Punishments.—The common prison offences are quarrelling, punished by 24 hours' confinement in refractory cells. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Scourge.—Whip-handle 18 inches in length, nine lashes of large whipcord, 22 inches long, with six knots in each. The whipping is inflicted by the keeper, and the infliction is merely nominal, as to severity. The surgeon is not present.

Visits.—Prisoners receive visits once a-week, between the hours of 12 and 1. To the writing of letters there is no restraint.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The accounts are paid quarterly, through the Town Council, as those of the city gaol.

The books are register, disbursements of petty cash, labour-book, containing the names of the prisoners and the number of hours they are at work breaking stones, and magistrates' visiting-book.

Discipline.—There is a great want of another officer in this establishment for the necessary superintendence of the prisoners while engaged in labour. Night-charges are occasionally conveyed here by the city police. The prisoners are brought sometimes in the middle of the night, and no entry is made of the particulars by the constables bringing them. The prison is described as being generally crowded to excess during the race week, especially the vagrant class, when as many as ten have slept on litters in one of the day-rooms. The average number of prisoners is about 22, but there have been as many as 80 on the above occasions.

Keeper.—Age 49; appointed 1832; previously for ten years an officer in the prison; salary, 140*l.*; garden and plot of ground belonging to the city without the prison, for which he pays a rent of 5*l.* 5*s.* annually.

Turnkey.—Age 55; appointed 1832.

Carpenter.—Salary, 50*l.*; read and write.

Matron.—Appointed 1832; wife of the keeper; salary, 20*l.*

Chaplain.—(See City Gaol, York.)

Surgeon.—(See City Gaol, York.)

Singing Clerk.—Salary, 6*l.* 6*s.*; flax-dresser by trade; attends on Sundays.

The salaries of the officers of the two establishments are, I understand, to be greatly reduced in amount, I trust without injury to their efficiency. One of these prisons appears to me ample for the wants of the City of York; more particularly as the considerable district of the Ainsty, heretofore comprised within its jurisdiction, having been thrown into the Riding; but the selection is replete with difficulty, as both are deficient in the convenience and arrangement requisite for the combined classes of debtors, untried and convicted prisoners.

York, St. Peter's Liberty Gaol.

YORK.—St. Peter's Liberty Gaol.

This ancient Liberty, which, it is said, may be traced back to the reign of King Edward the Confessor, formerly possessed several valuable immunities and a most extensive jurisdiction, not only in the county of York, but in other parts of England. It is gradually falling into abeyance, but constables, and publicans for licenses, &c., still, at a great inconvenience, attend the Court Leets and Sessions from districts of 50 miles, such as Dalton-upon-Tees, and of 18 or 20 miles, such as Knaresborough, in which town a few houses are within the Liberty. The Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral church of St. Peter's, York, are the lords of the Liberty. It has a separate Commission of the Peace, and Bench of Quarter-sessions; and a Court is held every third week before the steward or under-steward, where pleas in actions of debt, trespass, &c. to any amount are taken, provided the cause arises within the Liberty. The gaol for the Liberty is an old building, in the Minster-yard, and comprises a court and jury-room, office and apartments for the keeper, 2 cells below ground for criminals (now disused) and rooms for debtors, of the following dimensions:—

1 cell for criminals—15 ft. by 8 ft. } 7 ft. 6 in. high.

One prisoner, under charge of felony, escaped during the year 1836. There was no prisoner confined at the time of inspection. The prison was clean. The Dean and Chapter pay the whole expenses of the establishment, and allow the keeper two shillings a-head weekly for the maintenance of all descriptions of prisoners. Medical assistance, when requisite, is provided. No Divine service.

Keeper.—Age 59; appointed 1807; salary, 28*l.* 12*s.*; allowance for supplying coals, 5*l.*; fees as crier of the court, 1*l.* 4*s.*

This building is insecure from escape, has no airing-yard, and is without a single requisite for a prison. Its abolition would be a benefit to the public, as well as to the parties charged with its maintenance.

WAKEFIELD.—House of Correction for the West Riding.

This prison stands in a low humid situation, on the margin of a water-course. The area within the walls is of irregular shape, but of some extent, for, besides the space occupied by the buildings, it furnishes an ample garden for the use of the keeper. Built at different periods, it does not possess that perfect union and centralization of parts which enlarges the scope of human oversight and vigilance, while at the same time it diminishes the labour of maintaining it. The old prison remains in the form of an H, and is appropriated to the male hospital, cells for the refractory, work-rooms, and other uses; the more recent erections consist of a circular range of extensive brick buildings, with airing-yards in their front, radiating from the keeper's house as a centre. The mess-houses or sheds, where the prisoners eat their meals, are built against the division walls of the airing-yards, with their ends adjoining the passage round the keeper's house, provided with shutters opening only from the outside, for the purposes of inspection. The dimensions of these sheds are 72ft. 6 in. by 10 ft; 11 ft. 9 in. high. Two similar sheds are made use of as dormitories for the numerous class of vagrants and misdemeanants; they are furnished with fixed iron berths in tiers of three, to the number of 30 in each, and separate bedsteads on the floors for the wardsmen. The chapel is an oblong of the following size:—54 ft. 8 in. by 29 ft. 1 in.; 23 ft. 3 in. high. The male prisoners sit on benches without any apparent distinction of class. The officers are conveniently placed for the purposes of inspection in pulpits elevated above the prisoners, disposed at intervals against the walls. The females sit in a gallery, and have a separate approach. The infirmary, in the upper part of the old prison, is difficult of access, and does not possess the advantage of insular situation; its windows look upon the female wards, and it is not altogether as convenient as might be expected in an establishment of such magnitude. The part of the prison allotted to females is very ill-suited for the purpose; it consists of an intricate mass of buildings without convenient connexion, and wanting in almost every requisite. The female infirmary is especially deficient in size, ventilation, light, and every quality it ought to possess. The privies in this part of the prison appear to be ill-contrived.

Apart from the buildings for the prisoners are houses occupied by some of the under officers, blacksmith's and joiner's shops, bake-house, gas-works, kitchen, dead-house, and lodge for the porter. The keeper's residence contains on the ground floor, kitchen, two offices, room for chaplain, and prisoner's visiting place. First floor, five rooms; second floor, six chambers. The interior of the prison is lighted during the whole night by gas manufactured on the premises. The water with which the prison is supplied is of indifferent quality, but has, through the care of the visiting magistrates, been much improved, by submitting it to a process of filtration. The drains are periodically cleansed by turning a portion of the water through them from the adjoining course.

Diet.—Considerable difficulties have at times been experienced in adjusting a scale of diet which might be free from the reproach of excess, and, at the same time, preserve the health of the prisoners exposed from the low and damp situation of the prison. The magistrates in 1833, after the passing away of the cholera, which was a severe visitant, reformed the diet, which had been relaxed on the appearance of the disease, and substituted the following:—

WAKEFIELD HOUSE OF CORRECTION DIET TABLE.

| | Breakfast. | Dinner. | Supper. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Sunday....... | 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and 5⅓ oz. of bread. | 5 oz. of boiled beef, 5⅓ oz. of bread, and ⅓ lb. of mashed potatoes or other vegetables. | 1 pint of broth thickened with oatmeal and 5⅓ oz. of bread. |
| Monday...... | The same. | ½ lb. of boiled rice in a solid state, seasoned with allspice, and 5⅓ oz. of bread. | 1 pint of oatmeal porridge and 5⅓ oz. of bread. |
| Tuesday...... | The same. | 1 quart of porridge thickened with 1¼ oz. of oatmeal, and ¾ oz. of flour, and 5⅓ oz. of bread. | The same as Monday. |

| Friday....... | The same. | The same as Monday. | The same as Monday. |
| Saturday...... | The same. | 1 quart of porridge thickened with ground rice and oatmeal, and 5⅓ oz. of bread. | The same as Monday. |

This was shown to be insufficient by the prevalence of scurvy, diarrhœa, and a general decline, observable in the health of the prisoners. The medical officer then recommended a higher dietary, and the present one was substituted, which the surgeon considers sufficient, except as to the quantity of bread, which he thinks might be beneficially increased in some cases; the allowance to some prisoners being 1½ lb., to others 1 lb.: the latter he finds too little.

Bedding.—Iron bedstocks, mattress, two blankets, two rugs.

Heat.—This prison is not heated, although it appears to me highly necessary that it should be, particularly if prisoners are to be separately confined for such long periods of time as they have been here. The surgeon considers much of the prevailing disease to be aggravated by the cold, and that it would be highly beneficial if the sleeping cells were warmed. A thermometer was placed in the hands of an intelligent and well-educated convict for several days, and he was required to note down the temperature of the working and sleeping cell to which he was confined, which was done as follows:—

Cleanliness.—Prisoners, upon coming into the prison, are passed through the bath and examined by the surgeon. The whole of the prisoners are bathed once a-week, a very beneficial regulation when practicable. The males have clean linen twice, the females once, a-week. The prison and persons of the prisoners clean.

Health.—The surgeon attends and goes through the prison daily, and is present at the infliction of corporal punishment. The most prevalent diseases are scrofula and syphilis in all their forms. Inflammatory diseases of the chest and air passages, fevers, acute and chronic rheumatism, diarrhœa, ulcers of the legs, and chronic affections of the lungs, liver, and bowels. The male infirmary consists of three rooms and kitchen, with accommodation for 25 patients; the female infirmary, two rooms and kitchen, and beds for 8 patients. The itch ward for males, which is apart from the infirmary, comprises three cells and a day-room. The surgeon states—"That rheumatic complaints and colds prevail greatly among the prisoners in the winter, and that the sleeping cells require to be warmed. That in the cases of scurvy he has found the greatest benefit from administering diluted nitric acid, in doses of about 60 drops, when conjoined with an improved diet. The system of silence has, from the constant vigilance and superintendence, greatly diminished the cases of simulated disease; it is not carried into effect in the infirmaries. The attendants upon the sick are prisoners. The women who are committed as vagrants almost invariably come in with the venereal disease, and most probably for the purpose of being cured, as they are not admissible into the public infirmaries: they are generally sent for a month, and, in the state they are, generally remain in hospital until they are discharged." Among those committed, as vagrants, are not unfrequently persons suffering under epilepsy; there was one a complete idiot on the day of inspection; these, when necessarily taken into the infirmary, are great obstacles to the cleanliness and quietness necessary to be preserved there.

The surgeon states the hospital never to be without occupants, that he scarcely if ever recollects the number to have been below six, that the House of Correction being built in a very low situation, the dampness of some of the cells on the ground floor may have contributed, in conjunction with cold, to predispose prisoners to the prevailing diseases. Among the deaths entered in the surgeon's journal, as having taken place during the year, one appears to have happened in the night while the prisoner was confined in a refractory cell. The event is thus recorded in the surgeon's journal:—

July 30th, 1836.—Willoughby Holey died very suddenly in the night: he had no previous complaint, and appeared in good health when locked up in his solitary cell the preceding evening. Two prisoners, who were confined in the adjoining cells, say, they heard no alarm in the night. The body was found uncovered, and stretched obliquely across the bed, with the head in a depending position. No post mortem examination was instituted, as his friends objected; and having stated that he was subject to epilepsy, the coroner thought it not required. Most probably he died from effusion on the brain.

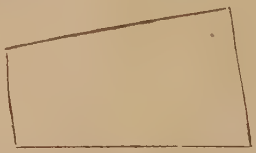
The following extraordinary case of repeated attempts at self-destruction also occurred during the present year; and it is pleasing to record, that the individual thus rescued from monomania appears to have undergone a most salutary change of mind. He is now perfectly composed and resigned to his situation.

———, received from York for one year, then to be transported for life. On the morning of the 15th of April, 1836, was received into the infirmary, suffering most acutely from pain in the bowels; upon inquiry he confessed that he had attempted to destroy himself, by having swallowed, at different periods since his committal, portions of glass, which he had obtained by breaking a pane of his cell-window. He had made an attempt upon his life when in York Castle, by dividing the veins at the bend of the elbow.

Upon examining the gullet with a probang no portion of glass could be felt, although from his sensations he felt confident that some pieces had not descended into the stomach. Copious draughts of thick gruel, followed by an active emetic, ejected nothing particular. After the use of large doses of castor oil, and repeated glysters, several angular fragments of glass and pieces of broken pot were passed, quite unaltered. From the size and acuteness of the angles of the portions of glass, I suspected some deception, conceiving it hardly possible for them to have passed through the convolutions of the bowels without having produced some abrasion or material injury to their inner coat. He was therefore most carefully watched by two of the turnkeys, who saw him placed on the night-chair, and had the contents instantly removed into an adjoining room.

Four portions of the glass of this size



I extracted with a pair of forceps, having become entangled in the lower part of the rectum. Altogether the fragments of glass passed, when united together, formed a pane nearly the size of the broken one in his cell. Upon inquiry, he stated that he had enveloped the glass in bread, and in that manner prevented it irritating in the act of swallowing. On the 2nd of May he was sufficiently recovered to be enabled to return to his employment as a comber.

But a few days elapsed before he again made another attempt, by cutting his throat with a piece of old iron that he had sharpened and secreted. In consequence of this he was placed under restraint, but extricated himself by destroying, with his teeth, the straps that confined him, and on the 30th of June he made a desperate effort by dividing the veins at the bend of the elbow, and lost a considerable quantity of blood. To prevent any future attempts, I directed two wardsmen to be constantly with him; nevertheless he managed, a few days after, to tear open the wounds, and having found a large needle upon the coat of the wardsman, who had fallen asleep, he deliberately plunged it several times into the pit of the stomach. From these various attempts he lost a large quantity of blood, and consequently became much reduced: by nutritious diet and attention he soon was restored, and enabled to return to his work; and as a preventive for the future, he is constantly attended by a wardsman during the day, and placed in a cell without a window in the night, being carefully searched by a turnkey previous to locking-up.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain performs two full services on the Sabbath, and read prayers daily, at eight o'clock in the morning, generally remaining in the prison from that hour until twelve. After morning prayers he goes among the prisoners, distributing books and talking to them, either in their separate cells, working-rooms, or in the infirmaries; this occupies him till ten; he then catechises and hears the boys read until twelve. He does not regularly administer the Sacrament, not having found prisoners in a satisfactory state of mind to receive it; he does not visit the prisoners when in the dark cells for breaches of discipline. The tracts are those from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; the books are much mutilated and abused by the prisoners; he superintends the school; the instruction is confined, with the exception of the boys, to those only who cannot read, and whose periods of confinement exceed a month, who are selected by the keeper. The schoolmaster is assisted in the school by a prisoner; the untried and convicted are taught together in the same classes at the school. The chaplain states—" When the system first took place, I had great hopes from the diminution of our numbers, that it would have been permanently beneficial, but the late increase has quite put an end to my expectations. I find that I do much more among the prisoners by personal communications than by discoursing in the chapel." The schoolmaster does not confine his attentions to the school, but visits and reads to the sick prisoners and those in separate cells, and in the working-rooms, where the labour carried on will admit of his doing so. He says, " I always accompany the lessons with moral advice and explanation of the Scriptures; many of those prisoners who say they could read well once, have entirely forgotten it. The younger men are able to read in a far greater proportion than the older ones; as soon as a prisoner can read tolerably well, he is discharged. I find the men who can read more anxious to go on than those who cannot; they complain that they can read but do not know the meanings, and want them explained. Many men who can read and even write are most profoundly ignorant of religious subjects." The chaplain keeps a journal, of which the following are extracts:—

13th May, 1836.—Read prayers in the chapel; went into the long passage and read prayers and part of a chapter in the Testament; went into a few of the cells, but found the smell so bad could not remain.

June 3rd, 1836.—Read prayers and spoke to the men in long passage. Remained talking to them separately for an hour and a half; went through the shoemakers' room, and spoke to each of the men, and gave them books. Was much pleased with a young man, named ———. He seemed quite an altered man; he says he feels quite thankful he has been sent to prison; when he first came he was very hardened indeed; but latterly his heart has been quite changed. It is quite a pleasure to talk with him. He speaks of religion in a most pleasing manner; says that his time now passes most pleasantly to him; that the days appear not to be half the length they were since he began to pray daily unto God, and read the Bible. He asked me to see the man sent in with him, and to tell him how changed he trusted he was through the grace of God, and that he now had a peace of mind which filled him with hope that his prayers for pardon had been heard, and that he should be forgiven, and he trusted he should lead a better life for the future.

4th June.—Read prayers. Gave out tracts to the men who wanted them. Taught the boys. Heard them repeat part of the 1st chapter of St. John. Visited the men who came in, and gave each a tract; spoke to ——— who came in with the man mentioned above, told him of the other's great improvement, and that he wished me to tell him of his change and of the resolution he had made of amendment. Encouraged him also to do the same, that when they both left they might become examples of good for the future. Also visited the sick-room, and talked with those confined there.

21st September, 1836.—Read prayers; went into the women's prison and heard the little girls read and repeat some prayers; remained almost an hour; went into the wool-picking-room and read to the men; went also to the old men in No. 13, and read and talked with them; much pleased with the remarks of one man, named ———, on what I said. Received a letter from a clergyman at ——— to whom I had written, respecting a man who had apparently had a paralytic stroke, and seemed to be desirous of religious instruction; was grieved to find that most of what he had told was false. In short, found out that he was a most skilful hypocrite. Have had lately much to discourage me. I fear but little good is done. Almost all of those who seem to be the best, I find, on inquiry, to be the worst men in the prison. It will not, however, do to grow weary in well-doing. I must go on and hope even against hope. Remained till after twelve.

17th October.—Read prayers; left early; went over to see after ——— and ——— who had been in some months for felony. Saw ——— and talked to him some time. He has been better since he left, and has been to church. ———, I am sorry to say, has done nothing but drink since he went out. ——— is going on in a very bad way.

The exceptions to the general attendance at chapel are the sick, the men confined in the refractory and separate cells, and in what is termed the long passage, where prayers are read to them by the schoolmaster, and the labourers specified in the annexed return:—

Names of Sweepers and other Labourers who do not attend Chapel regularly.

Classification.—The classification, as laid down in the Gaol Act, is not adhered to since the enforcement of the silent system. The tried and untried mix together in the school, at work, and chapel. Satisfied as I am with the inadequacy of the system of classification as prescribed by the Gaol Acts, I am no less so of the necessity of preserving the moral distinction between untried and convicted.

Labour and Employment.—The tread-wheels are placed in a detached building of two stories, with separate divisions for each prisoner. The men work for half an hour on, then rest for ten minutes. During the time of rest, the prisoner sits fronting his place on the wheel in a cloak of coarse woollen, to protect him from the inconveniences of checked perspiration.

The trades carried on in the prison are burling cloth, worsted-tying, wool-picking, shoemaking, weaving cotton, combing wool, twine-making, linen-weaving, glass-grinding, oakum-picking, woollen-weaving.

The keeper receives one-fourth of the prisoners' gross earnings. Those of convicted prisoners are carried to the credit of the Riding. Prisoners under charge, and who are acquitted upon trial, if they have been employed as weavers, combers, shoemakers, painters, and joiners are paid one-eighth of, and if at other work, one-half of their earnings. The earnings of the prisoners are put down in the table of expenditure as being, for the year 1835-1836, 714*l.* 10*s.* 3½*d.*, from which amount the keeper has received his share of one-fourth. To show the fallacy of exhibiting this sum as a profit upon labour performed, I have only to remark that a sum averaging 150*l.* yearly is paid by the Riding to the Lord of the Soke for permission to grind grain within the prison, and that this sum is not debited against the earnings of the treadmill, nor are the salaries of the taskmaster, miller, and superintendents of labour brought into the accounts. The variety of trades carried on at a very trifling profit might be advantageously consolidated, whereby the prisoners would be more under the eyes of the paid officers of the prison, instead of, as at present, employed in various and distinct parts of the building, and thus multiplying unnecessarily the labour of inspection. I fully agree with the taskmaster in his evidence, "that the simple employments of picking wool or oakum would be felt as a much greater punishment than several of the occupations they are now engaged in, which interest their minds and make them forget their situations; if a man is convicted of felony and is a shoemaker or weaver, he is often put to his own trade, which is little punishment." I have to remark that picking of oakum or wool does not so much abstract the prisoner's mind, but that he may listen and attend to the reading of the Scriptures at the same time. The treadmill, from its producing no visible result of labour, is more regarded as a punishment than any other, and I cannot think that the enormous power ought to be reposed in the hands of the keeper, of determining whether a prisoner sentenced to hard labour shall virtually undergo his sentence upon the wheel, or because he happens to have a knowledge of a trade, or for some other reason, he is to be set at work at his own craft, or to be taught that of weaving. I am of opinion that every prisoner sentenced to hard labour should take his turn at the treadmill unless prevented by infirmity.

Offences and Punishments.—The general punishments for breaches of prison regulations are the stoppage of meals and confinement in the solitary cells, upon a reduced diet. Prisoners can talk to each other in these cells, and being away from the more peopled part of the prison, are less likely to be interrupted. A practice prevails here with regard to the infliction of punishment which requires much discrimination in the application, and although perhaps it comes within the legal bearing, I doubt much if it is in the spirit of the 41st clause of 4 of Geo. IV., cap. 64, which restrains the keeper from placing a prisoner in a refractory cell for a longer period than three days; and the 42nd clause declares, that in the case of any repeated offence against the rules of the prison, the keeper shall report to some of the visiting justices, who are empowered to punish the offender by close confinement for one month, and personal correction. The following case will show the practice referred to, which gives the keeper an almost unlimited power of inflicting solitary confinement: ——— was sent to the refractory cell for refusing to work, and was confined there for 21 days on bread and water, every third day being brought down and asked by the keeper, "Will you go to work?—I will not. Then take him back again.' The surgeon says, with reference to this man, that "he refused to take his food when in the refractory cell; he did not complain, but his pulse became feeble and his body emaciated, and though a strong man, could not bear it much longer; I went to the very verge of safety with him before I interfered. I have been obliged to order men down in several instances from their health being affected." When released from the refractory cell, the man still refused to work, and upon its being reported to the visiting justices, they ordered him to be whipped. He received but nine lashes, when he declared he would go to work, and was taken to the mill, where he has been ever since without intermission. Whipping is inflicted by one of the turnkeys; the number of lashes never exceeds 24. The severity is almost nominal. Number of Punishments, see Table.

Scourge.—Whip handle, nine lashes of large whipcord, 19 inches long, with nine single knots in each.

Irons.—Not used.

Visits and Letters.—Convicted prisoners are not permitted to receive letters or visits from their friends during the first six months of their imprisonment, unless under peculiar and pressing circumstances; and after the first six months not oftener than once a-month, nor to send more than one letter per month. Relations and friends of the unconvicted prisoners are allowed to visit them, in the visiting-room, between the hours of one and three, on Fridays only.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—The single article of provisions contracted for in this establishment is the beef; the others are provided wholly by the keeper. The accounts are made up monthly, and presented to the visiting justices for examination at their meeting on the first Tuesday in the month. At this meeting a credit is given to the keeper by a cheque upon the treasurer of the Riding, generally to the amount of 400*l.*, for the payment of current expenses. The bills and vouchers are laid before the general quarter-sessions annually, at Pontefract. I consider the method of conducting business thus detailed, as extremely deficient in those salutary checks which always ought to intervene between the receipt and disbursement of public money. I am quite sure that the time occupied by the keeper in attending the weekly corn-market, to purchase grain for the consumption of the prison, and the other extra mural affairs in which he must necessarily be engaged in ordering the supplies of provisions, stores, &c., might be much more advantageously spent within the prison, and himself relieved from a weighty responsibility. This could be accomplished by simply extending the single contract for beef to all the principal items consumed in the prison. This arrangement would at once render the advance of so large a sum monthly as 400*l.* quite superfluous. Nor do I see the actual necessity for it even under the present system, except in the instance of corn purchased in the open market, I do not find a single tradesman's account which might not be brought regularly before the magistrates at the month's end, for their examination, previous to payment. All bills above a fixed amount ought, I think, to be paid by the treasurer. A running cash credit of the kind here used is more baffling to the necessary check imposed in all business transactions, than any other operation with which I am acquainted, and ought never to be permitted except in cases of imperative necessity. To guard against the possibility of misconstruction it is as well to state, that these remarks are introduced as only applying to the system, and not in the remotest degree to those engaged in administering it.

The great varieties of work carried on in this prison tends to create complexity in matters of account, and to the multiplication of books, which would be avoided by a simpler arrangement of the branch of discipline with which they are connected.

Keeper's Journal.—Containing entries of occurrences within the prison.

Various other books besides those above described are kept, either in connexion with the labour or discipline. A register is kept by the keeper's clerk, which I consider, from its confidential nature, ought to be entrusted solely to the chaplain, or to the keeper himself, if done at all. Inquiries, by letter, are made upon a prisoner being discharged, as to his future conduct, to references obtained from him on his committal. I have found that the knowledge of a man's having been in prison at all has deprived him of the means of earning that honest livelihood to which he had devoted himself. It is stated in the evidence of one of the officers that the constables frequently, when a discharged prisoner has obtained work, warn the master of his former lapse. The following is a specimen of the book to which I advert:—

Last ——— he stole a sovereign from another person; at the same time he robbed me to a small amount, and I am convinced that his father does not keep his children under good government."

Discipline.—I shall first describe the routine of discipline as at present enforced, and append such observations as suggested themselves upon this head during my inspection. A bell rings at half-past five in the summer, and the whole of the officers assemble at six. Three of the number unlock the cells, and four attend the yard, where the whole of the prisoners wash; the other officers are disposed in the passages, inspecting the men as they proceed to their work. The moment a cell is unlocked the prisoner descends into the washing-yard, where tubs are placed at distances from each other; three prisoners at a time wash themselves in these tubs. As they finish washing, each proceeds to the part of the prison where his work is carried on. At two minutes before eight they again assemble, and are marched to chapel, and from chapel they proceed in the same regular order to the mess-rooms for breakfast, which occupies half an hour. They sit with their backs to each other, at tables of about 18 inches wide. The officers then call the roll, each prisoner being known by a number attached to his clothing, and corresponding with his cell. The wardsmen then make their reports of misconduct; the prisoners of whom they complain are called out and separated from the rest, who proceed to their respective occupations in the same order as before. The men who are reported are brought before the keeper, who hears the complaints of the officers and wardsmen, and adjudicates accordingly. Those sentenced to solitary confinement are taken to the cells, those to stoppage of supper proceed to their labour. At twelve the prisoners go to dinner, as before; in the cold weather they remain in the mess-rooms until one. In summer one-third of the number take exercise daily in the yard, walking in Indian file, until the hour has expired. They remain at work until six, and are locked up at half-past, proceeding to their cells under charge of the officers who superintended them in the mess-room. The roll is called over at every meal, and in the evening those whose suppers have been ordered to be stopped for misconduct are called first, and their allowances withdrawn. During the day silence is enforced by the presence of the wardsmen, overlooked by three officers, whose duty is confined exclusively to this object. After locking up, and until ten, the officers walk through the galleries between the cells in list shoes. At ten two watchmen come on, one of whom is constantly in the interior, the passages being lighted by gas. On Sundays the prisoners remain in the mess-rooms during the intervals between chapel and meals, and are locked up at night between four and five o'clock. A portion of the prisoners, both untried and convicted, selected by the keeper, are placed in separate confinement in what is termed the Long Passage, in which are 34 cells. The doors of the cells and the circular apertures for ventilation are opposite each other in the galleries. The keeper says—"I had heard a great deal of the improved method at Glasgow, and I was induced to try it here, both with prisoners before trial and convicted. A number were accordingly placed in cells with a loom and hammocks, necessary from the want of space, instead of the usual bedding. They are only permitted to leave their cells for Divine service on Sundays, the bath on Thursdays, and to go below to satisfy the wants of nature. They sometimes meet and speak to the sweepers on their way down." The strong doors of the cells are open during the day, additional ones of canvass with slight wooden frame-work being substituted, to exclude the prisoners from each other's sight.

Twenty-three officers, assisted by about thirty wardsmen selected from among the prisoners, are daily employed in maintaining this discipline. I have a very high opinion of the silent system, both as a deterring agent and as a preventive to contamination, if maintained in its perfect integrity, which I do not consider it to be in this prison. That the interior of the establishment presents a striking and beneficial contrast to its former condition is not to be questioned, and great credit is due to the zeal and perseverance by which this has been accomplished; but it is quite impossible that any penal discipline can be thoroughly effective unless unsparingly applied to all who bring themselves within its limits. As long as one temporal advantage is allowed to remain within a prisoner's reach, so long will there be a provocative to his appetite for deceit. I shall now proceed to show that the wardsmen, instead of assisting the discipline, are in fact its greatest impediments; that they are not only unjust in themselves, but the cause of injustice in others; that the calm spirit of resignation under punishment never can develope itself as long as one guilty man is armed with power over his associates; that a feeling of irritation and hatred pervades the whole prison, which occasionally vents itself in acts of outrage, and that fitness for this office depends more upon subtle than moral qualities. I subjoin a list of those prisoners, male and female, with the offences and sentences, at the period of inspection, employed as wardsmen and wardswomen:—

If the length of sentence may be taken as manifesting the degree of offence, the male prisoners thus employed must have been conspicuous. The chaplain says—" I do not consider that separate confinement has the slightest effect beyond the first week. Several of the prisoners prefer it, for they get rid of the wardsmen, as they express themselves. The men who are selected as wardsmen are not the proper people who ought to fill the office; the greatest thieves and most abandoned are selected for the office. I have reason to believe that many charges have been grossly exaggerated by the wardsmen. Their being here is no punishment; they have the greatest of enjoyments—power. The wardsman in the hospital, who is engaged to read the Scriptures to the sick, told the schoolmaster that he had long ago thought, and found out the Old Testament to be a mere farce." The keeper says—" He is highly satisfied with the discipline, as far as it goes, but that the great evil is the appointment of the prisoners as wardsmen in such numbers; that he is obliged, from the number required, to make use of characters which he would not otherwise do. A great deal of ill-will is engendered by it; the prisoners feel it as an injustice; they frequently ask to be placed in separate confinement, for they say, we can then be out of trouble." It would be a great advantage to have paid officers. The expense of the wardsmen for extra provisions, and the loss from their not being at labour, may be about 200*l.* a-year. The testimony of all the officers is of the same tenor. Several of the prisoners have refused to act in this capacity. Others have been severely ill-treated, and have even been struck, when making their reports, in the presence of the keeper. The keeper at York Castle stated to me, that a prisoner who had been a wardsman at Wakefield, and was brought to the county gaol under sentence of transportation, was so ill-treated and subjected to such annoyance from the other prisoners, that after having tried to prevent its repetition by punishment, he was compelled to remove the man to another part of the prison. I questioned several of the prisoners confined in the separate cells as to their reasons for preferring it. One said—" The wardsmen have their eyes constantly upon us below, and we cannot move without being found fault with: in the cell I can move about. My reason for preferring the cell is the fear of being punished unjustly." Another prisoner, upon being asked which he preferred, above or below, answered—" That would all depend upon what he had to do below." A third, a very intelligent man, sentenced to two years' imprisonment, complained of the misrepresentation of a fellow-prisoner as wardsman, who had formerly been his most intimate associate at York Castle. He said the other was no better than himself, and it was not right that he should be under his direction. An additional proof, if any were wanting, of the vexatious conduct of the wardsmen, is the great number of the reports made to the keeper every morning, and which, on account of their trifling character, are passed over without notice. This statement may be further illustrated, by showing the number actually punished on such reports for one month.

I have, under the head of Labour, adverted to the inconvenience arising from the variety of manufactories carried on in the prison. I now annex a return of the number and description of another class of prisoners employed in menial or other offices, and but partially subjected to prison discipline. Several of these employments I consider quite superfluous.

I proceed to observe upon the prisoners of all classes placed in separate confinement in the middle passage, where may be seen prisoners sentenced to hard labour previous to transportation, and men before trial in adjoining cells undergoing the same treatment, and engaged in either picking wool or weaving. In the absence of any regulation, the selection of these prisoners is at the sole discretion of the keeper, who may be said in these instances to wield a dispensing power in the application of the sentences of hard labour. The evidence of officers and prisoners is to the effect that this kind of confinement is preferred to the vexatious meddling of the wardsmen, and also to the tread-wheel. The keeper says, that these men in some cases in their separate cells are objects of interest to the officers, and that they are acquainted with every thing that takes place in the prison. This appears to be true, for in the cell of one of the convicts, formerly in the legal profession, besides books of an entertaining character, a number of manuscript legal opinions and cases were found at the period of inspection, which had been placed in his hands by one of the inferior officers. The chaplain states, that prayers are read daily, either by himself or the schoolmaster, in the middle passage; that the effluvia has been so dreadful at times that he has been compelled to retire below. The keeper further observes, "I have found those prisoners much more indifferent to the prayers in the passage than when in the chapel. In walking through at this time, I have detected them reading other books." I have extracted the following entry from the keeper's journal:—

June 6, 1836.

In order to ascertain the feelings of prisoners on the two modes of discipline—the solitary confinement, and the silent system, I examined all those prisoners who had been separately confined more than seven days.

The six following prisoners, who had been confined in the cells during the whole three weeks, said that they would rather be confined separately than amongst numbers.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Jacob Utley | aged 27 | James Varnoni | aged 29 |
| Charles Waite | ,, 22 | William Knight | ,, 23 |
| James Fuller | ,, 40 | Joseph Whitehead | ,, 22 |

The following three gave the preference to confinement amongst numbers.

Christopher Scott, aged 19 | Samuel Slade, aged 16 | John Sling, aged 21

Of these nine, the youngest chose one mode of discipline, and the eldest another.

The eight following prisoners, who were confined separately from seven to sixteen days, decided as under:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| William Swift, | confinement amongst numbers, | aged 21 |
| John Spence | ,, | ,, 26 |
| Benjamin Whittam | ,, | ,, 16 |
| Henry Turner | ,, | ,, 22 |
| Wilson Greenwood | ,, | ,, 20 |
| John Heptonstall | ,, | ,, 20 |
| Peter Lyons | ,, | ,, 28 |
| Henry Small, | separate confinement | ,, 46 |

The oldest man here chose the solitary system.

After fourteen days' confinement, the majority favoured the solitary system; for shorter periods of imprisonment the other system was preferred.

An additional obstacle to the efficiency of separate confinement, as preventing communication between the untried, is the numerous places at which the sessions are periodically held in the West Riding, and to which the prisoners in mass are conveyed for trial. The dormitories where so many prisoners are brought together at night is a serious impediment in the way of administering an equal discipline. The keeper says, "that he has never seen a prisoner upon his knees before going to bed in the dormitories, although he has frequently observed it in the cells. There seems to be a sort of morbid sensibility for fear of the others, which keeps them from following the bent of their own inclinations." The trifling imperfections that yet remain to notice, are the want of a better arrangement at the time of washing, when the prisoners are most inconveniently, and I think unnecessarily assembled all together; the officers receiving money from visitors to the prison; the bakers sleeping apart from the other prisoners; and the hazardous employment of a prisoner during a part of the night in the gas-house. The same complaint is made here as in other prisons, of the constables withholding property belonging to prisoners.

The observations and suggestions contained in this report have been communicated to the visiting justices, and received by them with the greatest courtesy and the most marked attention.

A Table showing the proportion of Prisoners Punished to the Number Committed during the Years :—

| Years. | The Number Committed during the Year. | Punished. | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | By Deprivation of Supper. | Per Centage. | By Solitary Confinement. | Per Centage. | Total Number Punished. | Total Per Centage. |

The decrease in the number of punishments by deprivation of suppers, and the increase of those by solitary confinement, in the year 1836, result from an experiment made in order to ascertain whether the number of offences would be lessened by augmenting the severity of punishment, which appears in some degree to have had this effect.

Leeds Borough Prison and Lock-up.

LEEDS.—BOROUGH PRISON AND LOCK-UP.

This prison is attached to the Court-house, and is only fit for the temporary detention of prisoners while under examination. The sleeping-rooms are deficient in ventilation, and the airing-yard too confined in space for its numerous inmates. The windows from the female day-rooms look directly upon the airing-yard of the males, and they are in constant communication. There are no privies for the females, nor airing-yards.

Dimensions.

Ground Floor.—4 sleeping cells, 10 ft. by 7 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. high, arched, containing 2 beds each; 1 day-room for males, 12 ft. by 12 ft., 9 ft. high, arched, with a fire-place; 1 for females, 12 ft. by 10 ft. 10 in., 9 ft. high, arched, with a fire-place; 1 other day-room for females, angular in form, and 10 ft. high; 1 cell, 9 ft. 6 in. by 6 ft., for drunken and refractory prisoners; 1 room, with soft-water pump for the prisoners' use.

First Floor.—5 sleeping-rooms, same size as the ground floor, 7 ft. 6 in. high, flat ceilings.

Second Floor.—5 sleeping-rooms, same size as the others, 7 ft. high, with flat ceilings.

The prison-yard, 72 ft. by 12 ft., with privy and pump.

The whole of the day and night charges are lodged here, and the noise and bad language from the drunken and disorderly is described by the keeper as being at times almost unbearable. To this mere lock-up it has been the custom to send prisoners convicted at sessions for short sentences of solitary confinement. It is quite impossible but that prisoners so situated must go out worse than they went in, from the continual communication which they cannot help having with the very dregs of the population, daily and nightly concentred here.

There have been as many as 20 night charges at one time in the single day-room for the males. At the last October Borough Sessions sentences of imprisonment to this prison were passed upon the following persons:—

Mary Anne Brooks, aged 15, stealing, 7 days.

The keeper states, "She passed her time in swearing and bad language."

Hannah Culverson, aged 11, stealing, 7 days.
Aaron Giles, aged 17, stealing, 7 days.
John Holmes, aged 14, stealing, 7 days.
William Baddick, aged 35, stealing, 14 days, the last 7 days solitary.

It is difficult to understand why these prisoners were made the exception to the other convicts, who were sent to the House of Correction at Wakefield.

Bedding.—The bedsteads are of wood; two are placed in each room. The bedding consists of palliasse, two blankets, and rug.

Fuel.—Is furnished to the day-rooms all the year round.

Diet.—1½ lb. of bread and 3 pints of coffee a-day.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean, the cell appropriated to the refractory being the only exception, and that owing to its inconvenient situation and want of ventilation rather than neglect. Soap and towels provided for the prisoners.

Health.—Medical attendance provided when required.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—None.

Punishments.—Whipping is inflicted by the town beadles under sentence of Court, and generally upon boys. No surgeon attends. Twenty-four lashes the greatest number given. It is of no severity.

Scourge.—Common whip handle, 2 feet long; 9 lashes of large whipcord, 8 single knots in each.

Irons.—Used upon refractory prisoners, 5 lbs.

Expenditure.—The cost of the maintenance of the prisoners who passed through this lock-up for the last 3 years is as follows:—

| Years. | Prisoners. | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1833 | 2660 | 233 | 2 | 0 |
| 1834 | 2488 | 203 | 1 | 4 |
| 1835 | 2628 | 185 | 1 | 6 |

The accounts are made up and paid every three months. The keeper receives 8*d*. a-day for the maintenance of each prisoner, and states his profit therefrom at 30*l*. per annum. I have called the attention of the mayor and magistrates to this infringement of the provisions of the Gaol Act, and have no doubt it will at once cease.

A Waste-book and Ledger are kept by the keeper, who inserts every particular relative to the prisoners in charge, and the sums due to him for maintenance.

General Discipline.—This establishment is even replete with inconveniences for the purposes of a lock-up for so important a town as Leeds, but is entirely inapplicable to the purposes of corrective discipline, to which, in some instances, it has been applied; the borough, at the same time, contracting with the county for the maintenance of prisoners at Wakefield. The mode of sending prisoners upon committal from Leeds in open carts to Wakefield is very objectionable; they are exposed to the weather and to improper communication. A van should be provided.

Keeper.—Age 33; appointed 1835; formerly plumber and glazier; succeeded his father.

VAGRANT HOUSE, LEEDS.

Vagrant House, Leeds.

In this populous town there is a vagrant office, and a house fitted up for the purpose of a nightly receptacle for vagrants, where they are provided with bed and bedding, and with 4*d.* or 6*d.* to purchase food; the utensils for cooking being also provided them. The establishment is exceedingly well managed; but whether the principle is a sound one, appears to me very questionable. The expenses have hitherto been paid out of the poor-rate. The numbers lodged and relieved, the sums expended in their relief and for the maintenance of the establishment, for the four years last past, are as follows:—

A very complete register is kept, with entries of descriptive particulars of their persons, trades, reasons for travelling, where from, where going to, settlement, &c.

ROTHWELL, NEAR LEEDS.—DEBTORS' PRISON.

Rothwell Debtors' Prison.

This prison was formerly the poor-house belonging to the parish of Rothwell, and was taken on lease by the Duchy of Lancaster, about the year 1814, for the purpose of converting it into a debtors' prison, for the Liberty of the honor of Pontefract. This liberty, situate in the West Riding of Yorkshire, extends westward to the borders of Lancashire and Derbyshire, eastward to Goole, northward to the parish of Thorney, and southward to that of Penistone. The present keeper is coroner as well as bailiff over the liberty; he executes the writs himself, and has authority from the duchy to appoint deputies. He purchased the lease of the premises and the appointment about 23 years ago, from the former holder of them, with the consent of the duchy, for 4000*l.* The rent stipulated to be paid to the duchy by the tenant in occupation being 44*l.* for the first four years, and 84*l.* during the rest of the term of 31 years, of which about 12 are to come. The fees at the period of his purchase were worth from 500*l.* to 600*l.* a-year.

The passing of the Uniformity of Process Act, by giving the sheriffs the authority as now expressed in writs, that "you shall not omit, by reason of any liberty, to take A. or B.," has caused his office and this prison to fall into desuetude, the sheriffs naturally preferring their own officers to those of another authority. The present keeper, at the time he purchased the office of bailiff, employed twelve deputies, who paid him rent for their deputations, amounting to 300*l.* per annum. He has not now a single one.

The prison consists of a brick building of two stories, with an adjoining house for the keeper, and a small lodge for a turnkey. In the front is an airing-yard for the prisoners, inclosed by a wall about 18 ft. high; the back front looks upon the keeper's garden, and is without any real security. The interior of the building, which contains seven sleeping-rooms in the upper story and five day-rooms below, is in a dilapidated state, and was at the time of inspection in a dirty and neglected condition. The prisoners appear to take not the slightest pains even to perform the most common acts of cleanliness in their apartments; the rooms unoccupied were in an equally dirty state with the others. There is a cell below ground intended for the purposes of confining the refractory, but even without the filth with which it was encrusted, it is wholly unfit for the imprisonment of any human being. No medical assistance is provided. No clergyman attends, nor is Divine service ever performed. Some time since a Wesleyan minister attended; but in consequence of the insults of the prisoners, such as putting crackers into his pocket, &c., he was obliged to give it up. There is no effective separation between the males and females. The keeper has no means of coercing refractory prisoners, and were he to do so, he says they would probably avail themselves of the utter insecurity of the building, and escape. He states them to be drunken and disorderly: they charge a garnish of 7*s.* 1*d.* to every new comer, the greater part of which is expended in drink. He has tried in vain to prevent it. Prisoners have refused payment for some time, but at last, from the petty vexations they have been exposed to, have been obliged to submit. When a stranger comes in, it is the custom for one of the debtors to put on a cocked hat, and demand garnish. They use the same chant as the one in the prison at Macclesfield. One prisoner has been here since March, 1832. The keeper charges 2*s*. a-week to each debtor for his bedding and sheets. The profits of his office have declined so much as to render it impossible for him to pay the rent to the duchy. In one case, upon application by an attorney, he consented to divide a portion of the legal fees with him, on condition of his sending him a prisoner in lieu of his going to the county gaol. He has applied several times to the duchy, to be exonerated from his office, and for compensation, but without any result.

The following is an extract from the keeper's books of the number of prisoners who have been confined there in the years undermentioned:—

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1820 | 86 | 1826 | 96 | 1832 | 30 |
| 1821 | 73 | 1827 | 74 | 1833 | 18 |
| 1822 | 73 | 1828 | 64 | 1834 | 13 |
| 1823 | 56 | 1829 | 71 | 1835 | 17 |
| 1824 | 53 | 1830 | 64 | 1836 | 14 |
| 1825 | 46 | 1831 | 70 | to Nov. the 3rd. | |

If this establishment must be continued, it is absolutely necessary it should be subjected to some authority, and under some regulations. It is however but justice to observe, that the officers of the duchy, on their attention being directed to the state of this prison, immediately exerted themselves as far as lay in their power for its amelioration.

BRADFORD.—Town and County Lock-ups.

Bradford Town and County Lock-ups.

A convenient and handsome court-house, with lock-ups in the basement, has just been erected in this town, the expense being defrayed by the county, aided by a munificent subscription, amounting to 3250*l*., from the inhabitants of Bradford and gentlemen connected with the town and neighbourhood. The cost, without furniture, has been 6250*l*. The lock-ups are constructed upon a convenient plan, the apartments for males and females being completely apart from each other. The cells open into a spacious covered area, under the court-house, amply sufficient for exercise, and it is proposed to enclose the whole building with a boundary wall.

Dimensions.

4 cells for males, 8 ft. by 10 ft. 6 in., 9ft. 3 in. high; water-closet in each cell.
Day-room, 14 ft. 7 in. by 12 ft., 9 ft. 3 in. high.
3 cells for females, 12 ft. 6 in. by 9 ft. 8 in., 9 ft. 3 in. high.
Vagrant-room, 20 ft. 6 in. by 11 ft., 9 ft. 3 in. high.

Bedding.—Straw palliasse, 3 blankets and rug for each prisoner.

Prisoners are only detained here while under examination by the magistrates, or during the Sessions, which are holden once a-year. The county allows the keeper 8*d*. a-day for the maintenance of each prisoner under charge of felony, the town 10*d*. a-day for vagrants and disorderlies, and 1*s*. a-day is charged to prisoners who have the means of paying for their support.

From October Sessions 1834, to the same period in 1836, 724 prisoners have passed through these lock-ups.

Keeper.—Deputy-constable; salary, 50*l*.; paid by the town.

This small prison was extremely clean, is well suited for its purpose, and is apparently very well conducted.

BRADFORD—Debtors' Prison.

Bradford Debtors' Prison.

This prison for debtors from the Court of Requests consists of a house for the keeper, and 2 detached buildings for prisoners, with suitable airing-yards. The males and females are placed quite separate and apart from each other. The accommodation consists of 3 day-rooms on the ground floor, 3 sleeping-rooms on the first floor for males, a day-room and sleeping-room for females. All the apartments have fire-places. The airing-yards are paved, and have convenient privies. The bedsteads are made of wood, two prisoners sleep in each, and from six to eight in each room. The bedding consists of a chaff mattress, two blankets, and a rug. The allowance of food is 1 lb. of bread of good seconds quality a-day to each, but in cases of extreme distress 1*d*. a-day is added from a fund in the hands of the clerk of the Court. No allowance of fuel. Tobacco and beer are permitted to be introduced in small quantities. No Divine service performed nor prayers read, nor medical assistance provided. There were 6 male prisoners on the day of inspection. The greatest number confined here at one time was 11 males and 2 females. Shoemakers, tailors, &c. are permitted to carry on their work.

Keeper.—Age 32; appointed 1835; salary, 50*l.*

Observations.—The prison was extremely clean and well managed, and is well adapted in every particular for the purpose to which it is appropriated. Vide Report upon Halifax Court of Requests' Prison.

HALIFAX—GAOL FOR THE LIBERTY OF WAKEFIELD.

Halifax Gaol for the Liberty of Wakefield.

This prison, in Gaol-lane, Halifax, is the property of his Grace the Duke of Leeds, the Lord of the Manor and Liberty of Wakefield, the jurisdiction extending over a population of 200,000. It consists of an ancient public-house, where the Court Leets have been held for upwards of a century and a half; it is known by the name of "The Gaol House," and has a wine license. It has fallen into such disuse since the introduction of the non-omittas clause into writs upon mesne process, that a portion of the old building has been let off for a police-office. Debtors are still however sent here in execution. One was imprisoned here from November 7, 1834, to April 1, 1835; a second from May 6, 1835, to October 13, 1835; a third from July 1, 1836, to August 14, 1836. The publican considers himself bound, and does find accommodation for prisoners when brought by the bailiff, the latter being accountable for escapes. There are 6 rooms, and a yard for exercise. Upwards of a century ago, the annual sum of 40*s.* was by will given for the use of poor debtors in this gaol, and was made chargeable upon certain freehold premises in the town. This sum is now paid 20*s.* at Midsummer, and 20*s.* at Christmas to the gaoler, by Mr. Alexander, a solicitor at Halifax. From its being traditionally called "bread-money," I have no doubt that the charity was formerly dispensed in this aliment. This prison, from the circumstances above recited, is neither of advantage to the public nor to the noble owner of the Liberty. It moreover possesses the singular and illegal combination of being a gaol and a tavern at the same time.

HALIFAX—TOWN LOCK-UPS.

Halifax Town Lock-ups.

These have been lately built, and consist of police-office, apartments for the keeper, and 2 rooms for prisoners, neither secure nor well adapted for the purpose, nor of sufficient size for such a population; a large window from the room for males looks directly into the yard of a public-house. The keeper states, that in consequence of prisoners communicating with others by this means, he has failed in proving several cases of felony. Prisoners are lodged here while under examination, and upon committal are sent to Wakefield. The average number of prisoners is about 35 a-month. They frequently remain here for 3 or 4 days. A deserter was confined here for 16 days, and 2 prisoners under remand for 8 days. 7 males and 2 females the greatest number of prisoners. Prisoners under charges of felony are fed by the keeper, who receives 8*d.* a-day for each from the Riding; vagrants by the town, at the rate of 10*d.*, and those able to maintain themselves are charged 1*s.*, for which they are provided with coffee and bread at breakfast and supper, and meat for dinner. A very proper register of prisoners is kept by the keeper.

Keeper and Constable.—Age 29; formerly in the Manchester police; salary, 100*l.*; fees from serving warrants, 60*l.*; he receives 16*s.* for a single prisoner, and 8*s.* for every additional one he carries up to the House of Correction at Wakefield. He is obliged to employ an assistant, to whom he pays 30*l.* a-year.

HALIFAX—COURT OF REQUESTS' PRISON.

Halifax Court of Requests Prison.

This prison, situate in a retired spot about a mile from the town of Halifax, was erected about eight years ago, in conjunction with, and upon a similar plan to the one at Bradford, for prisoners under execution from a Court of Requests for debts under 40 shillings, the terms of imprisonment being forty days for debts exceeding 20 shillings, and twenty days for those under 20 shillings. The Commissioners have a discretionary power vested by the Act, and their general practice is, a day for every shilling of the debt sued for. The costs never exceed 9*s.*, and although the jurisdiction of this court is extensive, no charge is made for conducting the prisoner to gaol. The accommodation for the males consists of a neat and convenient range of buildings of two stories, containing five day-rooms on the ground floor, and five sleeping apartments above, all of ample dimensions, looking upon a spacious paved and enclosed airing-yard. Pumps and privies in each yard. The female ward is quite detached and separate from the males. It consists of one day-room, and sleeping apartments above, with an enclosed airing-yard. There is also a room set apart, without a fire-place, for the confinement of refractory prisoners. Each prisoner has a separate bed; the bedstead iron. Bedding, straw palliasse, two blankets, and rug. No fuel. 1 lb. of bread allowed a-day, and, in extreme distress, 1*d.* a-day from the Court charity fund. Divine service not performed, nor prayers read. The greatest number of prisoners at one time, 48.

Keeper.—Age 24; appointed 1836; salary, 50*l.*, house and garden.

The extreme cleanliness and good management so apparent in the two small prisons of Bradford and Halifax merit this public testimonial on behalf of those charged with the superintendence. I have only to regret that some means are not devised by which the prisoners might enjoy the comforts and advantages arising from Divine worship and religious observances, the more particularly as a second execution not unfrequently extends the actual imprisonment to 80 days, and a third might to a still longer period. I subjoin a copy of the rules acted upon in these establishments.

Rules and Orders made for the Prison of the Court of Requests for the Parishes of Bradford, &c. &c., at a General Meeting held at Bradford, the 12th day of October, 1832.

Ordered,

That no spirituous liquors be sent for, or brought into the said prison, but by the advice of a doctor, and to be used as medicine only; nor any ale or strong drink, more than for necessary maintenance; nor shall anything by way of garnish, either in money or drink, be demanded or taken; nor any gaol-fee, by the said gaoler or his assistants.

That the men and women prisoners shall be kept in their own separate rooms and areas, and on no pretence suffered to come out of the same, until the expiration of the term of his, her, or their imprisonment. The doors into the men's and women's areas shall be open no longer than from eight in the morning to four in the evening, from Martinmas to Candlemas, and from eight in the morning to six in the evening, from Candlemas to Martinmas; and the prisoners may within those hours send for work or victuals, by whom they please, and their relatives or friends may, within those hours only, come to visit them; and if the gaoler or his assistants be required by a prisoner to fetch and carry any work, &c., a sum not exceeding 9*d.* a-week may be charged for the same.

That none but the gaoler, his family, or assistants, and the prisoners, shall be allowed to sleep in the said prison, except in case of sickness, or children at the breast; nor shall any strangers be admitted into the prisoners' yards or rooms on Sundays, and the doors shall always be made fast on that day.

That the prisoners shall sweep their rooms and areas every morning by turns, and the gaoler or his assistants wash the same every Saturday.

That no looms or comb-pots shall be admitted into the prisoners' rooms; nor any hogs, dogs, or fowls be kept; nor any hay-seeds, filth, or rubbish be laid, or suffered to remain, in or upon any part of the premises of the said prison, except in the necessaries, and they shall be cleansed every week.

Prisoners aggrieved by the gaoler must give him notice in writing of their intention, one day before the Bradford Court, where they must state their complaint to the Commissioners of the said Court, by ten in the morning.

And if any prisoner breaks the glass windows, or damages the said prison, or anything therein; or strikes or gives any abusive language, or gets drunk, or uses any profane oaths, or curses, or gambles, or attempts so to do, the aggressor shall be put into close confinement, and fed with bread and water, until satisfaction be made, amendment promised, or the time of imprisonment expires.

That the said gaoler shall see that a printed copy of these Rules and Orders be kept put up in his house; and also in the men's and women's prison; and that the same be strictly observed and kept, both by himself and his assistants, and also by the prisoners; and for every neglect herein, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of 5*s.*, or have the same stopped out of his salary or wages, by the clerk of the said Court for the time being, who shall give the amount of such forfeitures, in bread, to the persons confined in the said prison, who shall seem to him, the said clerk, to stand most in need of such relief; and also make a report thereof to the Commissioners of the said Court assembled at Bradford.

By order,

R. THORNTON, Clerk of the said Court.

PONTEFRACT—BOROUGH GAOL.

Pontefract Borough Gaol.

This small prison, or rather lock-up, is an appurtenance to the Town-hall, of which it forms a portion of the basement. A grant of Quarter-sessions has lately been made to the town, but prisoners under criminal charges only remain here while under examination, being upon committal sent to Wakefield. It is likewise made use of as a place of confinement for debtors from the Borough Court, but is devoid of every necessary qualification for such a purpose. The accommodation for debtors consists of a single room, about 10 ft. 10 in. by 14 ft. 3½ in., 12 ft. high. It contains a fire-place, and the stove pipe from the criminal lock-up is let into the chimney; the heat on the day of inspection was almost intolerable. There is a privy in the adjoining passage. The debtors can communicate with the criminal prisoners. The greatest number of debtors confined here at one time has never exceeded two. There is no airing-yard, nor possibility of affording them exercise. One debtor was confined here last year between 4 and 5 months. No officer sleeps upon the premises. The debtors support themselves, but are allowed coals from the borough stock upon paying 6*d.* weekly. The accommodation for those under criminal charges consists of a day-room about 9 ft. 9 in. by 19 ft. 11 in., 11 ft. 7 in. high. The windows latticed with iron, but affording no obstacle to communication, look directly upon the public street. The floor is of stone, the roof arched; there is a stove for affording warmth. Within the day-room, and without ventilation or light, except what is imperfectly obtained therefrom, are two sleeping cells, one 7 ft. 4 in. by 12 ft., the second 5 ft. 1 in. by 12 ft.; the flooring is raised above that of the day-room. There is likewise a cell termed the black-hole, with window to the street, 11 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft. 7 in., with raised floor, and litter of straw for bed and bedding. There are no privies; no effective separation of males from females, and the whole accommodation is of the lowest order. From September 1835 to September 1836, the number of prisoners who passed through the lock-ups appears to have been 136. There does not appear to be any one vested with the responsibility of keeper. No one resides on the premises. The serjeant-at-mace, who is likewise officer to the sheriff of Yorkshire, receives a salary of 10*l.* a-year from the corporation, and has the arresting and charge of debtors from the Borough Court. The prisoners under criminal charges are supported from the borough rate, the police officers furnishing them with articles of food, consisting of meat, bread and cheese, tea and coffee.

PONTEFRACT—County Lock-ups.

Pontefract County Lock-ups.

The Quarter-sessions for the West Riding being held annually at Pontefract, the Court-house contains accommodation for prisoners who during their continuance are detained here. This consists of six cells for male prisoners in the basement story, devoid of light and imperfectly ventilated. The females are placed in two rooms in the chamber story, well lighted and ventilated. The dimensions are as follows:—

In the basement.

No. 1—13 ft. by 11 ft., 8 ft. high.
No. 2—15 ft. by 11 ft. 3 in., 7 ft. high.
No. 3—14 ft. 3 in. by 14 ft., 6 ft. 6 in. high.
No. 4—11 ft. 8 in. by 11 ft., 7 ft. 3 in. high.
No. 5—13 ft. by 11 ft. 6 in., 8 ft. 6 in. high.
No. 6—16 ft. 10 in. by 13 ft., 7 ft. 3 in. high.

In the Chamber.

No. 1—15 ft. by 13 ft., 11 ft. high.
No. 2—16 ft. by 13 ft., 11 ft. high.

DONCASTER—Borough Gaol.

Doncaster Borough Gaol.

This gaol is of modern construction, on the radiating principle, and consists of 4 day-rooms, 4 sleeping-rooms above them, and 4 airing-yards, with pump and privy in each. It comprises also two rooms used as lock-ups for night charges, and a dwelling for the keeper, the windows looking into the yards. The day-rooms and cells are of the following dimensions:—

Day-rooms—14 ft. 6 in. by 13 ft., 11 ft. high.
Sleeping-cells—14 ft. 4 in. by 13 ft., 9 ft. 6 in. high.

This borough having a grant of Quarter-sessions, prisoners are occasionally committed, and remain here for trial, and under sentences of short imprisonment. There is also a Borough Court of Pleas and a Court of Requests, the latter limited in its jurisdiction to debts of 40 shillings, and imprisonment not exceeding 40 days. 22 debtors were imprisoned here during the year 1835, and the greatest number at one time was 6.

Bedding.—Prisoners under criminal charges are allowed a rug and a litter of straw.

Debtors.—Palliasse, sheet, 2 blankets, rug, bolster, and pillow, at the expense of the borough.

Cleanliness.—The prison clean.

Fuel.—Coals are provided both for debtors and prisoners under criminal charges.

Diet.—Sixpence a-day is allowed for the maintenance of each prisoner by the Corporation, and they are permitted to expend this sum in any articles of food they desire. The debtors are allowed 12 lbs. of bread a-week, if not able to support themselves, which is provided by the keeper, and charged against the parish.

Bibles and prayer-books are provided, but no Divine service performed.

Medical assistance is afforded when necessary.

Whipping is inflicted by the keeper. The scourge is of the same dimensions as the one used at Wakefield.

Irons.—5½ lbs.

A book is kept, arranged under the following heads: name—age—by whom charged—offence—date of coming in.

Discipline.—Upon inspecting this prison, the whole of the prisoners, one under charge of felony, one for assault, and two debtors, were together in the same day-room. Tobacco-smoking is permitted, and several newspapers were lying about.

Keeper.—Age 48; appointed 1827; married; shoemaker by trade; salary, 54*l.* 12*s.*, two suits of clothes, coals, candles, and soap. A gaol fee of 1*s.* 6*d.* for each prisoner is either paid by the individual or charged to the borough.

SHEFFIELD—Gaol for Courts of Requests' Debtors, and for the Court Baron for the Manor of Sheffield.

Sheffield Gaol for Courts of Request, Debtors, &c.

This prison is the private property of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, who, as Lord of the Manor of Sheffield, has the appointment of the officers. It is the gaol of the Court Baron of Sheffield, and of the Liberty of Hallamshire. Since the passing of the Uniformity of Process Act, the number of prisoners from the superior courts has not averaged annually more than 10. By an Act passed in the 48th year of George the Third, it was made the prison for debtors in execution from a Court of Requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding 5*l.* within the Manor of Sheffield, and the patronage vested in the Lord of the said Manor. The practice of this Court has increased to an enormous extent, the number of cases adjudicated at a sitting being about 300; and no return being made of the writs not executed into Court, their numbers, at all times considerable, have at some periods accumulated to 4,000 and 5,000 in the hands of the bailiff; and it happens that execution being delayed by the parties being out of the way, or other causes, years will elapse, even as many as 10, before the arrest is made. The prison being only capable of containing, even in a crowded state, 85 prisoners, the adjudications of the Court remain in abeyance. The bailiff, upon the morning of inspection, had in his hands 1,000 writs, which he was unable to execute in consequence of there being no room in the prison. This non-enforcement of the orders of the Court destroys its utility, and causes dishonest creditors to speculate upon the chances of delay, rather than discharge their obligations; it likewise lodges a kind of dispensing power in the hands of the bailiff and his officers, which might be applied in the gratification of vindictiveness or partiality. At the same time, it is only justice to the present holder, to state my full and entire conviction of his impartiality and rectitude. This prison is situate in Scotland-street, Sheffield, surrounded by and attached to other buildings. It was formerly a merchant's dwelling and warehouse, and was purchased some twenty years ago by the Duke of Norfolk, and appropriated to its present purpose. It is entered from the street, and consists of a dwelling for the bailiff, and houses on the right and left of an airing-yard for prisoners. The rooms are of the following dimensions :—

2 Rooms, each 17 ft. by 16 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. 6 in. high.
1 „ 18 ft. by 17 ft., 9 ft. 6 in. high.
2 „ 17 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft., 9 ft. 6 in. high
2 „ 12 ft. by 12 ft., 9 ft. 6 in. high.
1 „ 18 ft. by 14 ft., 11 ft. 6 in. high.
1 „ 11 ft. 6 in. by 13 ft., 11 ft. 6 in. high.
1 „ 19 ft. by 12 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. 6 in. high.
1 „ 29 ft.
1 „ 13 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft., 9 ft. 6 in. high.
Females' Room—29 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft. 4 in., 9 ft. high.
Refractory Room—12 ft. by 7 ft., 18 ft. high.
Airing-yard—54 ft. by 30 ft.

This building is wholly unsuited to its purpose. It is insecure from escape, and exposed to accident from fire, the floors and staircase being all of wood. It would be difficult, in the case of such a misfortune occurring, to even conjecture how its numerous inmates could effect their escape. The privies are insufficient. The males and females are in the same building, and it is impossible to conceive a more deplorable state than that of the women, being left completely at the mercy of the men. Upon the day of inspection the prison was dirty; the prisoners, on going through the rooms, were lying on the beds, or engaged in smoking, or at games of cards. In one room a lottery had been just drawn, the capital prize a case of razors. Not the slightest deference was paid to the presence of the keeper; the games were continued without interruption. No bedding is provided, and many of the numerous inmates are compelled to sleep on the bare floors in their clothes. The only furniture in the rooms are a few iron bedsteads. There is no separation of the sick from the healthy. One man was ill in bed, and another sharing the same bed with him at night. The consequence of typhus breaking out in this prison would be dreadful. No fuel is allowed; the Craven-street Society send 3*l.* annually, to be laid out in coals. The prisoners are supported by the parish, who allow each 1½ lb. of bread a-day, and 6*d.* in money weekly. The parish surgeon also attends the sick. There has been one death during the year. The curate also reads prayers in one of the rooms upon Sundays to such as are disposed to attend. The prisoners appear to be under no restraint; their conduct has been so outrageous, that it has been repeatedly found necessary to call in the police to suppress riots. The least excitement out of doors is sure to find a ready echo here, and considerable damage has been done at times to the buildings. In July last one of the turnkeys received a blow of which he died in 10 days; the coroner's inquest returned a verdict of "Wilful murder" against one of the prisoners, and he was committed to York Castle to take his trial. Until this period there was not the slightest check imposed upon the admission of liquor. Now it is limited to 2 pints a-day; but from the want of proper authority to carry such a rule into execution, and the convenient facility afforded by the buildings, it can be little more than nominal. The crowded state of the prison is further augmented by the number of children who are sent in to their parents to play about during the day-time; their average number is not less than twenty. The keeper states that "He considers the place very insecure, and that if the prisoners were determined to break out, they could easily do it. That prisoners have been in for 12 and 14 months, and that as many as 14 executions have been issued against one person. He is daily receiving applications from plaintiffs, to know the reason he does not execute their writs. His labour is very great, for when a prisoner comes in he is obliged to look over the whole of the writs in hand for years back, to see whether there are any outstanding against him. There are no rules for the government of the prison. He has applied to the magistrates and the steward of the Court upon many occasions, but they have declined interfering, doubting their power so to do. The prisoners make rules for themselves; they collect garnish, and they impose fines and penalties. One punishment is walking through the yard with a bell round the neck. He has lately set apart a room for refractory prisoners, but it is of no use. There is a great deal of singing and noise, but not so much as there was before the reduction of the quantity of liquor." Upon calling for the rules, they were produced by the prisoners, and the following items are extracted :—

Rules of Scotland-street Prison, 1836.

"At the coming in of any bird he shall pay 2*s.* 6*d.* to the garnish master, or have his hat and coat taken for security, and if not paid in seven days the coals of the room will be stopped until it is paid. But should any bird go out under twelve hours he will have 1*s.* 3*d.* returned; and at the coming in of a woman she shall pay 1*s.* 3*d.* garnish, or have her bonnet and shawl taken for security until the same be paid. At the coming in of a bird, the captain or a substitute will attend, or be fined 2*s.* for neglect of duty."

Sheffield Gaol for Court of Request Debtors, &c.

With reference to the above rule, the turnkey states that it is a constant practice to strip the prisoners of their coats and hats.

"Any man at coming in shall commence Nancy next morning at nine o'clock."

The office of cleaning the room is imposed upon the youngest prisoner, who is thus termed.

"14. All schedulers will pay 2*s.* 6*d.* foot-ale, and 14*d.* room-money. No other man will pay foot-ale. The schedulers to pay foot-ale and room-money to the room he is allotted to.

"16. Any person found ghosting any new bird shall be fined 2*s.* 6*d.*"

Keeper.—Appointed 1832, by his Grace the Duke of Norfolk. Is paid by fees, allowed and inserted in the 48 Geo. III.; their gross amount has been above 1,200*l.* per annum. He pays the expenses of officers, &c. The receipts vary, and the expenses also in proportion. He states his clear income from this source to be from 600*l.* to 700*l.* per annum, with a residence. He keeps one turnkey, who resides in the prison, and to whom he pays a salary of 52*l.* per annum.

The removal of this prison, and the re-building of it in a more open and convenient site, is absolutely necessary; and until such measures can be carried into effect, I recommend that rules for the government of the prison should be drawn up, and additional officers appointed to enforce them. There is every disposition in the Lord of the Manor to do what is necessary to place this establishment on a proper footing. The present uncertain state of the law respecting debtors appears the only impediment to an outlay for rebuilding.

ECCLESALL, SHEFFIELD—GAOL FOR THE COURT OF REQUEST AND FOR THE COURT BARON.

Ecclesall Gaol for the Court of Requests, &c.

This prison is the property of the Lord of the Manor of Ecclesall Bierlow, the Right Hon. the Earl Fitzwilliam, and is still the gaol for the Baronial Court. The Act of 48 Geo. III. comprised the remodelling of this Manorial Court, as well as the neighbouring one of Sheffield, and the like provisions are applied to it. The jurisdiction is much less extensive, but the business of the Court is on the increase. The prison, situate in Bishop-street, Sheffield, consists of a house for the keeper, which is entered by a yard; and two buildings for prisoners, detached from each other, with separate airing-yards.

Dimensions.

Males' Airing-yard—68 ft. by 30 ft.
Room, No. 1—16 ft. 6 in. by 18 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. 3 in. high.
„ 2—9 ft. 3 in. by 18 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. 3 in. high.
„ 3—9 ft. 6 in. by 18 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. 3 in. high.

The upper story of this building is occupied as the Court-room.

Females' Airing-yard—55 ft. by 44 ft.
Room, No. 1—21 ft. by 12 ft., 9 ft. 3 in. high.
„ 2—21 ft. by 12 ft., 9 ft. 3 in. high.

The ordinary number of prisoners is from 14 to 15; on the day of inspection there were only 2. The bailiff or keeper being dangerously ill, the execution of the writs had been partially suspended, and there were at that period 300 in his hands. The plan of this prison is convenient, as providing for the separation of males and females; but this is not in the slightest degree adhered to, as the males occupy the lower story of the house allotted to females. The floors of the rooms appropriated to male prisoners are of stone, and prisoners being allowed no bedding nor bedstead, are compelled to sleep upon the stones. The situation is damp, particularly that of the prison for females. The allowance of food and money from the parish are precisely the same as at the other manorial prison, and the same practices, such as card-playing and smoking, prevail among the prisoners. A minister of the Wesleyan persuasion attends on Sundays. I make the following extracts from the rules, which seem higher in the degree of exaction than at Sheffield:—

"Any person coming into the prison for debt to pay 3*s.* 6*d.*, and, in default of payment, to immediately give up his hat and coat to the garnish master, who shall keep them seven days, and if the money is not paid by that time, his property to be disposed of as a majority of prisoners shall decide. If the prisoner leaves the prison the day after he shall only pay 2*s.* 3*d.*"

Note.—One of the two prisoners present stated that his coat was taken from his back, and retained for three or four days, until he was able to procure the garnish.

"Any prisoner intending to take the benefit of the Insolvent Act, shall pay 8*s.* 6*d.* garnish, and be exempt from the duty of Nancy."

Keeper.—Appointed 1835, by the Right Hon. the Earl Fitzwilliam. The profits in 1835 were 235*l.*

The remarks made upon the other prison at Sheffield apply to this, with the exception of the buildings, which are not ill suited to their purpose when not inconveniently crowded, and a proper distinction maintained between the males and females. They are equally deficient in all points of good government.

SHEFFIELD—TOWN GAOL AND LOCK-UPS.

This prison adjoins the Court-house, and is only made use of for prisoners while under examination, and when brought for trial at the sessions. The accommodation for prisoners consists of 7 cells and 4 airing-yards, of the following dimensions:—

4 cells—11 ft. 6 in. by 10 ft., 10 ft. high.
2 cells—9 ft. 6 in. by 7 ft., 9 ft. high.
1 cell—10 ft. by 7 ft. 6 in., 9 ft. high.

Water-closet in each cell. The cells are deficient in light and ventilation.

Bedding.—3 rugs and a litter of straw in each cell.

Diet.—1½ lb. of bread a-day.

Cleanliness.—No soap nor towels allowed the prisoners.

Books.—A book is kept for the register of prisoners, under the following heads: when brought—age—by whom charged—what charge—by what constable—how disposed of, and when—costs.

Keeper.—Age 42; appointed 1831; resides in the prison; salary from the town trustees, 21*l.*, coals; receives 1*s.* 6*d.* for every prisoner charged as disorderly, on their discharge; is allowed 8*d.* a-day for the maintenance of each prisoner by the county, out of which sum he makes a profit; his whole emoluments amount to 200*l.*

Attached to this building, but under the control of the police, are lock-ups for the temporary detention of prisoners until examined by the magistrates. The annexed table will convey some idea of the state of public morals in this important town.

KNARESBOROUGH—BOROUGH GAOL.

This prison is the property of the Duke of Devonshire as grantee from the Duchy of Lancaster. The jurisdiction of this Court, where debts to any amount may be sued for, is confined to the ancient limits of the borough. The premises consist of a residence for the bailiff, a day-room and two sleeping-rooms for prisoners on the second and third floors. They have also the privilege of walking in the yard attached to the house. Bedsteads only are provided for their use. The greatest number of prisoners that have been here at one time was 4. In the last 3 years the numbers confined have been—1834, 2; 1835, 3; 1836, 6.

The building has been occupied about two years, and is fully adequate to its purpose. It was clean, and without a prisoner. Debtors are described as generally coming in for the purpose of taking the benefit of the Act.

Bailiff.—Age 50; appointed 1830; has been also an officer to the sheriff of Yorkshire 16 years; no salary; is paid by fees of 3*s.* 4*d.* upon the coming in, and 8*s.* 8*d.* upon the discharge of each debtor. The fees are paid to him by the county.

Knaresborough, the Forest, Forest Liberty, &c. Gaol.

KNARESBOROUGH—THE FOREST, FOREST LIBERTY, AND BOROUGH LIBERTY GAOL.

This prison is a modern building, erected within the walls of the ancient Castle of Knaresborough. It comprises a Court-house, dwelling for the keeper, and 2 small arched rooms and a very limited airing-yard for prisoners. This franchise, together with the borough, which is however distinct, belongs to the Duchy of Lancaster, and is leased on lives to his Grace the Duke of Devonshire, in whom is vested the appointment of the officers. The Forest jurisdiction is of considerable extent, reaching 17 miles to the westward of Knaresborough. Debts to any amount may be sued for in these Courts, which are held twice a-year for trials of issue, ejectments, &c. Summonses are returnable once in three weeks. This prison is seldom without prisoners. The numbers of prisoners confined here have been as follows:—In 1833, 12; 1834, 7; 1835, 6; 1836, 8.

The prison clean. The airing-yard very confined; but prisoners who can find double bail have the liberty of walking within the area of the old castle-yard. When females are brought in, they are generally placed in the keeper's house.

Deputy Bailiff.—Age 40; appointed 1818; no salary; fees, 3*s.* 4*d.* upon coming in, 8*s.* 8*d.* upon the discharge of debtors, paid by the county.

KNARESBOROUGH—TOWN AND RIDING LOCK-UP HOUSE.

The Michaelmas Sessions for the West Riding are annually held here, and at this period the prisoners for trial are brought and temporarily lodged in this wretched lock-up house. Prisoners are only detained here for a few hours; but when it is recollected that those hours are the ones previous to trial, and that sentences of transportation, next to death in weight, are imposed at the sessions, humanity would accord to fellow-creatures every opportunity of availing themselves of their natural powers of mind in this exigency. It is scarcely to be believed that 14 prisoners, at the last Michaelmas Sessions, were placed in a dark cell 12 ft. 6 in. long by 4 ft. 8 in., 7 ft. high at the crown of the arch, and 4 ft. high at the two extremities. It is situate under the stairs leading to the Court-house; it is so damp that the floor is rotted through in many places, and the greater part of this dungeon is occupied by an inclined plane or guard-bed. It is almost providential that no accident has happened, even during the very temporary detention of prisoners here. It has been frequently presented to the General Sessions, and its toleration for a day is a great reproach to the West Riding. It was proposed some time ago to erect a suitable building in the Castle-yard, and the Duchy of Lancaster with a becoming liberality granted a plot of ground for that purpose.

GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION FOR THE LIBERTY OF RIPON.

Gaol and House of Correction for the Liberty of Ripon.

The jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessional Bench for the Liberty of Ripon extends over 27 townships, and prisoners before trial and under sentence are committed to this prison. It is situate in rather a low situation close to the town of Ripon, but detached from other buildings. It was enlarged to its present extent in 1816, and consists of a house for the keeper, containing cellarage, 3 rooms on the basement, and 6 on the first floor. The dwelling for the keeper with small garden in front is held on lease by the magistrates of the Liberty from the Dean and Chapter of Ripon, with the reservation of 2 rooms for the use of the Court Leet. The ground on which the prison itself stands is a freehold tenure, and it consists of a building of 2 stories, with 2 yards and day-rooms on each front.

Dimensions.

Four Day-rooms—15 ft. by 10 ft., height 11 ft. 6 in.
Nine Cells—8 ft. by 6 ft., height 9 ft. 8 in.

The cell made use of for the refractory is a dark passage 11 ft. by 4 ft., height 8 ft. 6 in., and not sufficiently secure for imprisonment during the night. There is no separate place for the sick. The males and females all sleep in the same range of cells, and can talk to each other with facility. One of the day-rooms is made use of as a chapel.

Diet.—The keeper is allowed 7*d.* a-day for the maintenance of each prisoner. He provides and cooks the food, which is most excellent in quality, and almost I should say too much in quantity for persons in the situation of prisoners. Breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge each meal, and 1½ lb. of good seconds bread daily. Dinner, Sunday, 6 ounces of boiled beef without bone and 1 quart of potatoes; Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday, broth made from what the meat was boiled in the previous day, thickened with oatmeal, and seasoned with onions, pepper, and salt; Tuesdays and Fridays, 1 quart of stew made of beef, potatoes, oatmeal, onions, pepper and salt.

Clothing.—Males, convicts and prisoners before trial, a parti-coloured dress of blue and red frieze. No clothing is provided for females.

Bedding.—Iron bedstead, palliasse, 2 blankets, and rug.

Fuel.—Allowance of coals to each day-room weekly.

Cleanliness.—The interior of the prison very clean, but the prisoners are not supplied as they ought to be with either soap or towels.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—One of the canons of the Cathedral benevolently gives his gratuitous services to read prayers on the Sunday evenings to the prisoners. He likewise superintends the distribution of books and tracts. The magistrates have made no provision, with the above exception, if it be one, for this the most valuable of all requisites in a prison.

Health.—The surgeon attends when required. He is under engagement to attend and provide medicines for the debtors in the other gaol, and the casual poor of the Liberty. The prison is very healthy. Eruptive and syphilitic disease occasionally occur. There is no separate apartment for the sick, which at times is inconvenient. He keeps a book, in which he registers his visits and occurrences.

Labour.—There is a small tread-wheel to which prisoners sentenced to hard labour are placed. There is no overlooker to the mill.

The average number of prisoners at a Sessions has been latterly 15, the greatest number of prisoners 30. The keeper says, "We have been frequently obliged to put three prisoners in a bed." The cells are not of sufficient size for more than one person. There is no effectual separation between the male and female prisoners. The keeper is the only paid officer. Another is much required.

Yorkshire—West Riding.

Ripon, Gaol for the Liberty.

RIPON—Gaol for the Liberty.

This local jurisdiction was in the possession of the Archbishop of York until it became vested in the Lord-Lieutenant of the county by an Act passed in the last Session of Parliament. Debts to any amount may be recovered in the Court Military of Ripon, which is held every three weeks. The Archbishop of York is Lord of the Manor, and the Court Leets are held in the gaol. The criminal prisoners of the Liberty were formerly confined here, and the cells still remain in the basement, but the prison is now restricted solely to the reception of debtors. There are three rooms on the ground floor for the keeper, and three above for debtors. The beds and bedding were unexceptionably clean. There is a spacious, but insecure airing-yard. The greatest number of prisoners at one time has been 5; the longest period of confinement 35 weeks. The following are extracts from the prison rules, signed by John Coster, clerk of the peace:—

If a prisoner stay in gaol beyond the first week after his or her commitment, such prisoner to pay no more for lodging or diet, in case he or she should not diet themselves, than, by the week, 5*s*.

For every prisoner who shall have a bed to himself, for use of room, bed, bedding, and sheets, per week, 2*s*.

If two prisoners occupy one bed and one room exclusively, for such per week, 2*s*. 6*d*.

For every prisoner who finds his own bed, for the use of the room per week, 1*s*.

Garnish to the prisoners, 1*s*.

And it is ordered by the Court, that the gaoler shall have the discretion of making any prisoner an allowance in money to the extent of the value of his or her usual allowance of bread, and in lieu of such allowance of bread.

6th April, 1835.

Bailiff.—Age 47; salary, 39*l*.; also a fee of 10*s*. 6*d*. paid by the Liberty upon the discharge of every prisoner upon writ or warrant.

North Riding.

Northallerton House of Correction.

NORTHALLERTON—House of Correction.—North Riding.

This prison, in conjunction with the Sessions-house, stands apart from other buildings in a low and marshy situation, close to the market-town of Northallerton. The site was given by the See of Durham. Like the generality of these establishments, it has been enlarged to meet the pressing wants of the community by the addition of two wings, and a house for the keeper. The approach to the interior of the prison is through a quadrangle formed by the sessions-house, the keeper's dwelling, the female wards, the chapel and apartments for the under officers. The windows of the building appropriated to the females and those of the sessions-house look into the area, and not only give great facilities, but are the cause of improper communications. The keeper's house consists of a basement with cellarage, a ground floor with 5 rooms, and a first floor with 6 chambers.

Dimensions of the Cells.

Sleeping-cells—12 ft. by 10 ft., 12 ft. high.
,, 8 ft. by 7 ft., 9 ft. high.
2 Refractory cells, dark—12 ft. by 5 ft. 6 in., 12 ft. high.
2 ,, 7 ft. by 5 ft. 6 in., 11 ft. high.

In the female wards there are fire-places in all the cells. The basements of all the prison buildings are damp, the privies offensive, and the drainage, on account of the lowness of the site, subject to difficulty. The infirmary is elevated a story above the other buildings, and commands a full view of the exterior of the prison, and communication by signs may be easily made from it with persons on the outside. A kitchen, with water laid on and other conveniencies, is attached to the infirmary. The chapel is divided into two equal parts for males and females, with separate entries. The females having to pass through the open court are much exposed to the gaze and remarks of persons in the sessions-house, the deputy clerk of the peace residing there.

Diet.—Sunday, breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 6 oz. of boiled beef, 1 quart of potatoes with salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. Monday, breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 1 quart of stew made of beef, potatoes, oatmeal, and onions, with pepper and salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. Tuesday, breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 1 quart of stew made of beef, potatoes, oatmeal, and onions, with pepper and salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. Wednesday, breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 1 quart of broth, thickened with oatmeal and onions, with pepper and salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. Thursday, breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 6 oz. of boiled beef, 1 quart of potatoes with salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. Friday, breakfast and supper, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 1 quart of stew made of beef, potatoes, oatmeal, and onions, with pepper and salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. Saturday, breakfast and dinner, 1 quart of oatmeal porridge and ½ lb. of wheaten bread; dinner, 1 quart of broth, thickened with oatmeal, and onions, with pepper and salt, and ½ lb. of wheaten bread. The bread is of coarse but good quality. The surgeon is of opinion, that from the tendency to diarrhœa which prevails, it would be better if made with a smaller proportion of bran.

Clothing.—Males, convicted, jacket and trowsers of parti-coloured frieze, shirts, stockings, and clogs; misdemeanants, the same quality, only plain. Females, bedgowns, petticoats, aprons, body-linen, clogs.

Bedding.—Iron bedstocks, palliasse, 2 blankets, 2 rugs.

Heat.—The cells are not warmed, although those in the basement seem particularly to require it. Any prolonged sentences of solitary confinement would, from the dampness of the situation, render it indispensable. The chaplain says, "The cold in the cells is intense. I have seen the prisoners in the winter suffering from it exceedingly. They cannot in such a situation be expected to attend to me."

Northallerton House of Correction.

Cleanliness.—The prison and persons of the prisoners clean.

Health.—The surgeon attends daily, and oftener when required. Attributes the diseases which prevail to the low situation of the prison and the deficiency of the drainage. The prisoners are disposed to pulmonia, rheumatic affections, diarrhœa, and dysentery. He sees every prisoner, and the slightest deviation from health is attended to by alteration in the diet. He says, "I do not approve of putting men in the refractory cells in the ground floor in this damp situation. I think the cells should be warmed. I have great difficulties in preserving health; to do so with those in the refractory cells, we put them into others of a night in order to alter the air. Scurvy occasionally shows itself, but yields immediately to treatment. If we have fever, it is typhus. It prevailed in a very malignant degree in 1830, and it has since manifested itself slightly in several cases. The average of deaths is about one in two years and a half; the single death in the present year was from dysentery. The average expense of medicines for the last three years was 81*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* The surgeon keeps a journal, arranged under the following heads: visited the prison — remarks — put upon the diet— discharged. Number of Sick, see Table.

Moral and Religious Instruction.—The chaplain reads prayers twice, and preaches once on a Sunday. Prayers are read by him every morning. He seldom administers the sacrament. He considers it requires great caution. The books and tracts are distributed under his superintendence. There is no system of instruction carried on. He states, "That he has no opportunity of seeing the prisoners privately and individually, they are so constantly at labour; he wishes he had. This remark does not apply to the untried. The prisoners are mostly those engaged in agricultural labour; they are more ignorant, but not so depraved as those from towns. Many he has found unable to answer the question, Who was our Saviour? Juvenile delinquents form a very small proportion of the numbers. I have witnessed solitary confinements from a week to a month's duration, and I cannot think, from what I have seen, that a punishment like this has the slightest tendency to reform. I never could ascertain the object of sentences of imprisonment previous to transportation. We have three prisoners here now under these circumstances. I think there is an impression created by it in their minds that something will be done for them, that their sentences will be commuted. I am sure it has had no morally beneficial effect. The dread of transportation has considerably increased." The whole of the prisoners, with the exception of the sick, the infirm, and those in solitary confinement, attend Divine service. I cannot but express my opinion that this, the most important branch of prison discipline, is either neglectfully, or from some cause or another but very imperfectly attended to in this prison. I was present at morning prayers in the chapel. The hour was so early as to scarcely make it possible to use a prayer-book. The prayers read were a heterogeneous selection from the Church Service, without order or sequence. Our Lord's Prayer was introduced, but "The Creed" was not, nor the portions most familiar to the habitual frequenters of Divine worship. I found it impossible to follow the selection. The chaplain considers it better to vary the service in this way. I saw little or no appearance of devotion among the prisoners. The females, the prisoners in solitary confinement, the sick, require I think more frequent visits from the chaplain than has been the practice; and even if instruction cannot be extended, as is said, to the convicted prisoners, I see no reason why it is to be denied or withheld from the untried. More circumspection is necessary in examining the tracts and books before they are distributed to the prisoners. In Number 256 of the Saturday Magazine there is an article upon the art of secret writing and invisible inks, which the prisoners had, after reading, been experimenting on in the hospital.

Classification.—The same objection as to classification made upon other prisons under the silent system applies here. The untried and convicted are together subjected to the same restrictions and punishments, and the wide moral distinction between their situations entirely lost sight of.

Labour.—The tread-wheels are in four divisions, three on a ground floor and one above; the axis of the wheels is five feet from the ground, and is inconvenient, if not dangerous. There is also a small wheel upon a graduated scale for females, who are also employed in washing the prisoners' and keeper's linen. Prisoners not sentenced to hard labour are placed upon the tread-wheel as employment. The wheel sheds are close and ill-ventilated, and the effluvia from the tubs made use of by the prisoners while at work adds to the evil. Prisoners at hard labour are paid a quarter of their earnings; if not sentenced to hard labour, one-half; those employed in making the prison clothing, one-half. The keeper receives a quarter of the whole amount of earnings. Wardsmen are remunerated with an extra half pound of bread a-day, and their earnings in money.

SCALE OF TREAD-MILL LABOUR.

| Months employed. | Number of Working Hours per Day. | Number of Prisoners the Wheels will hold at one time. | Height of each step. | The ordinary Velocity of the Wheels per Minute. | The ordinary Proportion of Prisoners or Wheels to the Total Number employed. | Number of Feet in Ascent per Day as per Hours of Employment. | Revolutions of the Wheels per Day. | The Daily Amount of Labour to be performed by every Prisoner. | How recorded with precision. | Application of its Power. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 12 | 8 | 36 men,6 women. | 8 Inches. | Twice. | When at hard labour $\frac{3}{4}$ths, when at labour $\frac{1}{2}$. | Males when at hard labour 12,000 feet, Females 9500 feet. | 960 | 7680 feet. | No means to record the labour with precision. | Grinding corn. |

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences are refusing to work, talking, looking round and disorderly conduct, punished by stoppage of meals, and solitary confinement in the refractory cells. One prisoner for non-payment of arrears in a case of bastardy refused to work upon the wheel; he was in other respects a very well-behaved man, but resolute in his determination. He was placed in the refractory cells for the following periods:—

|---|---|
| 1836, March 25 | 3 days. |
| „ 29 | 3 „ |
| April 4 | 3 „ |
| May 9 | 3 „ |
| „ 12 | 3 „ |

During these confinements he refused food, and his bread being given to him daily, accumulated to a considerable quantity in his cell. The magistrates, the chaplain, the surgeon, and officers visited him, but all entreaties were vain. The surgeon says, "Every expedient was used to get him to take food without the least effect. He was of melancholic temperament, and I am of opinion that he would have starved himself to death if not released, which he was, under such apprehension, and was subsequently employed in repairing the prisoners' clothes, being a tailor by trade." The keeper hears all reports of the infraction of the rules daily. I was present upon one occasion, and took the following notes:—

1*st Wardsman.*—Complains of ——— taking a piece of oakum to tie his shirt sleeves, and making a noise with the tins in the mess-room.
Culprit.—I had no buttons, but got them from the wardsman afterwards.
Keeper.—Take care not to offend again.

2*nd Wardsman.*—Complains of ———, a boy, for turning his head on one side while reading.
Culprit.—I was obliged to do it to see, it was so dark in the mess-room.
Keeper.—This is no offence; go to your work.

3*rd Wardsman, a convicted felon.*—Complains of ———, untried prisoner, for stepping out of his rank and picking up something.
Culprit.—My garter slipped off and I stooped to pick it up.
Wardsman.—It was his garter.

4*th Wardsman.*—Complains of ——— being disorderly in the airing-yard on Sunday; leaving his rank.
Culprit.—It is true what the wardsman says.
Keeper.—Go to your work, I shall attend to you.

5*th Wardsman.*—Complains of ——— making signs as to one of the pictures in the Saturday Magazine.
Culprit.—I tore off a bit of my trowsers which ravelled off. I did not point to the pictures.
Keeper.—I have had you here before for making signs; I will attend to you.

The untried, from being in constant communication with the convicted, are, as is shown in the case of No. 3, and also in the subjoined return, subjected to the same discipline, and are punished for infractions of it in the same way. I cannot but repeat that I consider the amalgamation of these classes as a moral taint upon the discipline.

Visits and Letters.—Convicted prisoners are only permitted to receive visits once a-month; letters are not subjected to the same restrictions. Those prisoners who are unable to write have their letters written for them by one of the officers. The untried at the discretion of the keeper. A proper place for the intercourse between prisoners and visitors is much wanting.

Accounts, Expenditure, Books.—Contracts are made quarterly by the magistrates for the supply of bread, beef, and oatmeal. The bills are sent in every three months to the keeper, who checks them with the quantities received. They are laid before the visiting magistrates, who likewise examine them, are then presented to the Sessions, and after approval a check is signed for the gross amount. The keeper pays the items, and retains the receipts. I consider this would with much more propriety be done by the treasurer, and the receipts either lodged in his possession or with the clerk of the peace. Upon inspecting the mill-book, it appears that credit is given for very long periods for work done at the mill for private individuals. The keeper is answerable, and pays the whole amount to the Riding accruing from this labour, which in several instances from giving credit he has not received. I recommend most strongly that the money for grinding should be invariably paid by the owners of the meal upon delivery, and that no future running accounts be permitted. General Account and Disbursement-book.—Containing a debtor and creditor of all expenses.

Victualling-books.—Separate books are kept for the various articles of provisions, in which the quantities received and their cost are inserted, and the quarterly receipts of their payment appended to each.

Mill-books.—Grain is ground for the public. The quantity is weighed when it comes in and when re-delivered, and both results entered in a book by the miller, together with the name of the owner and the charge for grinding. The miller makes up his account and renders it weekly to the keeper, who enters the amount and quantity, and calculates the proportion of the earnings allotted to the Riding, the prisoners, and himself.

Daily Labour-book.—Each prisoner's name is inserted, with the amounts of the labour daily performed, which are cast up every week. This is transferred to a general sheet every quarter, showing the sums paid for labour to the Riding, the keeper, and prisoners.

Register.—Containing No.—names — by whom committed—age—when received—trade or occupation—place of abode—offence—time of commitment—hard labour or otherwise—date of commitment—read or write.

Punishment-book.—Arranged under the heads of the various classes in the prison, and showing the number punished in each class for talking, and the punishment allotted, whether whipping, confinement, or otherwise, showing also in separate columns the punishment imposed for other offences; a very complete and valuable register.

Visiting Magistrates'-book.—Containing entries of their visits to the prison.

Discipline.—Very praiseworthy regularity prevails in the mode of carrying on the discipline of this prison. The silent system is enforced upon the male prisoners, but is not extended to the females. The keeper states that there has not been sufficient time as yet for it to act upon the number of commitments, but states it as his opinion that "it will be highly beneficial in this agricultural district if kept up with spirit." The officers state that they have heard the prisoners frequently complain of the injustice of the wardsmen, and there can be no doubt but that they report trivialities which paid officers would, in the exercise of a sound discretion, consider as not worthy of notice. See Offences and Punishments. The labour and employments being simply the tread-wheel and picking oakum, the prisoners are concentrated, and have fewer opportunities of avoiding the restraints imposed by the discipline. The following is a return of the prisoners who are employed otherwise than at hard labour within the prison, their names, offices, offences, and sentences:—

The females appear to require rather a stricter superintendence than they are at present subjected to, particularly at labour and during the day, and further precautions taken to prevent the constant communication between them and the inmates of the Sessions-house. The females ought on no account to cross the outer yard nor attend the chapel, as was the case on the day of inspection, without a female officer being present. I have already adverted under the heads of Moral and Religious Instruction, Classification, and Offences and Punishments, to what I consider the most marked defects in the general good government of the prison. The parish constables are stated to be improved in their general conduct, but still occasionally bring prisoners in a state of intoxication. The prisoners frequently complain of the constables taking money and effects from them, particularly the vagrants, of being deprived of their bundles, and never having them returned.

Keeper.—Age 49; appointed 1826; married; salary, 200*l.*; a fee of 2*s.* paid him by the county upon each prisoner discharged from his custody; one-fourth of the prisoners' earnings; 1*l.* 1*s.* annually allowed for providing lights within the prison; washing done by the prisoners; stable and paddock; gives a bond of 2,000*l.* for the due execution of his office. I most strongly recommend that the whole of the keeper's perquisites should be abolished, and a fixed stipend paid him.

I have no reason to believe in the course of my inspection that this office is inadequately filled, but I consider it my duty to remark the very youthful age at which the individual has been placed in a situation requiring great moderation and command of temper.

RICHMOND LIBERTY.—DEBTORS' GAOL.

Richmond Liberty Debtors' Gaol.

This gaol is appropriated for the reception of debtors, in the Liberty of Richmond and Richmondshire, which comprises a very extensive jurisdiction in the North Riding. His Grace the Duke of Leeds is bailiff of the liberty, and is charged with the maintenance of the gaol. The prison consists of a spacious, but dilapidated building, with an airing-yard, containing on the ground floor a day-room and three chambers appropriated to prisoners, who provide their own beds, bedding, and fire. Two sleeping-rooms on the first floor, in which prisoners are provided with the above accommodation at a charge of 1*s.* 9*d.* a-week. There has been but one prisoner confined during the year 1836, who was here from the 26th of February to the 7th of May following. Like other prisons, appertaining to peculiar jurisdiction, since the operation of the Uniformity of Process Act, it has fallen into disuse.

RICHMOND.—BOROUGH GAOL.

Richmond Borough Gaol.

This gaol is within the poor-house, and consists of four rooms, two below ground for criminals, and two on the ground floor for debtors. The cells for criminals are 4 ft. 6 in. below the ground; one of them was occupied, on the day of inspection, as a fuel and store-room. The other is 12 ft. by 12 ft., and 13 ft. high: it has a fire-place, which was described as useless from there being no current of air to carry off the smoke. There are no privies nor airing-yards attached. The prisoners are supplied with the same kind of food as the paupers, and no account is kept of their expense. Debtors are confined here under process of the Borough Court. Independently of being deficient in every requisite, the application of a poor-house to the purposes of a prison appears very objectionable.

Keeper.—Master of the workhouse.

SCARBOROUGH.—HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Scarborough House of Correction.

This prison, or rather lock-up, is an appurtenance to the poor-house through which the prisoners are brought. It stands in a yard at the back, consists of three rooms of the following dimensions, two on the ground floor, and one above. Lower room 8 ft. by 12 ft., 8 ft. high; upper room 8 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft. 6 in., 8 ft. 2 in. high; strong room 7 ft. 10 in. by 11 ft. 10 in., 16 ft. 3 in. high. One of the rooms on the ground floor adjoins the kitchen of the workhouse, and from the extreme heat must be detrimental to health. There are no privies nor airing-yards, and the utter insecurity of the building is manifested by frequent escapes therefrom. Communication between the prisoners is without check, nor is there anything to prevent it being carried on with the paupers. The prisoners are never visited by a clergyman. On the day of inspection two boys, the eldest only 14, were undergoing a sentence of one calendar month confinement. The greatest number of prisoners confined here at once was seven, of which number two were females, who were lodged in the poor-house. Prisoners are sent, in ordinary cases, under contract to the County House of Correction at Northallerton, a distance of 54 miles, and at an expense of 3*l.* 15*s.* for a single prisoner. The borough having lately received a grant of a separate Bench of Quarter Sessions, it is understood that a suitable prison will be provided. Keeper, master of the poor-house; salary 5*l.* 5*s.*

SCARBOROUGH.—BOROUGH GAOL.

Scarborough Borough Gaol,

The Borough Gaol was, apparently, one of the ancient gates of the town, and inconveniently bestrides the principal street. It is now solely appropriated to the reception of debtors from the mayor's and the superior courts. The accommodation consists of four large rooms sufficient for 16 prisoners; it has no airing-yard attached to it. Three debtors were confined here in 1834, but none in 1833, nor in 1835. Adjoining the gaol are four cells made use of as lock-ups, for disorderlies and prisoners under examination: two of the cells are under ground. At the period of inspection they were most filthy, and being devoid of light, ventilation, and every other requisite, are most improper for the confinement of a human being, however temporary the detention.

SECOND REPORT of the INSPECTOR of the SOUTHERN and WESTERN DISTRICT.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

MY LORD,

III.
SOUTHERN AND WESTERN DISTRICT.

SINCE the date of my last Report I have visited the prisons of the islands of Guernsey and Jersey, of the counties of Wilts, Devonshire, Cornwall, Merionethshire, Denbighshire, Flintshire, and Montgomeryshire, and some of those in the counties of Dorset, Somerset, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Glamorganshire, and Shropshire.

I have the satisfaction of announcing to your Lordship that I have observed in almost every quarter a disposition on the part of the magistrates, and also of the chaplains, surgeons, and keepers of gaols, to adopt improvements, and to forward the suggestions which I have ventured, with caution, to propose. I cannot assert that I have encountered any obstacles arising from attachment to old usages, or from professional or local prejudices; on the contrary, it appears to me that the only impediment which exists to the amelioration of prisons and of their discipline (in my district at least), is the absence of the necessary funds, and an indisposition to increase the county and local rates. There is no cause to complain of any difference of opinion as to the mode of carrying improvements into effect, but solely of the deficiency of means. Alterations which do not draw upon the public purse are readily adopted, as far as my observation extends; and thus the prohibition of tobacco, the just restriction of visits and letters within narrow limits, the injunction of silence, the substitution of a regular dietary in the place of an allowance of money, and other similar innovations are rapidly introducing themselves into prisons in which they had been previously unknown.

A considerable portion of the expense hitherto incurred in prison architecture has arisen from a natural but misplaced intention of bestowing on these structures an ornamental and symmetrical character, and of rendering them subservient to the embellishment of the situation in which they are reared. Independently, however, of all consideration of the outlay of money thus created, there is no class of buildings which it seems less expedient to adorn; every feature which is calculated to attract the notice of the stranger, or to excite admiration, tends also to soften the gloom, and to dissolve the atmosphere of mystery which ought to surround a gaol, and which would prove more beneficial in repelling the beholder, by a cold and blank monotony of aspect, than any decorations of art in fixing his attention.

I now approach the subject of separate confinement, which ought not to be viewed on one side only, nor to be decided upon by theory alone, at a time when we possess few positive facts respecting its influence in reforming old offenders, and in deterring new ones. Most gaolers and prison-officers concur as to the dread which it inspires; and, indeed, in some prisons it is found to be the most useful punishment for offences committed within their walls: but its general adoption as an uniform mode of imprisonment for the untried and the convicted, for the petty culprit and the veteran in depravity, for the shortest equally as the longest term of incarceration, appears in my diffident judgment not as yet sufficiently to be authorized by the experience of our own and other countries, nor to have been enough matured by the observation of numerous and cautious critics. Nor has the mind of the public been as yet prepared to admit it with cordiality by repeated proofs of its efficacy. A large part of our knowledge of this subject is derived from the United States, which contain, according to Dr. Julius of Berlin (the latest personal inquirer), eight penitentiaries conducted upon this system. But the United States do not possess the means of transportation; and the majority of the inmates of these penitentiaries corresponds with that class of our own offenders which is sentenced to exile: seclusion for a long period is there deemed essential to reformation, but with us the term of confinement is usually short in comparison.

But is it sufficient to say, let separate confinement be adopted in our prisons, without defining the mode, in which alone, consistently with humanity, and with just attention to mental and bodily health, it can be carried into operation? Are the details to be resigned to the caprice of individuals, to makeshifts, to accident? I venture with deference to submit, that separate confinement for the convicted should never be imposed, for any term exceeding a few days, unless accompanied by the following indispensable conditions, which are the more necessary to be complied with in our gaols, because they have not been usually constructed, like the American penitentiaries, with this express object in view.

First. A cell moderately warmed in the winter.

Second. A cell light, well ventilated, and large enough to enable the prisoner to labour or to read with ease, and to move about in freely.

Third. A provision of suitable work or books, according to the previous habits of the prisoner.

Fourth. Daily separate visits of the chaplain, the surgeon, and the gaoler, with a privilege of briefly conversing with them.

Fifth. Daily exercise, of at least one hour, not taken all at one time.

Sixth. A discretionary power confided to the surgeon of allowing still more exercise, when he thinks it advisable.

Seventh. A visit made at least once a month to each prisoner thus confined by one of the visiting magistrates.

So far are these remarks from being prompted by any repugnance on my part to the general principle, that I have uniformly recommended its introduction in all those prisons of my district in which it appeared actually practicable. But in only a small number, as they are at present constituted, with their existing cells, officers, funds, and salaries, can separate confinement be safely enforced. The conditions above proposed would necessitate an entire remodelling in many instances: and the magistrates and the public will not easily consent to try a new and as yet uncertain experiment at a large cost, after having already incurred heavy disbursements on the former plan of classification; and least of all at a time when all are anxious to reduce the amount of rates.

I am led thus to the conclusion that it would be most inexpedient to employ any compulsory interference in favour of separate confinement, which would only conduct to an irregular, and inadequate, and unfair trial of it in prisons not fully prepared, and would accordingly cripple and impair a promising plan, as yet only in a state of infancy. If any evil accidents should arise from partial and premature attempts, the public confidence would be shaken, and a sudden reaction and abandonment of the whole system might be the unexpected result. It will be more safe and rational, I conceive, to leave the prosecution of this plan to the discretion of the visiting magistrates, who will adopt it when the resources of their respective prisons guarantee such a step; and in the proportion in which it gains credit its gradual extension will be ensured.

Wherever this system is applied to untried prisoners they ought to be permitted, in addition to the precautions above specified, to enjoy a double portion of exercise, as well as ample means of intercourse with their friends: but, rather than at once to level the ancient distinction between a house of detention and a house of correction, it would be preferable, in my humble opinion, to allow to the untried the free use of their yards, restricting them, at the same time, from conversation with each other, and from the dangerous privilege of a day-room.

It would be most advantageous if benevolent persons would turn their attention to the helpless condition of the individual who quits a prison, as well as to the discipline of its inmates. Permanent reformation is hopeless, unless some means of gaining a future livelihood are provided for the despised and rejected being, against whom every door is closed, except that of the beer-shop, and who often leaves his last home with scarcely a shilling in his pocket. I am happy to inform your Lordship that a house of industry for the refuge of discharged female prisoners has lately been undertaken at Exeter. I have in other places endeavoured to promote this object.

I take the liberty of submitting to your Lordship two general suggestions: 1. That a printed paper be affixed in the yards of all prisons, minutely describing the discipline which awaits convicts who are transported to our penal settlements; and, 2. That a uniform mode of registration be prepared for adoption in all prisons.

I have the honour to remain,
My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient servant,
Bisset Hawkins.

County of Wilts.

AT the commencement of the year 1836 there were four prisons in the county of Wilts, all under the control of the county magistrates, namely, that of Fisherton Anger, at Salisbury, the old bridewell at Devizes, the new house of correction at Devizes, and the bridewell at Marlborough. The county magistrates were desirous of accomplishing a reduction in the number; all appeared to agree that the old bridewell at Devizes might be dispensed with, and some few were of opinion that the bridewell at Marlborough might also be discontinued without inconvenience. Having had an interview with the magistrates on this subject, I gave my opinion that the old bridewell at Devizes was no longer necessary; but that, considering the present degree of accommodation presented by the other prisons of Wiltshire, and the statistics of crime in that county, it would not be expedient to break up the Marlborough bridewell. This opinion was acquiesced in (March 1836), and I agreed to reconsider the subject in company with the magistrates at the end of two years if they should be so disposed. If Marlborough bridewell were abolished, it would be necessary to make additions to Devizes; but I believe that it will be convenient and useful to retain the Marlborough bridewell as a house of detention for untried prisoners.

Salisbury. Fisherton Anger County Gaol.

SALISBURY.

FISHERTON ANGER COUNTY GAOL.

Construction.

THERE are 10 yards, containing 10 pumps, and 12 privies. Two of these yards are appropriated to male debtors, and one to female debtors. There are four day-rooms for male prisoners (one of which, however, is only a shed, without a fire-place), but none of them are used at present. There is also a day-room for the female prisoners, which is still occupied. There are four dark cells. The dark cells for the men require to be better ventilated. The cells which are used for this purpose for the females are rendered dark only by shutters. The yards are all gravelled and partially paved.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Number of cells where only one male sleeps . . . . | 92 | |
| Ditto ditto female sleeps . . . . | 4 | |
| Total number of sleeping-cells, separate . | — | 96 |

| Number of sleeping-rooms where more than one female can sleep . | 4 | |
| | — | 6 |
| Total number of sleeping-cells . . . . | | 102 |

The usual dimensions of the cells are 9 feet high, 7 feet 6 inches long, 6 feet 6 inches wide.

There are six double rooms and one day-room in the sheriff's debtors' ward, which, if divided, would make 15 single rooms.

Management.

I found the gaoler in bad health; he is about 70 years of age. His nephew acts with him and for him. The prison is extremely clean, neat, and dry, even after a long continuance of wet weather. Two points require correction, and can be most easily set right. The diet is not defined by any minute rule, either printed or manuscript; it exists, indeed, rather by usage than by any ordinance. There is an extreme laxity in regard to letters and visits. Thrice a-week both the convicted and the untried are allowed to receive visitors during half an hour; any magistrate (not only the visiting magistrates) may give leave for a visit. Letters are admitted without any limit at all. Visits and letters are the greatest indulgence which a prisoner can experience. But the evil is not confined to himself; not only does this freedom render imprisonment more agreeable, but it diminishes and weakens on the part of the public the dread and disgust which a gaol should inspire. By frequent entries and exits, by personal observation, and by written communications, all the mystery and supposed gloom of incarceration are dissolved. But it is unnecessary to enlarge upon this topic. Some smaller deficiencies are—in two yards the privies have no doors, and the dark cells are not sufficiently ventilated. The little shutters which cover the grating in the outer door of the cells may be opened by the prisoner within, with a little art, and a communication may be easily established with his neighbours: this may be readily prevented as far as the power of opening the shutter extends. The women have not separate sleeping cells, but sleep in rooms containing two, three, or four, according to circumstances. The female prisoners are not generally numerous; but it would be far better to divide the present rooms into separate sleeping cells than to allow the very great indulgence and probable corruption of sleeping in the same apartment. One of these female dormitories might be advantageously set apart as an infirmary for the female prisoners. The male prisoners all sleep in separate cells; but there are rooms for male prisoners in which there are more than one bed.

Those who are sentenced to hard labour at the assizes and sessions are sent to the House of Correction at Devizes; but those who are sentenced to hard labour by the magistrates' bench, both of the county and of the city of Salisbury, are kept here.

No new cells are at present in contemplation, only the conversion of the day-rooms into cells. Separation and silence are enforced in a moderate degree.

Prison offences are punished by confinement in a cell without exercise for two or three days; the dark cell is rarely resorted to, and only in cases of resistance: the diet is never reduced. Several prisoners are said to have committed little offences in order to escape the ordinary exercise in cold weather. When whipping is ordered, the usual number of lashes is two or three dozen, the instrument is a cat-of-nine-tails made of whipcord.

During 14 years only one attempt at suicide is known to have been made; a knife which had been thrown over was used; but the effort was unsuccessful.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

One moderately-sized room serves as an infirmary for the males. It will suitably accommodate six patients, but eight beds might be placed in it on an emergency. During 14 years, however, there have never been two patients here at the same time. It has two good windows, and a water-closet adjoining. There is also a bath. Either a male prisoner acts as nurse, or sometimes a female nurse has been engaged from the town. Sheets are allowed to the sick, if ordered by the surgeon. There is no room specially appropriated as an infirmary for the females; but, if any one is ill, she remains in her own cell, or is removed to another more convenient cell. As all the female cells are much larger than ordinary cells, and contain fire-places, the women sustain no disadvantage through the absence of an infirmary. At the time of my visit one woman was ill, in a large cell (or, more properly speaking, room), with a fire; she had entered the prison unwell a fortnight before. No male was ill enough to lie in the infirmary during my stay.

The surgeon visits every three or four days, either himself or his assistant, and more often if requisite. He has been connected with the gaol more or less for 35 years. During the last year, from March 1835 to March 1836, only one case of illness occurred sufficiently severe to demand removal into the infirmary; and not one woman has been seriously diseased. The most common disorders are venereal ones, acute and chronic rheumatism, occasional slight attacks of fever, and itch. There has been no cholera. There is much ague about Salisbury; but there has been no case of it in the gaol during the last year.

As prisoners are confined here in separate cells, which are not heated, it is important to know the observation of the surgeon on this head. During the last winter neither the surgeon nor his assistant have seen any evil arising from this source. No prisoner has complained to them of cold, with the exception of one weak old man, who was consequently transferred from his cell to the infirmary. But, in order to understand fully this statement, we must place in juxtaposition the circumstance that the prisoners who are thus separately locked up are allowed in this prison to take exercise during three hours, or three hours and a half, daily; consequently they are not so likely to suffer from cold as prisoners in other situations, who are not suffered to take exercise in the open air for so long a time.

A few months before my visit the convicted prisoners had been allowed to receive food from without, as well as the untried. This liberty has been withdrawn from the convicted. The surgeon and his assistant have, however, seen no instance among the convicted in which indisposition has appeared to arise from the stricter diet. The prisoners have complained to them, it is true, of the lowness of the diet. In the opinion of the surgeon and his assistant, many prisoners go out in better health than on their admission. No case of scurvy has been seen.

The prisoners were remarkably healthy in their appearance: the statements which they made to me, as to the coldness of the cells, were so conflicting that I could not arrive at any conclusion; in addition to this, the prison had just been emptied of most of its inmates.

Diet.

Each prisoner receives daily 1¾lb. of the best wheaten bread, and soup on Sundays. Prisoners before conviction are allowed to receive eatables from their friends; convicted prisoners only the gaol allowance.

For the year ending Michaelmas 1834:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Expense of bread . . . . | £192 | 5 | 3 |
| Ditto of ox-heads . . . . | 18 | 6 | 0 |
| Baking of ditto . . . . | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| | £213 | 11 | 3 |

For the year ending Michaelmas 1835:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Expense of bread . . . . | £115 | 3 | 10¼ |
| Ditto of ox-heads . . . . | 17 | 8 | 0 |
| Baking of ditto . . . . | 2 | 18 | 6 |
| | £135 | 10 | 4¼ |

Debtors from the Courts are only allowed the bread from the county, and a bushel of coals a-week and 14 faggots during the 6 winter months. If destitute they receive bedding. Some of the master-debtors also receive bedding.

Bedding of Prisoners.

One straw mattress and two blankets in summer, and three in winter.

Clothing of Prisoners.

Clothing is only found occasionally before conviction. Felons after trial are put in party-coloured clothing, and misdemeanants after trial are put in plain dresses. The clothing is a cap, waistcoat, jacket, smallclothes, stockings, shoes, shirts, for men; cap, shift, stockings, shoes, gown, for women.

The diet is not sufficiently defined by rule, and seems to depend upon custom more than upon regulation. I subjoin the following extract from the printed rules relative to the diet:—

> "If well behaved, they shall be sustained with bread, and any coarse but wholesome food, and water, according to a dietary to be directed by the visiting justices. No prisoner in the bridewell to be supplied with any food, drink, or money, from any fund or relation whatever."

The soup is made from ox-heads, but there is no regulation as to the number of heads to be used for a certain number of prisoners, but only a habit. I have recommended a revision of the above rule among other improvements.

Labour.

The labour consists in cultivating the land within the boundary-wall of the prison, and pumping water for the use of the prison. Very few prisoners are ever kept here after trial. Most under sentence go to the house of correction at Devizes for hard labour. Cleansing is another occupation; but an idea is entertained of converting part of this gaol into a house of correction, by the erection of tread-wheels, &c., which may be easily done.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain has no other duty except an evening lecture on Sundays, at half-past six o'clock. He goes to the prison every day; he reads prayers daily, and performs divine service twice on Sundays, with a sermon in the morning. He keeps a journal, in which he records the number of prisoners (including the debtors) who attend the chapel. The debtors (at least those who are called master-debtors) are allowed to attend or not, as they think proper; a discretionary power which has a bad effect on others as well as on themselves. If a dissenting prisoner makes an application, he is permitted to see a minister of his own persuasion, but in the presence of the chaplain: this latter caution exists in consequence of bad impressions produced by certain tracts said to have been formerly introduced. The chapel was formerly not sufficiently spacious to contain all the prisoners, but an alteration took place in 1834, and no absence for want of room has since been necessary. There is sufficient accommodation now for 94 prisoners and debtors without kneeling; and for kneeling, 42 felons, 30 debtors, and 5 misdemeanants; those numbers include both male and female.

There is a good supply of religious books, as the following memorandum will attest.

Number of prisoners that had Prayer-books, Testaments, &c., during the following years:—

|---|---|
| 1830 . . . | 130 |
| 1831 . . . | 75 |
| 1832 . . . | 73 |
| 1833 . . . | 106 |
| 1834 . . . | 143 |
| 1835 . . . | 113 |

It sometimes occurs that prisoners have their own books; they are, in that case, not included in the above number.

The chapel is not heated in winter. A curtain ought to be placed in front of the female debtors, who sit at present in the gaoler's seat in the gallery, and can look down on some of the men, and can also be seen by them. The sacrament is delivered, when application is made, which is rare; otherwise, it is only communicated to the condemned. The chaplain has seen no evil whatever to result from silence and separation; one prisoner alone, lately hung for murder, complained to him of the cold, and the gaoler gave him an extra jacket. He has never heard any complaint of lowness of diet. The prisoners have the power of conversing freely with him in a private room; after service they have only to express their wish to that effect to the turnkey. The chaplain attributes a great proportion of offences to the beer-shops; most, if not all, who have been condemned, and left for execution, in his time, have imputed their end to some such source.

XIV.—AGE, EDUCATION, &c.

At the Lent assizes at Salisbury, 1836, there were 74 prisoners; of whom 21 were under 20 years of age, 29 between 20 and 30, 9 between 30 and 40, 12 between 40 and 50, 1 of 57, and 1 of 82.

Of the 74, 6 could read and write well, 48 imperfectly, and 19 neither one nor the other: 2 of the 6 were convicted of highway robbery, and had sentence of death recorded. The prosecutors of 59 of the prisoners reside nearer to Devizes than to Salisbury.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

There is a good inspection from the governor's house over all the yards. The building appears secure; it has two outer walls, and is not overlooked by any other edifice. There are eleven wards, and eleven yards: ten of these belong to the men, and one to the females.

| ditto ditto for males | 187 |
| ditto ditto for females | 20 |
| Of these are cells where more than one sleeps | 3 |

The dimensions of the single cells for the men are, 10 feet high, 7 feet 3 inches wide, and 8 feet 3 inches long; that of the women, 7 feet high, 5 feet wide, and 7 feet 5 inches long.

It will be perceived that the male cells have a considerable advantage above the female ones in height and extent. The female cells, indeed, form the chief blemish of the gaol. They are placed just opposite to each other on each side of a narrow passage: over each door is a large aperture, through which the inmates can converse together most commodiously. The matron is the wife of the governor; and there is no one sleeping at hand to superintend them at night. The women use a day-room common to all. All the female cells are too small, are principally made of wood, and very ill ventilated; the western cells, indeed, have no windows that open, and are damp from the gutter which passes close to the roof.

The cells are heated by introducing warm air into the corridors.

Management.]

The turnkeys, miller and porter are all chosen and appointed by the governor, out the salary of each is fixed at the quarter sessions. The present governor has been here 14 years. He has the power of ordering broken windows to be repaired, without consulting a visiting magistrate, a privilege which does not exist in all prisons. The head turnkey has the principal charge of the registers, or acts the part of clerk.

There are no untried prisoners here, and no debtors. All the prisoners, of both sexes, have each a separate cell: the same cell is used by day and by night. A certain number are locked up in their cells the whole day, excepting during the period of exercise: the details of this arrangement will be found under the head of labour. Silence is enjoined.

Any magistrate may give an order for a visit; and there is no limit to the number of visitors, except that caution is recommended. An officer is always present during the visit, which may be half an hour in length, but is usually shorter.

No slates nor writing are commonly permitted.

Monitors, or wardsmen, are chosen from among the prisoners: they keep the wards clean, and may report misconduct. They are not liked by the other prisoners, and enjoy no other privilege than exemption from labour.

The punishments for prison offences are—confinement in a day-cell; privation of their covering, but not of their bedding; or reduction to bread and water diet.

There is a want of specially constructed dark cells: no such were made originally, but half a dozen can be fitted up for the purpose by shutters; the stay in them is not more than three days.

In flogging, seldom so many as 40 lashes are inflicted; 28 is the average, with a cat-o'-nine-tails of whipcord; the surgeon is not present, nor are the prisoners: when for a prison offence, then it was inflicted in presence of the prisoners; this has not happened for many years.

During 14 years not one attempt at suicide has been known, nor any alarm from fire. Two prisoners have contrived to escape, but both were retaken.

Diet.

Two pounds of wheaten bread, one pint of gruel made from one ounce of oatmeal, and one pound of potatoes, are allowed daily. On Wednesdays and Fridays, in lieu of potatoes, one pint of vegetable soup, made according to discretion of the governor, with a few peas and other vegetables. To those who work on the tread-wheel, when the hours of labour exceed eight per day, one biscuit each of the weight of four ounces: salt as wanted. Warm water is not allowed, but the gruel is given warm in the morning. Meals are taken in the cells at half-past eight, and at one. The biscuit is given on the wheel in the afternoon. No contract for corn: an agent purchases it. The governor buys the potatoes at the best season.

Every prisoner receives for clothing one jacket, one waistcoat, a pair of trousers, a pair of stockings, a pair of shoes, one shirt, a stock, and a cap.

Every prisoner has for bedding a straw mattress, one sheet, one rug, two blankets in winter, and in summer only one, and a night-cap.

Labour.

There is a tread-mill here which grinds corn for the prison and for the public. There is also a crank for raising water which employs two persons who may happen to be incapacitated for the tread-mill by some infirmity. Another crank-mill, capable of employing 16 men, is now disused, on account of the difficulty of maintaining good order at it. The other occupations are whitewashing, baking (under the guidance of a miller), cooking, cleaning. The females wash for the whole prison, and mend for all, but they make no clothes worthy of mention: they make up a few shirts, and all the beds and sheets. At the time of my visit eight women were engaged in washing; two prisoners were employed in the bakehouse, two in the kitchen, six or eight at the crank, and 60 at the tread-mill. There are eleven wardsmen, and one tailor is at his work. About 100 prisoners out of the whole 126 are now at work. Those who do not work at hard labour owing to infirmities, as well as those just entered, (who for the first ten days remain in their cells,) take only half an hour's exercise twice in the day. They go out to wash for a few minutes in the morning, and are also let out by the wardsman (on knocking) for their natural wants throughout the day. Only one takes exercise in the yard at the same time.

Two prisoners are often employed in cultivating the land around the prison under the guidance of an officer. It has been stated to me that prisoners are employed occasionally in a field near the gaol appropriated to the governor's use, and that they also occasionally tend his cows. Whether this is true or not—and I trust that, if it has happened, it will not occur again—it is a violation of good discipline to employ prisoners on any pretext outside of the walls of a prison. Once outside, they can be familiarly seen by others, and can see others in turn: it is a return to comparative liberty for the moment, and restores that communication with the external world which it is one of the objects of a prison to cut off.

The hours of labour are, during the summer, 9½ hours; during the rest of the year the hours vary, but they never fall short of 6¾ hours.

The profits of the labour in money are about £30. All the profits of labour are appropriated to the county.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain has been in office since the year 1822, and assisted the chaplain the two preceding years. He reads prayers daily and performs morning and evening service on Sundays, with one sermon. At the time of my visit there were no compartments or divisions in the chapel: it is highly desirable that they should be supplied, as many in number as there are wards, although the governor believes he can command attention by his glance. So far from divisions being unnecessary in the chapel of even the best regulated prison, I am of opinion that it would form a material improvement if every prisoner could be insulated from his fellows, so as to preclude the possibility of either present or future recognition; but such a measure could neither be easily nor economically accomplished. The chaplain orders such books as he thinks proper for the use of the prisoners, and the bookseller sends his bill in at the sessions. The chaplain keeps both a public and private journal; in the latter he takes a note of the birth, education, and character of those intrusted to his spiritual charge: he visits every prisoner in his cell on his first admission, and converses readily with them. He forms the prisoners into classes of from 15 to 18 in general; the lowest number composing these classes is 12, and the highest is 24: he assembles one of these classes every day after the service. If he finds that they already know their letters, he assists them in reading, and has thus taught many to read; but he does not usually teach the A B C. There was once a schoolmaster for the prisoners, but he has been dismissed. The chaplain has never been requested by any prisoner to administer the sacrament; they have never alluded to the subject. He has never made an offer to do so, because he does not possess sufficient means of ascertaining that the repentance is sincere. It is remarkable that, in the many cases in which he has interrogated the prisoners as to whether they have ever received the sacrament, he has never known any instance in which they have replied in the affirmative. This is a forcible proof, if any new one were wanting, how rarely the inmates of a gaol have been imbued with religious principles; and it well illustrates the important distinction between an education merely literary, and that deeper instruction which combines Christian with worldly knowledge. The chaplain has favoured me with his experience upon the subject of re-committals. He observes that those who have been flogged often return: according to him the flogging is usually deferred to the last period, instead of being inflicted at first: the culprit consequently leaves the prison degraded in his own estimation, angry, excited, hating all, and ripe for future mischief. Those who have been placed in the infirmary often return to the prison; he believes it to be a fruitful source of corruption, and expresses an opinion, in which I heartily concur, that the infirmary should be attended by a wardsman who is not a prisoner. There is no instruction whatever for the female prisoners. The chaplain applied to the magistrates to

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

There is an infirmary for the men, containing two rooms: one of these rooms is usually devoted to the use of the sick, and the other is set apart for the convalescent. There is also a separate infirmary for the females. The surgeon does not note down every case in which a medicine is given, but only those which are placed in the infirmary, or those in which some extraordinary indulgence, or relaxation of discipline, is granted. Every prisoner on his admission is examined by the surgeon, has a warm bath, and is then reported by the surgeon as fit or unfit for hard labour. In cases of varicose veins, hernia, enlargement of the joints, and other injuries, the tread-mill is forbidden; but the surgeon has never known a ruptured man to suffer from working at the crank. Venereal diseases and itch are frequent. When a prisoner comes in with itch he is retained in the reception-cell for three days; during that time the compound sulphur ointment is rubbed in three times, in the quantity of a quarter of a pound once a-day. At the end of this time he is bathed, and is invariably cured. Ague has never appeared to originate in the prison. During the last five years the surgeon has performed the operation of castration, of hare-lip, hernia humoralis, and others. He thinks that the health of the prison has sometimes suffered from its being too much crowded: before the day-rooms were converted into sleeping cells the sleeping cells were too full, and diarrhœa appeared to him to result, followed by inflammation of the mucous membrane of the intestines. Dysentery, also, sometimes was the result of this close packing, and it occasionally passed into the common cholera; but no case of malignant cholera was seen here; the surgeon doubts, indeed, if it reached the town at all. Fever of typhoid character was more common formerly than now. Diarrhœa is still sometimes found, but not so frequently as before. The diet formerly was very generous, and led to congestions: it acquired its present more moderate standard about eight or nine years ago. The prisoners, in his opinion, usually look more healthy on dismission than on admission; and the table (which will be found below) proves that they generally gain in point of weight. The surgeon has a discretionary power of increasing the diet if a prisoner appears to waste, if even his weight becomes less without being positively ill. He visits twice a-week, and more frequently if necessary; and is allowed to employ an assistant.

As this is one of the prisons in which separate confinement has been partially adopted, it is important to consider the statement made by the surgeon on this head. The solitary cells are now heated by warm air; before this precaution was adopted the prisoners returning from labour heated entered their cold cells, and often contracted colds and rheumatism: at present these complaints occur less frequently. When prisoners are confined in separate cells, without labour, he has often found headache and constipation, and has been obliged frequently to administer purgatives. He has also seen several cases of moral depression amounting to melancholy under the above circumstance. But in such cases he has the power of relaxing the confinement at his discretion: he sometimes orders an additional quantity of exercise. He is not disposed to approve of a long continuance in solitary confinement, but he believes that the present cells are sufficiently large, in relation to the present system of allowing every prisoner to labour or to take exercise.

The Old Bridewell.

I went over this prison in March 1836, and took notes respecting all that I observed there; but, as the magistrates, almost immediately after my visit, determined on breaking up the prison, and on transferring the prisoners to the new house of correction, it is not necessary to enter into details respecting a prison which has ceased to exist.

MARLBOROUGH.

Bridewell, or House of Correction.

Construction.

Marlborough.
Bridewell, or Hou of Correction.

This prison was built in 1786, and is chiefly defective in point of extent. It might, however, be easily enlarged, by building upon the ground which at present forms the garden of the keeper. It has no boundary wall, but it is not overlooked. There are privies in every yard, but some are wanting in doors; and a supply of water exists in all the yards except one. In consequence of there being only four yards the females, both untried and convicted, are all placed together. The chapel has a separate division for the women, but there is no separation among the male prisoners. The whole prison appears dry. The workhouse adjoins it, but does not overlook it; and this workhouse is stated to be on the eve of removal.

Management.

This is a county prison, and is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. It receives no debtors. Although confined in its dimensions it has occasionally been obliged to contain a large number of prisoners at one time: thus, during the riots of 1830, the keeper affirms that so many as 220 prisoners were confined here together at the same time, but only for a very short period. At that crowded juncture he was allowed to have an assistant, and contrived with this one assistant to maintain tolerable order. He has no assistant at present, and has the entire charge of the establishment: his wife, indeed, acts as matron, but receives no salary. There are no rules, either printed or manuscript, and this deficiency strongly demands to be supplied, although their absence has been to a certain degree counteracted by the intelligence and care of the keeper. There are no bedsteads in use here, but the prisoners sleep on the floor, which is of wood. Silence is not rigidly observed; indeed, with only one overlooker, such an event would be impossible. Two prisoners are never allowed to sleep in one bed, and, as far as possible, all are placed at night in separate cells. Seven of the prisoners are now placed at night in separate cells. The untried are allowed to receive letters, with no other restriction than that the keeper first peruses them; but the convicted are only permitted to receive those letters which the keeper deems it important to communicate to them. Visits are made both to the convicted and to the untried by the order of a magistrate only. There is no other labour here except cleansing, whitewashing, washing for the prison, and mending.

Tobacco is prohibited.

The usual punishment is to lock the prisoner in a cell, and to take away his bedding: the diet is never reduced except that cold water is sometimes given in winter instead of warm. When flogging is ordered, three dozen is the usual number of lashes, which are inflicted by a small cat-of-nine-tails, made of whipcord, about two feet long. The women are exclusively attended by the matron. No fees are taken from prisoners in any case whatever. The prison appears to be practically a secure one, if it is true, that, during seven years of the keeper's residence here, only two escapes have occurred; one individual was retaken; the keeper was absent at the assizes. He is absent on business during the whole year for about 25 days in general; sometimes so many as 30 to 40 days: during his absence an assistant is placed here in charge of the prisoners, who receives 5*s*. a-day. There has been no alarm of fire during seven years. One case of suicide has occurred within that time: a prisoner hung himself with his garters. On the whole the prison is neat, clean, and orderly, and the prisoners appear to be under a steady control. None of them do any work for the keeper.

Diet.

One loaf of the best bread weighing one pound and twelve ounces is the only allowance. It costs at present 2*d*. The untried may receive food from their friends without, but not the convicted. No beer nor spirits are allowed to enter. The prisoners complain of the scantiness of their fare, but they appear healthy.

Each prisoner is allowed a straw bed and three blankets. No clothing is allowed, except for those who are destitute.

Fuel may be purchased by the untried for their own use: the county lights fires in the day-rooms only during the winter.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain reads prayers three times a-week, and also performs divine service and delivers a sermon on Sundays. If there is any sick prisoner he comes on other days, and usually converses with one or two prisoners after prayers. He sometimes stops for an hour after the performance of service. Last Sunday he had four private conferences with prisoners; and four on the preceding Friday.

There are only a few religious books in the prison; the chaplain, however, informs me that he has given several Prayer-books, and other religious books at his own expense, which is a supply that ought rather to come from the county. He has no preferment nor other office.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

There is an infirmary room for the men, and a room with a fire-place for the females. The surgeon visits about three times in the week, and more frequently if requisite. He has the power of ordering any extra allowance for prisoners who seem to him to need it. The surgeon has known no death to occur in the prison during the last ten years, except in the instance of the suicide above alluded to. He has never seen any case of scurvy; nor could I ascertain any traditional traces of such a disease in conversing with the prisoners. The surgeon believes that the diet is a sufficient one: the prisoners, in his opinion, enjoy a good state of health. He finds that he can deplete freely without any subsequent inconvenience. No epidemic has occurred here during his experience of ten years, nor any case of malignant cholera. During three recent years the total number of cases of sickness was in one year three, in another five, and in the other four; and the greatest number of prisoners sick at one time during these three late years has not exceeded two. There is no insane prisoner in confinement.

Salaries.

|---|---|
| Keeper . . . . . | £70 |
| Chaplain . . . . . | 50 |
| Surgeon . . . . . | 20 |

The surgeon finds all medicines at his own cost.

The late keeper receives a superannuation of £30 per annum.

Expenditure

Appears to be extremely moderate; indeed, it is affirmed, I know not with what accuracy, that the expenses of this prison do not exceed the sum incurred by the transport of prisoners to Devizes, which costs 1*s.* a mile for one prisoner, and 1*s.* 6*d.* a mile for two. The weekly cost of the diet of each prisoner is stated by the gaoler to have fluctuated during late years between 2*s.* 0½*d.*, 1*s.* 9*d.*, 1*s.* 7¼*d.*, and 1*s.* 5½*d.*, which was the weekly expense per head in the year 1835.

Registers

are the chaplain's book, surgeon's, keeper's description-book, keeper's register of punishments, commitment-book, magistrates' book, one account-book.

All bills are brought to the keeper, who enters them in a book, which is delivered to the finance committee of the magistrates, who order payment.

Debtors' Prison and Lock-up House.

WEYMOUTH.

DEBTORS' PRISON AND LOCK-UP HOUSE.

UNDER the town-hall, and adjoining the street and market-place, is a cell for debtors, and at the back are two cells which are used for prisoners before they are committed to Dorchester gaol. These latter are seldom detained above a night or two. In very rare cases an individual has been kept there so long as 14 days: this has been done, as I am given to understand, with respect to refractory apprentices, whom it has been thought inexpedient to expose to the contamination of a large gaol. One debtor has been kept for some months in the debtors' cell, which has a window looking upon the street, and is on the ground floor. No one resides in this prison, but the key is kept by the serjeant-at-mace, who visits it three times a-day when any one is confined there. At the time of my visit there was no one in the criminal cells, and some inconvenience was felt owing to the sudden arrival of a second debtor, for whom there is a difficulty in finding the requisite accommodation. He is placed for the present in the waiting-room adjoining the court-room.

The serjeant-at-mace is allowed sixpence for every meal which he furnishes to the prisoners, and he brings them three meals a-day.

The prisoners are not allowed to smoke tobacco, nor are they permitted to receive fermented liquors, but these regulations do not extend to the debtors.

The county sessions are held here, as well as the town-court. It is in contemplation to build a new gaol here, and a plan of it was shown to me. It was to form a part of the proposed new town-hall. It included four debtors' cells, and ten other cells. As far as debtors are concerned, as long as they continue to be confined here, it is absolutely indispensable that more extended, decent, and wholesome accommodation should be provided for them; but, in other respects, a good lock-up house is all that is necessary for Weymouth, and would prove least onerous.

The lock-up cells are clean, and there is a privy belonging to them.

Weymouth. Debtors' Prison and Lock-up House.

The single cell, appropriated to the debtors, is one of the worst in England destined for such a purpose. It affords facilities for escape and for conversation with the passengers in the street. It has no yard belonging to it.

This cell is a very small one on the ground floor, with two windows looking on the street. It is very close. There is a fire-place, but the inmate did not use it all last winter, because it is so near to his bed. If any accident happened, he would have to wait till the serjeant-at-mace, his keeper, could arrive. The town allows 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day for his maintenance.

He now (June 1836) has been here 10 months, at the suit of a tradesman in Jersey. He was brought up at the last insolvent debtors' circuit at Dorchester, but the commissioner remanded him, believing that he had contracted the debt without means. He is to stay till September next. He takes a walk most days for an hour or even longer, with the serjeant-at-mace. He bears ample testimony to the kindness of the mayor and of his keeper, the serjeant-at-mace; but he wishes much to be removed into a lodging in the town, on the ground of the unfitness of his cell for a long imprisonment. The mayor objects to this. The commissioner was informed by the mayor of the bad state of the prison, but, under all the circumstances, he deemed it proper to remand the debtor to his present apartment. The individual in question is in very good health; but 10 months passed in this cell are equivalent to a longer period in a more wholesome place.

Such an imprisonment is not, however, likely to occur here again under the same circumstances, because the authorities of the town are about to make a new building, on a small scale.

36 persons were confined in the cells during the year 1835, and 12 have been confined there from the beginning of this year (1836) up to the 10th of June.

POOLE.

Town Gaol and House of Correction.

Construction.

Poole. Town Gaol and House of Correction.

The whole prison is very contracted in space, but the yards are not so much so as the building. There is only one day-room, which is appropriated to the use of the debtors. There is no room for the sick, no chapel, no bath.

There is a great deficiency of cells, and particularly in regard to females, for whose use one only is appropriated. In consequence of this scarcity of cells, prisoners often sleep together, two in one bed, which cannot be too soon discontinued. There is water and a privy in each yard. The yards are four in number; one is for the debtors, one for the females, one for the felons, and one for the tread-mill. In the passage leading to the felons' yard there is a fire-place: when it rains the felons sit in this passage.

There is a boundary wall, and it is not overlooked in any part by the adjacent houses. There has been only one escape in 14 years; this one was unsuccessful, and occurred recently. There has been no alarm of fire during that period.

If the prisoners who are sentenced to hard labour and to long terms of imprisonment were transferred to Dorchester Gaol there would be less necessity for building new cells; but if that plan be not adopted, it will be absolutely indispensable to enlarge the accommodations of the prison. There is some ground which might be used for building, which at present forms the gaoler's garden.

Management.

Prisoners sentenced to hard labour were formerly sent to Dorchester, but they are now retained here since the erection of the tread-mill. No prisoner has been detained here longer than 12 months during the occupancy of the present keeper. Tobacco is not allowed. The mayor often inspects the gaol: he visited it twice in the last week.

Two men were in the habit of sleeping together in the same bed at the time of my visit; and such also is often the custom with respect to the female prisoners. Here, as elsewhere, I have endeavoured to prevent a repetition of this evil practice by pointing it out to the mayor and other authorities.

The keeper is the only resident officer. It would be impossible for him to perform his duty even in the inadequate manner which he attempts if it were not for the assistance of his wife: she acts voluntarily as matron, and has never received any directions to attend upon the women; she has no gratuity, but earns 6*d.* a-pair by washing the prison blankets. An additional turnkey is absolutely necessary if this gaol is to maintain any higher character than that of a good lock-up house.

The rules observed here respecting visits and letters are not sufficiently strict nor well defined. Visits cannot be made without an order from the sheriff, and they must take place in the presence of the keeper or of his deputy. The gaoler generally reads the letters, but there is no fixed regulation respecting letters. I have earnestly recommended the adoption of fixed rules on these and other subjects.

Labour.

There is a small tread-mill, which is capable of containing 12 persons; but no more than six have ever been employed upon it at once. The power is not applied to any profitable purpose. When a prisoner is unfit for this kind of work, the keeper sends to the workhouse for oakum in order to be picked. The prisoners wash their yards, cells, and privies. I found one female prisoner washing for the gaoler's wife.

County of Dorset.

Poole. Town Gaol and House of Correction.

The tread-mill is of comparatively little use from the want of an assistant to superintend; as there is only one officer, he cannot be constantly on the watch.

Religious and other Instruction.

There is no chapel. I have recommended that the debtors' day-room be used as a temporary chapel in the absence of better means, and that a chaplain be engaged, with a fixed salary, and on the condition of visiting the prison at regulated times. There is no want of religious books here. It is needless, perhaps, to add that there is no provision made for instructing the prisoners in reading, except when some ladies have sometimes taught a female. A clergyman of Poole comes to visit the prisoners occasionally, and converses a little with them. He brings them religious books, of which there is a good supply. He receives no salary, and has not visited for a month past.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

There is no surgeon engaged at a fixed salary; indeed, the surgeon comes at present only on an order from the sheriff: but this evil, having been pointed out by me to the mayor, will be immediately, as he assures me, corrected. During 14 years that the gaoler has resided here no death has occurred. No case of malignant cholera was seen here. No extra allowance has been ordered for the sick during the last two years.

Salary.

The keeper has 12*s.* per week: this is obviously an insufficient sum to induce a competent individual to undertake the office. He receives coals and candles, and also demands 13*s.* 4*d.* from every debtor when he leaves the prison: this is a bad custom; but he does not detain them if they are unable to pay it.

Statistics of the Population.

|---|---|
| From 1st January 1835 to 31st December 1835 the total number admitted was | 43 |
| Of these were debtors . . . . . . | 4 |
| Of the whole number were females . . . . . | 4 |
| Sixteen was the greatest number at one time. | |

The average number of persons confined here at one time is five or six. Most of them are to be strangers.

At the time of my visit (13th June 1836) I found no debtors, one untried woman, and three convicted males: in short, only four prisoners.

Bedding and Clothing.

The debtors pay 1*s.* 6*d.* a-week for the use of bedding; but if they are unable to do so they use the prison bedding. The prison beds are good; each has a flock bed, two blankets, a rug, and a pillow. The whole is clean; the blankets are usually washed once a month.

For the clothing, when a prisoner is destitute, the sheriff orders some necessary coarse articles. There is a store in the prison of one dozen shirts and of half a dozen shifts. The prisoners may have their clothes washed by their friends without, or they may wash them themselves. Half a pound of soap is allowed weekly to each prisoner, and also warm water to wash with.

Diet.

The untried prisoners and the debtors only are allowed to receive food from without. Beer is only permitted to be introduced for the use of the debtors; there is no order respecting the introduction of spirits for the use of the debtors. The debtors, if destitute, receive 6*d.* per day, or are supplied with the workhouse allowance for food which is sent in from the workhouse. The bread which is provided for the prisoners is furnished twice a-week from the workhouse. The weekly quantity of bread allotted to each prisoner consists of two loaves, each weighing three pounds two ounces, so that it amounts to six pounds four ounces per head weekly. On Monday no extra food is given; on Tuesday some meat and potatoes are sent in from the workhouse; on Wednesday, soup; on Thursday, cheese; on Friday, meat and potatoes again; on Saturday, peas soup; on Sunday the prisoners receive no extra allowance. On Saturday they receive some extra bread in company with the peas soup. No salt is provided, but the gaoler gives some from his own stock; he also supplies them with warm water when they ask for it. No distinction is made between the diet of those who are sentenced to hard labour and that of the other prisoners. A peck of coals is allowed every two days in winter for the male felons' yard and the female yard.

Whipping and Punishment.

This is performed by the gaoler, among the numerous duties which devolve upon him here; and he receives no remuneration for it. The ordinary number of lashes is twelve, inflicted by a cat-of-nine-tails, and in the presence of the sheriff and the surgeon. There is no dark cell. When punishment is necessary, which is rare, the prisoner is locked up in a cell, but the shutter is not put up to darken it.

Rules.

There is a printed paper containing 13 rules, but these are much in need of revision and augmentation.

Progress of the Population.

The numbers have increased of late years, because the prisoners sentenced to hard labour are now detained here, instead of being sent, as formerly was the case, to the county gaol and house of correction at Dorchester.

EXETER.

Devon County Gaol and Bridewell.

Exeter.
Devon County Gaol and Bridewell.

THE whole building was first occupied in 1811.

The gaol and bridewell are two separate buildings, with separate entrances, but they are only divided by a wall, and they have a door which communicates with both edifices. There is a separate establishment of turnkeys for each, and a separate keeper has the more particular charge of each, although the governor, who resides in the gaol, superintends the whole. They have each a separate chapel, and separate accounts.

Few prisons are placed on so elevated and healthy a situation, and so entirely removed from the neighbourhood of other buildings. It is not inconveniently near to the city, and it is not at all overlooked. The most important improvement to be kept in view here is the enlargement of the accommodations of the bridewell, which is usually too full or overflowing; while the gaol, on the contrary, has more room than is ordinarily required. This extension of the bridewell may be accomplished by taking from the gaol one, two, or more of the yards contiguous to the bridewell, and appropriating them to the use of the inmates of the bridewell. There is no public kitchen either in the gaol or in the bridewell.

The cells are not heated in the winter. The accommodation of cells in the gaol is as follows:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| On the male side of the prison, single cells 73 | 73 | |
| Cells lately built, calculated for 3 each, 20 | 60 | |
| | | 133 |
| On the female side, including the bridewell females, 64 | 64 | |
| Cells lately built, calculated for 2 each, 16 | 32 | |
| | | 229 |
| On the male side the dark cells for punishments | | 7 |
| On the female ditto ditto | | 5 |
| The condemned cells in the chapel are 3 for males and 3 for females | | 6 |
| Total | | 247 |

Size of the Cells.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Single cells (old building) | 8 feet 8 inches | by 6 feet 6 inches. |
| Treble and double cells (new building) | 13 „ 6 „ | by 9 „ 6 „ |
| Single cells (new building) | 13 „ 6 „ | by 6 „ 6 „ |

Management.

The untried prisoners are placed together in their yards and day-rooms, but have separate cells at night. The convicted prisoners in the gaol are very few, and are treated in the same way. They take their meals in their day-rooms, and consequently have intercourse with each other, but are kept as silent as possible, and punished for talking when heard.

Devon County Gaol and Bridewell.

No convicted prisoner is allowed to receive visits except by a written order from a magistrate. No letters are received until they have been imprisoned six months, except under special circumstances. The prisoners are in their day-rooms and airing-yards all the day.

Solitary confinement does not exist here in any notable degree. The untried are not locked up during the day-time, nor are the convicted smugglers, but all the inmates of the gaol have separate cells, and they are all ordered to observe silence, which appears to be moderately well enforced. There is ample room in the gaol for all its inmates: in general, there are more cells than inmates.

There is no clerk in this very extensive establishment, and I believe that the appointment of such an officer, if well chosen, would be an improvement.

Diet.

No food is allowed to be introduced from without excepting dried herbs.

Untried.—Males, 22oz. bread and 1½lb. potatoes daily; 1lb. of bacon per week.
Females, 16oz. bread and 1lb. potatoes daily; 1lb. of bacon per week.
Convicted.—Males, 16oz. bread and 1lb. potatoes daily; 1lb. of bacon per week.
Females, the same.

The prisoners wear their own clothing before trial; if worn out, it is supplied by the county.

The bedding includes a bed stuffed with straw, a rug, and two blankets.

A small piece of soap is given weekly to each, about 1oz., and about ¼lb. of salt weekly.

When vagrants enter the prison a second time, the potatoes are withdrawn from the diet as well as the bacon, so that they receive only bread and water.

Offences and Punishments.

The most frequent offence committed here is the breach of silence, for which prisoners are confined in dark cells.

When whipping is inflicted, the usual number of lashes is from one to four dozen; the instruments are a military cat-of-nine-tails for adults, and a lighter cat for boys.

Labour.

As the majority of the prisoners here are untried, this is carried on on a very small scale. The employments for the females are washing, making and mending clothing and bedding, and the duties of wardswomen. The wardsmen cook in each day-room. The labour here is not productive.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

There are prayers every day and two sermons on Sundays. The chaplains instruct the juvenile prisoners, and supply books to the other prisoners, read prayers three times a-week at the infirmary, and visit the prisoners in solitary confinement twice a-week.

The juvenile prisoners only are instructed under the superintendence of the chaplain, that is to say, those who are under 15 years of age.

A chaplain and an assistant-chaplain are provided for the spiritual care of the county gaol and bridewell and the county debtors' gaol, all situated in Exeter. These gentlemen divide the performance of divine service between them, but the chaplain is charged with the particular care of the prisoners. The chaplain has only been in office a few months, and on entering upon his functions he found the assistant-chaplain already provided. The chaplain has no other duty except that which is connected with the prisons above named; the assistant-chaplain is engaged in a grammar-school. Schoolmasters for the prisoners in general are chosen usually from among the smugglers, who conduct themselves better than the other classes of prisoners. The magistrates supply freely those religious books which are ordered by the chaplain. For further information on the subject of religious and other instruction reference may be made to the notices of the bridewell and of the debtors' prison which follow presently. Altogether at the three prisons five full services are performed every Sunday, and twelve services on week-days.

A committee of ladies has been formed for the purpose of instructing the female prisoners. The number of its members is limited to 20, but they amount at present to 14 only. They visit the gaol and bridewell twice in the week; two ladies usually attend at the same time at each of these establishments and their stay is generally prolonged to two hours. They teach the female prisoners to read, and make them read the Bible aloud: sometimes they make a present of a Bible to a deserving individual.

There are two clerks attendant on the chapels who are not prisoners.

If a prison for females only should at a future period be built in the yard adjoining the bridewell, it would be very desirable to fit up a room in it as a chapel exclusively for the females. Then, in order that the labour of the chaplain or chaplains might not be unnecessarily increased, the bridewell men might come to attend service at the gaol chapel, instead of having a chapel belonging to the bridewell. By means of an iron bridge the bridewell men might easily enter the gaol chapel, without passing through the body of the gaol. The total number of services would thus not be augmented, while the sexes would be kept separate.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The infirmary contains three rooms for males and three for females in the gaol, which serve as a common infirmary for the bridewell also. One of the turnkeys assists as nurse, and his wife also is salaried as nurse.

The surgeon has been attached to the gaol and bridewell) nearly 20 years. His salary has not been increased since his first appointment, although his labours have been augmented by the greater number of prisoners, by the provisions of the Gaol Act, and by the influx of syphilitic soldiers. Trusses were formerly allowed for the prisoners whose case required them, but their supply is now discontinued. The surgeon or his senior pupil usually visits every day; he inserts his name in the journal as often as he attends. He is ready to attend, whenever he is sent for, by day or by night. He only enters into the register those cases which are so severe as to require to be placed in the infirmary, and has no record of the number of prisoners for whom an occasional medicine is prescribed. No particular diseases prevail here, nor has he ever observed any peculiar tendency to disease, except at a former period when the crowded condition of the bridewell cells induced a disposition to febricula, which, however, soon yielded to a separation of the prisoners and to the common remedies.

There is one insane person confined here at present. She is aged 24, indicted for arson at the Lent assizes 1835, and found insane by the jury. She has been in gaol ever since the 23d September 1834.

The cells of the gaol and bridewell are not warmed at present; but solitary confinement was practised during last winter at the bridewell, without any other apparent bad result except heavy complaints against the cold. The surgeon is of opinion that, if this system is persevered in, it will be necessary to warm the cells, or, at all events, to issue additional blankets. In former years he has been obliged to remove from temporary solitary confinement soldiers, pregnant women, and debilitated persons, who suffered from the cold, and whom he felt obliged to replace in the day-room for the sake of the fire-place.

The surgeon receives no extra allowance for midwifery cases. He believes that about a fourth part of his whole salary is absorbed by the medicines.

One midwifery case occurred in the gaol in 1833, and another during the two previous years. One midwifery case occurred in the bridewell in 1835, but none in 1834.

DEVON COUNTY BRIDEWELL.

Devon County Bridewell.

Construction.

I have alluded, under the former article, to the insufficient number of cells in this building, and to one of the means of remedying the deficiency. A searching-room and a bath are much wanted.

If any alterations of an extensive kind should ever be ordered, the most useful would be to convert the stone-yard, which is enclosed with a wall, and totally apart, into the site of new cells for the women, with a separate chapel and infirmary for their use.

| Number of sleeping-cells*, &c.— | Males. | Females. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cells where only one prisoner sleeps and works . . . | 0 | 0 | |
| Cells where more than one prisoner sleeps and works . . | 0 | 0 | |

| Receiving-rooms or cells . . . . . . . | | 0 | |
| Divisions in the chapel . . . . . . . | | 6 | |

It will be seen that there are no dark cells here; it would be desirable to have two or three such in situations remote from communication with the other prisoners. The cells are all of the same size, 9 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 6 inches.

Management.

The keeper of the bridewell has been fixed there 13 years; he was formerly assistant-keeper at the Whitecross-street prison. Considering the importance and responsibility of his station, I cannot help noticing that his salary is too disproportionately small at £100 per annum, when compared with the salary of £500 per annum enjoyed by the governor.

Silence was enforced here to a certain extent about three years ago, and the confinement of the prisoners in separate cells was first enjoined in June 1835. The meals are taken by each prisoner in his cell.

The cells are unfortunately not sufficiently numerous, and they are, what is still worse, because perhaps more difficult to correct, extremely small. At present many of the male convicts sleep three in one small cell. But there is abundance of ground belonging to the bridewell which may be available for future additions.

The four tread-wheels, placed in distinct yards, are not at present sufficiently watched. It is impossible that two turnkeys can suffice for the purpose of enforcing silence at all these wheels. Another turnkey is very necessary, and would render this bridewell more complete. During the day the prisoners are separated in their sleeping cells, except when at labour and at chapel, and they are prevented from intercourse by being inspected when at work, as far as the number of officers permits.

One prisoner in each ward acts as cook, and keeps up a fire during three hours daily for this purpose; the others do not use the day-room. The cells are not warmed in winter, which is a pressing want, and, if the cells are not warmed artificially during the winter, it will be proper to order an additional blanket for every prisoner separately confined.

All wear their own clothing, with the exception of the felons and male vagrants, who are clothed in county dresses. A bed stuffed with straw, a rug, and two blankets.

The vagrants were deprived of the bacon above two years ago, and this act has thinned their numbers here.

Cost of prison diet per day per head 3¾*d.*

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

Information on these points will be seen under the same head of the Devon County Gaol.

The insane prisoners at present confined here are—

A man, aged 61, committed Jan. 19, 1819
" " 48, " Aug. 11, "
" " 52, " Dec. 22, 1828
" " 67, " " 15, 1832

There is a separate ward and yard set apart here for the reception of lunatics. A prisoner is placed also there to take care of them.

Adjoining the prison, behind and above it, and detached, is the public reservoir, which supplies the whole city with water from the river. The surgeon strongly recommends that the waste water of this reservoir should be conducted into a main in the prison, and should be allowed to run off among the sewers of the prison, by which means the health of the prison would be promoted, and the bad smell often occurring in the summer would be obviated; whereas at present it passes outside the wall of the prison into a ditch, and is totally lost.

Labour.

During the months of May, June, July, and August, the tread-mill is at work nine hours in the day, which is the greatest amount of labour. During March, April, September, and October, it is employed eight hours in the day. During January, February, November, and December, seven hours is the limit of labour daily.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| During the 1st period | The number of feet in ascent daily is | 16,200 |
| | And revolutions of the wheels daily are | 1,080 |
| During the 2d period | Feet in ascent daily | 14,400 |
| | Revolutions of the wheels daily | 960 |
| During the 3d period | Feet in ascent daily | 12,600 |
| | Revolutions of the wheels daily | 840 |

The wheels will hold at one time 18 prisoners. The height of each step is 7½ inches, and the ordinary velocity of the wheels per minute is two rounds. The ordinary proportion of prisoners to the total number employed on the wheels is three-fourths. The application of the tread-mill power is to grinding corn. There are no compartments on the wheels, and it would be advantageous to supply them.

Besides a tread-mill, there is also a crank, which is out of repair, and is not used.

The other employments are, for the men, the duty of wardsmen and picking oakum; and for the women, the duty of wardswomen also, and picking oakum, washing for the whole prison, making and mending the clothing and the bedding. The labour is not at all productive; there are no profits.

All the prisoners are employed, the four insane ones excepted. The prisoners seem to consider labour as a punishment.

Punishments.

The most common offence committed in the bridewell is the violation of silence, and it is punished by confinement in a refractory cell. When whipping is ordered the number of lashes varies from one to four dozen.

Fees.

None whatever are permitted to be demanded nor to be received from any person on any pretext.

Estimate of the Results of the present System.

The vagrants have much diminished in number since November 1833, at which time the bacon was withdrawn from their dietary. The number of vagrants in July 1833 amounted to 39; in July 1836 it was only 26; and in the month of May 1836 it was so low as 14.

City Gaol and Bridewell.

Exeter City Gaol and Bridewell.

Construction.

I shall dwell the less minutely on the defects of this prison, because the new town-council are very desirous of immediately correcting them, and are, I believe, engaged in that work. The cells for the females are more numerous than is necessary; at all events, in the extremely crowded state of the male wards, it is very desirable that a certain portion of the female cells should be appropriated to the males. There are other means of permanently enlarging the male part of the prison, which I have suggested to the magistrates.

| | Male. | Female. |
|---|---|---|
| Number of sleeping cells, &c.— | | |
| Cells where one prisoner sleeps only . . . . | 10 | 10 |
| Cells where more than one prisoner sleeps . . . | 4 | 4 |
| Prisoners the prison is capable of containing in all cases . . | 0 | 0 |

|---|---|
| Refractory cells— | |
| Light . . . . . . . | 8 |
| Dark . . . . . . . | 0 |
| Apartments below ground . . . . . | 0 |
| Wards or divisions in the prison . . . . | 7 |
| Day-rooms . . . . . . . | 7 |
| Work-room . . . . . . . | 1 |
| Tread-wheel houses, or divisions upon the tread-wheels . . | 2 |
| Receiving-rooms or cells . . . . . | 0 |
| Divisions in the chapel . . . . . | 6 |
| Warm and cold baths, or bathing-tubs . . . | one bathing-tub. |
| Airing yards . . . . . . | 6 |

The cells are not heated in the winter. Some of them are extremely close and ill ventilated in consequence of very large screens placed in front of the windows. The walls which divide the yards are so low that the prisoners can easily see others in the different yards when standing at the door of their ward. This evil is, I have no doubt, by this time corrected. The boundary wall is not high enough, and a chevaux-de-frize is wanting. Three successful escapes have occurred during the last 15 years.

Management.

I cannot speak with satisfaction of the system which has hitherto prevailed here; but I believe that a better one is by this time introduced. At the time of my visit the male wards were excessively crowded. In two cells which I desired to be unlocked at night I found in each six men sleeping; there was no room to step between the beds, some of which were on the ground. In one of these cells, in the place of pots, I found only one pail for the natural wants of all the six prisoners. Both the cells were very hot and fœtid.

The untried and the convicted associate freely together in their respective day-rooms and yards.

It will be very necessary to have another turnkey, and to issue new rules. Silence was not enjoined before the period of my visit.

Labour.

A tread-wheel is in operation here, but the labour is not productive. They beat straw to keep the wheel at work, not having a supply of hemp. There is no crank machine. Seven hours in summer, six in winter, are the hours for those that work at the tread-wheel. There is no other regular labour except the tread-wheel for male prisoners. Female prisoners are employed in washing and mending for the male prisoners, in knitting, &c. The labour is considered as a punishment.

There are no compartments on the wheels. They are employed every month in the year. The height of each step is 7½ inches. The ordinary velocity of the wheels per minute is 24 times. The power is applied to beat hemp or straw.

Diet.

There are 34 twopenny loaves a-week distributed to the debtors from different donations; some besides are allowed from the county 6*d.* per day.

For those prisoners not engaged in hard labour the allowance is 22oz. of white bread per day and 1½lb. of potatoes; 22oz. of white bread, and 1½lb. of potatoes, and 1lb. of mutton per week, to those that are at hard labour only.

There are some gaol-dresses, lent only to those who ask for them: the supply is scanty.

The bedding consists of three blankets, one coverlet, and a mattrass filled with straw.

Coals, salt, soap, and hand-towels are supplied at the gaolers' orders.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain keeps a journal, and also a list of all who are present at church and absent. He delivers the sacrament about four times yearly; rarely more than five or six prisoners communicate. The supply of books is moderate: the chaplain has represented the want to the new town-council. He is chaplain to the workhouse. There is every Sunday one service with a sermon. Service also is performed on Wednesdays and Fridays; also on Christmas-day. The chaplain instructs the juvenile offenders in reading generally, as well as in the church catechism. The keeper is now instructing three juvenile offenders in writing. The chaplain has at present a class of four. He thinks that the want of separation is an obstacle to religious improvement. The recommittals are usually prostitutes and breakers of the peace.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The surgeon visits the prison three days a-week, and at all other times when required. There is no infirmary, which is a defect which I have recommended to the correction of the magistrates. There has been no death in the prison during the last year. The most frequent disorders are itch and venereal complaints. There is no insane prisoner here at present.

And at present, in 1836, July 4, 50 (including debtors in each year).

VI. Expenditure.

The cost of the daily diet of the prisoners sentenced to hard labour is 4½*d.*; that of the other prisoners is 3½*d.*

Cost of the Conveyance of Prisoners.

One shilling a-mile per head is the price of the contract entered into by the town-council with the gaoler; the gaoler usually accompanies the prisoners.

---

Memorandum on the projected House of Refuge for Industrious Prisoners, on the expiration of their terms of confinement.

It has been for some time in contemplation, on the part of the county magistrates and of other benevolent individuals, to found an institution of this kind in the neighbourhood of Exeter. If I am rightly informed, a house has been already taken, which is destined for the reception of females on quitting the prisons, and subscriptions have been raised for its maintenance. This noble project must have the best wishes of all who take an interest in the relief of the suffering, or in the amendment of the corrupt. Here, as everywhere else, there is a great difficulty in procuring employment for the prisoners newly restored to liberty. There is a considerable demand for servants, but the tradespeople will not take prisoners in that capacity, and most other occupations are overstocked. At the bridewell the keeper has found reason to be very well satisfied with the conduct of two women, whom he successively took into his family as servants on the close of their imprisonment. One had been in his service two months at the time of my visit, and was behaving well; the other lived twelve months in his family and then married.

Devon County Debtors' Prison, or Sheriff's Ward.

DEVON COUNTY DEBTORS' PRISON (at EXETER), or SHERIFF'S WARD.

Construction.

This is a spacious and solid building, greatly superior to the debtors' prisons found in most other places.

| Sleeping Cells— | Males. | Females. |
|---|---|---|
| Cells where one prisoner sleeps only | 15 | 2 |
| Cells where more than one prisoner sleeps | 23 | 3 |

The prison is not secure, but it is remarkably dry and healthy. There is a small fireplace in each cell.

A prisoner escaped in March 1834, and the keeper affirms that he was obliged to pay between £200 and £300 on his account.

Diet.

The prisoners, in regard to diet, provide for themselves; or, if destitute, they receive 6*d.* a day from the county.

Religious and other Instruction.

Divine service is performed here every Sunday, and there is a salaried chaplain; but the attendance on the part of the debtors is voluntary. The chaplain would be glad to confer on religious subjects with the debtors, but during his short period of office he has met with no encouragement on the part of the debtors. Whenever his aid is desired he prays with those who are sick.

Devon County Debtors' Prison, or Sheriff's Ward.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The surgeon of the county gaol also attends the sheriff's ward for the same salary. He goes there only when sent for. The master-debtors employ their own doctor. The indispositions in this place are principally owing to drinking. The situation is rather low. There was no death last year, and about 10 cases of illness out of 161 prisoners. There is no infirmary.

General Remarks.

Number of debtors confined in the course of the year, from February 16th 1835 to February 16th 1836, males 150, females 11.

The average number of inmates at one time is 44 or 45.

Scale of Charges.

The first-class debtors, in a part of the prison distinct from the common debtors, pay for separate rooms, neatly furnished, 10*s.* 6*d.* per week.

Second class.—Separate rooms, with good feather bed and furniture, 5*s.* per week.

Third class.—Two beds in one room, furnished as above, 2*s.* 6*d.*

Fourth class.—Two beds in one room, and two debtors in each bed, furnished as above, 1*s.* 3*d.*

Fifth class.—Straw bed and furniture similar to the felons' prison, 6*d.*

The repairs of the prison are maintained at the expense of the county; the supposed average is about £25 per year.

The county also pays the expense of one turnkey at £25 per annum; and also provides a chaplain at £50 per annum, a clerk at £5 per annum, and a surgeon.

The privies are good, and water is abundant; and the whole house is neatly kept up, which is not always easy with debtors.

The matron has no salary; which she certainly ought to receive, because she superintends the female prisoners, and is often obliged to act as nurse.

The gaoler receives £30 a-year from the sheriff, which he pays to the porter at the lodge—an officer who is absolutely necessary. His own salary is accordingly reduced to £100 a-year; compensation for the old gate-fees now abolished.

There is only one debtor now in custody the second time.

If this gaol continues there should be a chevaux-de-frize on the boundary wall; it is not sufficiently secure at present to guarantee the keeper.

The only allowance made to the keeper is rushlights for the sick and candles for the chapel. He receives no fee from debtors, except what is allowed by the Act, as 1*s.* 6*d.* on bringing them up, and 3*d.* for the copy of the warrant for those who take the benefit of the Insolvent Act. About 10 are now sleeping two in a bed among the men. This practice should be stopped; and a gate should be placed to protect the entrance of the female yard. The number at present is less than usual.

Plymouth. Common Gaol.

PLYMOUTH.

COMMON GAOL.

THE sessions room and its offices form a part of this building.

There is no possibility of enlarging the present building, so as to make it under any circumstances a proper prison. It stands in the middle of the street, surrounded by houses.

The prison is said to be capable of containing at one time so many as 46; that is to say, 46 human beings might, with the greatest inconvenience and impropriety, be compressed within those walls. It might contain fourteen persons in separate cells, supposing that the day-rooms were disused as such, and were converted into separate cells. There are only two yards, one for males and one for females. The male yard has not been used at all for some weeks, in consequence of repairs which are proceeding. The cells are very few in number. The walls are filthy in some parts; some of the doors are imperfect, with large holes in them; several of the windows are without glass, and all is in more or less disorder. The yards are extremely small, and are closely encircled all around by the main building.

Management.

In point of dirt and neglect this prison will yield to few, but it is due to the new town-council to state that they appear fully to perceive its faults, and to be hastening to remedy them. There is said to be some difficulty respecting the payment of rates on the part of the inhabitants of Devonport, which acts as an obstacle to expenditure. The mayor appears at present to be the only visiting magistrate. Classification, or silence, or separate confinement, are impracticable here at present. Two men have hitherto often slept together in the same bed, and the women sleep two in a bed. But the mayor has lately most judiciously ordered separate bedsteads to be made. The gaol is governed by the two serjeants-at-mace, who act as keepers in alternate weeks, and by one turnkey, who assists them.

This gaol does not receive the prisoners from Devonport; they are sent to Exeter.

Diet.

Each prisoner receives daily 2lbs. of bread.
On Tuesdays, 1 quart of milk broth.
Thursdays, 1 quart of pea-soup.
Saturdays, ditto.
Sunday, a portion of meat and potatoes from the workhouse (perhaps ¼ lb. of meat).

Every one may receive food from his friends, unless he is sentenced to solitary confinement or to bread and water. Debtors may now have a pint of ale once a-day; no other liquors are allowed. The keepers are not allowed to sell anything to prisoners.

No clothing is allowed unless when the prisoner is destitute. The bedding consists of a straw mattress, two blankets, and a rug.

Transport of Prisoners.

During the last two years a contract has been made to carry all prisoners committed from Plymouth, and Devonport, and Stonehouse, to Exeter, at £350 per annum: it is an arrangement made by the county. This sum has hitherto been paid by the county, but in future will be paid by the borough.

Offences and Punishments.

The usual offences are fighting and riots, arising from crowded cells.

They are punished by ironing, locking up in cells, keeping on bread and water, and denying to them the visits of friends.

Letters and Visits.

The following is the rule for all: When a letter comes it is taken to the mayor; if he thinks proper he reads it, and directs it to be given to the prisoner or not. All letters going out are read by the keeper: if he finds anything wrong, he communicates it to the mayor; but that has not happened in ten years.

Visits to all before trial are forbidden. After conviction the prisoner may see any one from 12 to 1.

Salaries.

The serjeants-at-mace are keepers alternately. Each serjeant-at-mace receives £30 annually for all his duties. The senior receives £2. 10*s.* additional, as being crier of the court. They have a few perquisites, but none connected with the prison; not even coals or candles.

V. Recommittals

Were, during the course of the year, from Michaelmas 1833 to Michaelmas 1834, once, 9; twice, 1; three times, 1; four times or more, 2.

VI. Expenses.

The total expenses, including all the diet, bedding, clothing, soap, and straw, on an average of three years, are about £100 per annum. The extra allowances, made by order of the surgeon, from September 29, 1834, to December 25, 1835, amounted to only 9*s.* 9*d.* The Town Council pays 10*s.* 6*d.* for the gross hundred-weight of bread, second quality.

Religious and other Instruction.

There is no chapel. A large room is used for that purpose when dissenting ministers volunteer their services; it is at present in contemplation to place the debtors in this room. The want of a regular chaplain is not the least blemish in this most defective establishment. There are a few religious books. No instruction is provided for the prisoners.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

There is no room set apart for the sick. In the year from March 1833 to March 1834, 26 was the total number of sick, and 7 the greatest number of sick at one time of cholera. There has been no death during the last ten years.

The surgeon has hitherto been changed every year with the new mayor, or generally so; thus his experience in the habits of prisoners is, or may be, thrown aside almost as soon as it is formed. It is most desirable that in future a permanent surgeon should remain in office, subjected to certain regulations, but not annually removable. I only saw one prisoner who appeared to be suffering from bodily disease, and, as to the state of mind, all appeared sufficiently cheerful. The surgeon is said to come every morning in general, or whenever sent for. Perhaps once a week a person requires aid.

OKEHAMPTON.

Borough Gaol.

Okehampton. Borough Gaol.

This miscalled building is a wretched house, containing, in the keeper's part, a kitchen, a workshop, and a single bed-room, in which he and his wife, his five children, and a girl are sleeping in company. For the prisoners there are two cells: one opens from the workshop, and below this is the other miserable cell, unfit for use, surrounded by bare walls, and without a bed. There is one small yard for the prisoners.

The keeper is serjeant-at-mace, and receives as such £3. 13*s.* 6*d.* annually, a cloak, and a hat. He also receives a shilling per night when a deserter is lodged here; but he has no coals nor candles, nor any perquisite whatever. His wife has never been ordered to act as matron.

No prisoner was here at the time of my visit.

In 1830 there were 3 prisoners admitted.
„ 1831 there was only 1.
„ 1833 there were none.
„ 1834 „ 5 (all men).
„ 1835 „ none.
„ 1836 (up to July) none.

All who are placed in the lower cell must pass through the keeper's kitchen in order to enter it, and those who are transferred to the upper room must reach it by the keeper's own staircase.

Three years ago a prisoner remained here three months; the keeper has also had one for two months.

The keeper receives three-pence daily from the assistant overseer for the diet of each prisoner. He buys what the prisoners may desire. There is a little dirty bedding: if the keeper cleans it he receives no recompense. This building, in short, is a common dilapidated cottage by the road-side, totally unfit, in its present state, even for a lock-up house. The very small number of prisoners has rendered its defects probably less conspicuous and notorious. In consequence of its being a very small and inconvenient old building, it can only be used, even if much improved, as a lock-up house. The corporation have, since my visit, thought proper to order a small sum of money to be applied in making it clean and more convenient for the gaoler. The present site is very much too confined to make any additions, or for the erection of a new one, with such accommodations as would be required to put in force the rules and regulations that ought to be observed in gaols.

GREAT TORRINGTON.

Old Borough Gaol or Bridewell.

Great Torrington. Old Borough Gaol or Bridewell.

Connected with the old workhouse is a small bridewell, which was formerly used when the sessions existed here, but is not employed as such at present.

It has five cells, a yard, and a privy. It would make a good lock-up house, as the present single room under the town hall is totally unfit for the purpose. The master of the workhouse resides on the spot. The bedding in the cells is good.

BARNSTAPLE.

Town Gaol, House of Correction, and Debtors' Prison.

Construction.

Barnstaple. Town Gaol, House of Correction, and Debtors' Prison.

This building is solid, compact, and sufficiently extensive for the population of the town. It was finished in 1829, and cost £1600. The ground belonged to the corporation. It stands in a square, with houses on each side; but the prisoners are not overlooked. There is no boundary wall. Several escapes took place before this new gaol was built, but none have occurred since. Eight rooms appropriated to the use of the prisoners here have a fire-place in each. There are three yards; one belongs to the gaoler's own residence, but is also used by the debtors; one is for the men, and the other for the women; but when no female prisoner is confined here this yard is also used by the men. Each yard has a pump and a privy; but the pump in one yard does not act at present. The windows are in good order. There are two work rooms. The cells are large and well ventilated, and light enough to work in; some prisoners, indeed, do work in their cells. The debtors have a day-room and a bed-room: in the bed-room there is a double bed. There are 14 cells for other prisoners, and four rooms destined for day-rooms; but two of these are the work-rooms above named, and the other two are not used at present. There is one cell used as a dark cell, by putting up a shutter.

Management.

This prison is under the jurisdiction of the mayor and town council. Although the care of it devolves upon one individual only, yet he maintains a moderately good discipline.

The untried and the convicted are locked up during the whole day in their cells, excepting one hour, which is allotted for exercise. Every one has a separate cell, and there is no communication, except by conversing with each other out of the windows of their cells. Orders have been issued by the magistrates to enforce silence; but to do this effectually is quite impossible where there is only one gaoler, and that one gaoler obliged to be occasionally absent. There exists here no rule by which female prisoners are exclusively attended by a female officer: the gaoler's wife voluntarily acts the part of matron, but she has not been appointed as such, and receives no salary as such. Visits and letters are only admitted by order of the mayor, and the letters are examined by the keeper.

Diet.

The poor debtors receive sixpence daily; the other debtors maintain themselves. The vagrants receive 24 ounces of bread daily, with warm water. The other prisoners, both untried and convicted, receive each 22 ounces of bread per day, 1 lb. of bacon weekly, and 10 lbs. of potatoes weekly. No food is suffered to be introduced from without, except for the use of the debtors, who may receive beer, but no spirits nor wine.

No clothing is allowed, but if a prisoner is destitute the keeper applies to the magistrates. The bedding consists of two rugs and a bed stuffed with straw: a few years ago only straw was provided.

Labour

Consists in beating and picking oakum: the profit of picking oakum is one halfpenny per pound; the prisoner receives a fourth part or more, when he leaves the prison; the rest goes to the keeper. The prisoners also clean their cells, and both men and women wash for themselves. The labour is regarded as a real punishment by the prisoners.

Punishments.

Only one prisoner has been punished during the last eight years; he was handcuffed for three or four hours. No man has been whipped here privately for twenty years past. When boys are whipped they receive two dozen lashes.

Accounts.

There is only kept here by the gaoler a single register of entries. The visiting magistrates also keep a journal.

Statistics of the Population.

During 20 years the keeper has never known more than 13 prisoners at once. The greatest number here at once during the first seven months of 1836 has been 13. There is an increase in the number of prisoners in consequence of Newport and another parish being added to Barnstaple. Since January 1, 1836, up to July 23 of the same year, 56 prisoners have been admitted.

On July 23, 1836, I found one debtor, three untried prisoners, and two convicted ones. There was no female.

The number of Prisoners admitted in 1835 was 30

Salary.

The keeper receives £30 per annum. He is the only salaried officer, and I am of opinion that the remuneration which he obtains is too small; however decently the present officer may perform his functions, the stipend is not a sufficient inducement to fix an able and intelligent individual in the prime of life in such a situation, under ordinary circumstances. His wife, who acts as matron, has no salary.

Religious and other Instruction.

There is no chapel; one of the large day-rooms would make a good chapel. There is no chaplain. I have suggested the importance of such an officer, but the Town Council has answered me in the subjoined Report.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

At the time of my visit it was uncertain who the surgeon was. The surgeon who last paid a visit came through the intervention of an order from the wardens of the poor. It is highly essential that a professional gentleman should be appointed who would visit on fixed days, and hold himself prepared to attend whenever the gaoler requested his aid. A life may be lost, or endangered, during the time of seeking out a functionary who is to supply an order for merely casual assistance. During the twenty years of the keeper's residence there has not been one death in the prison. There is a sick-room for the men, and another sick-room for the female prisoners. There is no insane prisoner in confinement.

Expenditure.

The cost of diet is about 3*d.* a day per head.

General Suggestions.

I made several recommendations to the Town Council respecting the appointment of a chaplain and of a surgeon; to keep a prison register, with columns, marking the name, age, offence, day of entry and of discharge, and other particulars; to issue a fixed allowance of soap and salt for each prisoner; that the present mode of supply of coals be altered, as the keeper receives only 1*d.* a day for this purpose; and also to make an entirely separate ward and yard for females, and a few other points of less importance. Some of these proposals have been adopted in accordance with the Report of a committee appointed by the Town Council of the borough. The Report has been received and adopted by the Council.

Extract from the Report of the Leasing Committee, presented at a meeting of the Town Council of the Borough of Barnstaple, held on the 5th day of October, 1836.

YOUR Committee being deputed to visit the Town Prison with the Magistrates, have taken into their consideration the recommendations of Dr. Bisset Hawkins, Inspector of Prisons; and do report as follows:—

1*st.* They beg to recommend that a register be kept of all the prisoners who may from time to time be incarcerated therein, with columns marking the name, age, offence, date of entry, discharge, and any other remark.

2*nd.* That an allowance of ¼ lb. soap and ¼ lb. salt be allowed to each prisoner per week.

3*rd.* That the same system be continued with respect to coals as heretofore.

4*th.* The Committee are unanimously of opinion, that dividing the yard by a wall would tend to confine the air and render it injurious to the health of the inmates; but they have suggested to the gaoler some alterations, by placing the female prisoners in other cells, in order to check the communication as much as possible with the male prisoners, until a spot of ground can be obtained to be added to the prison for that purpose.

5*th.* They beg to recommend that the window in the sitting-room of the debtors' ward be removed to the opposite side, near the door leading from the passage, and that the door be placed further in the passage, which will cut off the communication at present existing with the felons' yard.

6*th.* That three iron bedsteads, with a straw mattress, a pair of blankets, and a rug for each bedstead, be ordered for the debtors' ward.

7*th.* Your Committee have also seriously considered the recommendation of raising the gaoler's salary, in order to confine his attendance to the prison duties, and the appointment of a matron; as the present gaoler is married, his wife will act as the matron, and attend on the female prisoners, we are therefore of opinion that the present salary and perquisites are fully adequate to the services of both.

8*th.* That it would be desirable if divine service was read every Sunday in the prison; but, as it frequently occurs that there are not more than two or three prisoners at one period, the Committee do not feel themselves justified in recommending the appointment of a chaplain, thereby incurring an additional impost on the town.

9*th.* That whenever a surgeon be required for the prisoners, the Committee recommend that the surgeon for the time being contracting with the board of Guardians be called in, and paid for at per case as he receives from the parish of Barnstaple.

When the guardians of the poor law union appoint a chaplain it is probable that his services will be engaged for the gaol.

The county magistrates appear to have it in contemplation to ask for some more extensive accommodation in the gaol for the county prisoners, which will, perhaps, lead to an enlargement of the premises, and to an improved arrangement for the female prisoners.

BIDEFORD.

TOWN GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Construction.

Bideford.
Town Gaol and House of Correction.

This prison forms part of the workhouse. It is, in every respect, unfit for a gaol, but it might be used in its present state as a lock-up house. It is moderately secure, moderately clean, not very well ventilated, nor very dry. There are no day-rooms here. There are three gaol cells and three bridewell cells. There are no cells specially set apart for females, nor any for debtors. None of the cells have fire-places. There is a very small yard for the prisoners to take exercise in. At the time of my visit, in July, 1836, I found two prisoners, both males; one sentenced to six months' imprisonment, and one to two months. The keeper has once, during six years, had six prisoners here at once; generally he has only two or three, and sometimes none at all.

The prisoners admitted in 1835 were 11 men and boys, 5 women and girls; total 16. Several of the boys and girls were apprentices running away from their employers. In 1834, 18. In 1833, 12.

Management.

This gaol is under the jurisdiction of the Mayor of Bideford. The inmates take very little exercise; they go out in the morning to wash, and to the necessary. They are sometimes asked if they wish to go out, but are said often to refuse.

There is no association, neither among the untried nor among the convicted. Silence is enforced, as far as it is in the power of a single individual to compel it, and this individual also engaged as master of the workhouse. There is an entire separation; every prisoner is locked up in a separate cell, whether untried or convicted. All take their meals in their several cells. The separate confinement has been adopted during six years; it proves formidable; there are few recommittals, except of runaway boys and girls. Visits can only be made by order of the magistrate, a regulation which extends to all the prisoners. The keeper reads all letters before they are delivered. No rule exists as to the attendance on female prisoners by one of their own sex, but the keeper's wife generally acts the part of matron, without any salary. There is a great want here of precise rules. Too much is left to the discretion of the keeper. There are no debtors here at present.

Salary.

|---|---|
| Keeper . . . . . . . | £10 |

He is also master of the workhouse, of which building the prison forms an independent part. For this he receives a separate salary.

Accounts.

The only register preserved here is a memorandum book, which is voluntarily kept up by the keeper.

Diet.

The keeper is allowed by the town 2*s.* 6*d.* per head weekly for each prisoner; he gives the prisoners warm food twice a-day, meat usually three times a-week, broth sometimes. There is no fixed scale for the allowance of bread; cheese is sometimes distributed. Food can only be admitted from without by leave of the magistrates. They have never any fermented liquors. There is no allowance of clothing. The bedding comprises two blankets, a rug, and a straw mattress. Soap and salt are considered to be included under the 2*s.* 6*d.*

Labour.

The hard labour here consists in picking oakum. Four shillings per hundred-weight is the profit, but old cordage is not so easily procured now as formerly, and the keeper cannot obtain a sufficient quantity for the purposes of the establishment. At the present moment, indeed, there is none in the house. It will be perceived that this sort of labour is not very productive; but all the profit which accrues is devoted to the maintenance of the prisoners. The hours of labour are from seven o'clock in the morning till six in the evening in summer, and from eight in the morning until four in winter. No prisoner is allowed to work at any trade. The untried are only employed when they desire it. Labour is not usually regarded as a punishment; it is often sought after.

Religious and other Instruction.

There is no chapel, and at the time of my visit there was no chaplain. I have made a recommendation on this head, as well as on other features of the establishment, to the mayor, and I believe that there exists every disposition on the part of the authorities to improve their prison.

Care of the Sick, Diseases, and Mortality.

The surgeon attached to the workhouse visits here when his attendance is required. There is no infirmary provided for the sick. According to the statement of the keeper, no prisoner has been ill during eight years. Within that period a female prisoner has once lain in here. During the same time no death has occurred. There is no insane prisoner in confinement here.

Prison Offences

Are punished by a reduction of diet, occasionally down to bread and water. No whipping is inflicted here. There has been no attempt at suicide during six years.

Recommendations to Pardon.

One or two have been so recommended, on the ground of good conduct, during the last six years.

BODMIN.

COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Bodmin.
County Gaol and House of Correction.

Construction.

THIS prison lies near a public road, but it is not overlooked. An important change has been accomplished here by the exertions of the present keeper: every prisoner has a separate cell to sleep in. These cells are, however, too small for separate confinement during the day, nor are they sufficiently well lighted and ventilated for that purpose. This was foreseen; but it was justly deemed essential to separate the prisoners at night, although more could not be conveniently accomplished at the time.

| Airing-yards | 15 | | |

The cells are almost all about 8½ feet long, 2½ wide, and 8½ high.

In the gaol the female cells are at present in a state of disorder: the magistrates had resolved to convert this part into single sleeping cells, as is the case for the males; but this was suspended from an idea of some further alterations which might be contemplated by the Legislature in prison discipline. The number of female inmates is usually small.

Some additional means of ventilation may be advantageously adopted here; all of which I have pointed out on the spot. There are no measures in existence for warming the cells in winter.

Management.

Every prisoner now sleeps in a separate cell, excepting the debtors. Silence is enjoined upon all the prisoners, both the tried and the untried. The day-rooms are still in use; there is a fire kept up in them in winter, but no cooking is allowed in any of them. The untried prisoners are not locked up during the day, excepting as a punishment. The prisoners sentenced to hard labour remain in their day-rooms when not engaged in work.

The untried prisoners have no other occupation than the cleaning of their own cells, day-rooms, and courts. They associate in their day-rooms, but they are narrowly watched, and kept in their airing-yards as much as possible, where they are not permitted to associate.

The convicted prisoners are separated by day according to classes, and by night in separate cells.

Intercourse must, from the construction of the day-rooms, take place at meals to a greater extent than at other times, as the turnkeys are present at locking and unlocking, washing, and at chapel, when all intercourse is prevented. The prisoners take their meals in their respective day-rooms.

They are not allowed to receive visits or letters oftener than once in three months after conviction.

The number of prisoners assembled on Sunday for instruction averages between 20 and 30, who are under the superintendence of a schoolmaster and a turnkey. When taking air and when at labour they are under the superintendence of a turnkey; but, at their meals, they are not under any constant superintendence beyond that of the turnkey walking backwards and forwards in the passages.

There are fire-places in each day-room. The fires are put out every evening before the prisoners go to their respective sleeping cells.

Each ward has a towel, combs, and a brush. Every week a piece of soap is distributed to each ward, varying in size according to the number of inmates. Every morning the prisoners are mustered before labour for the purpose of washing. The whole prison is remarkably neat, clean, and well arranged, as far as the nature of the building permits.

Diet.

There is a common kitchen in which only one prisoner is suffered to remain. The soup named in the Dietary is made of one ox's head to 40 persons, or else 10 lbs. of shin are used instead. Supply of salt is unlimited. Only debtors and the untried may receive food from without.

Dietary allowed the male prisoners in Bodmin gaol and bridewell :—

| | | Breakfast. | Dinner. | Supper. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Sunday | Bread 1½ lb. | Gruel 1 pint | Soup 1 pint | Gruel 1 pint. |

| Thursday | Ditto | Ditto | Soup 1 pint | Ditto |

| Saturday | Ditto | Ditto | Soup 1 pint | Ditto |

When potatoes cannot be procured, soup will be substituted.

N.B.—Vagrants, if committed for one month or any less period, 1½ lb. bread only per day; if for more than one month, and not exceeding two months, the allowance of gruel for breakfast and supper after the first month; if for three months, or any longer period, the full allowance after the second month; but without any extra food for hand-mill, tread-wheel, or other labour.

Dietary allowed the female prisoners in Bodmin gaol and bridewell:—

| | | Breakfast. | Dinner. | Supper. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Sunday | Bread 1 lb. | Gruel 1 pint | Soup 1 pint | Gruel 1 pint. |
| Monday | Ditto | Ditto | Potatoes 1 lb. | Ditto |

| Thursday | Ditto | Ditto | Soup 1 pint | Ditto |
| Friday | Ditto | Ditto | Potatoes 1 lb. | Ditto |
| Saturday | Ditto | Ditto | Soup 1 pint | Ditto |

When potatoes cannot be procured, soup will be substituted.

N.B.—Vagrants, if committed for one month, or any less period, 1 lb. of bread only per day; if for more than one month, and not exceeding two months, the allowance of gruel for breakfast and supper after the first month; if for three months, or any longer period, the full allowance after the second month.

Prisoners convicted of felony are entirely clothed in a county dress; other prisoners are allowed shirts, shifts, and such other clothing as they absolutely require.

Each prisoner is allowed a straw mattress with three blankets.

The convicts' dress is not parti-coloured. The prison dress for men is a jacket, waistcoat, trousers, shirt, shoes and stockings, and handkerchief for the neck. For the females it is a jacket, grey serge petticoat, shoes, and shifts.

Labour.

Labour is generally regarded as a punishment, particularly by the idle; but the industrious prisoner views moderate labour as an alleviation of his imprisonment.

There are two tread-wheels, both connected with the same shaft. The tread-mill is employed during every month of the year, from 7 to 10 hours, according to the length of the days. The wheels will hold 26 prisoners at one time: each step is 7 inches in height. The ordinary velocity of the wheels per minute is from 48 to 60. The proportion of prisoners to the total number thus employed is about two-thirds. There is no application of the power.

There are two apartments, containing each a crank. Each crank will employ three men at one time. The ordinary velocity of the cranks per minute varies from 40 to 50. The power is applied to grinding corn for the prison and for the County Lunatic Asylum. A certain quantity of corn is put into the mill to be ground within a certain time; if it is ground before the expiration of that time the prisoners derive the benefit. The mill grinds in 10 hours 15 imperial bushels of corn, which, divided among the 12 men who are employed (6 on and 6 as relays), will yield a bushel and a quarter of corn as the daily amount of labour performed by each prisoner who works at the crank.

The other employments are sawing and breaking stones, carpentering, painting, shoemaking, tailoring, &c., for the males, and washing, ironing, needlework, &c., for the females.

It is not productive, except for county purposes, as far as regards the hand-mill grinding corn for the prison and County Asylum, and the labour of shoemakers, &c., for the use of the prison.

Care of the Sick, Disease, Mortality.

The surgeon usually attends daily, and whenever he is sent for. He also inspects the general state of health every Sunday. He sees every prisoner on his first admission. There is a male infirmary, containing 3 rooms, and a female infirmary comprehending 2 large rooms, 2 good cells, and a yard. There have been 2 deaths during the last year, from Michaelmas 1834 to Michaelmas 1835; 6 cases of illness severe enough for the infirmary, and 159 slight cases; 165 in all out of 455 prisoners. The greatest number of prisoners unwell at the same time during the year was 6.

The surgeon of this gaol has been attached to it for nearly 30 years. During the late governor's time the prisoners were much more unhealthy, and there were considerably more deaths than there have been since. At that time there were only two day-rooms, one in the gaol and the other in the bridewell, where the prisoners on each side were congregated together. The sleeping-rooms, which were originally intended for one, were always occupied by either three or five. There was a reservoir in the middle of each court-yard for the whole of the filth and deposits of the prison, which was removed about every six weeks by hand. The effluvia from this produced typhus, diarrhœa, and dysentery, which carried off from six to eight yearly. The alterations that have been made by the present governor have entirely prevented (to use the surgeon's own words) a recurrence of these diseases—a circumstance which the surgeon attributes to the cleanliness, to the regular dietary, and to the daily removal of all filth from every part of the prison by drains and a regular supply of water. There has not been a single death from any infectious disorder since the appointment of the present governor, and those few deaths which have occurred have been from diseases with which the prisoners were affected on being committed.

I have purposely preserved the surgeon's own statement on this head. The following is a list of diseases in the gaol of Bodmin in the county of Cornwall, from Michaelmas 1834 to Michaelmas 1835.

|---|---|
| Psora or Itch (principally vagrants) | 29 |
| Venereal | 9 |
| Fever | 6 |
| Dyspepsia | 10 |
| Pneumonia | 53 |
| Asthma | 5 |
| Diarrhœa | 18 |
| Rheumatism | 5 |
| Scrofula | 14 |
| Abscess | 7 |
| Ulcers | 20 |
| Ophthalmia | 11 |
| Total | 187 |

There were many slight cases not entered, as they were able to follow their occupations.

The proportion of cases, slight and severe, which occurred in the course of the year, from Michaelmas 1833 to Michaelmas 1834, was 144 out of 738 prisoners admitted.

There is one insane prisoner at present here—a man aged 45, in custody one month, sent in for breach of peace and want of sureties. He was taken to sessions agreeably to commitment, and was directed by the court to be examined by two surgeons. They pronounced him insane.

The shoemaker of the prison, who acts also as a turnkey, superintends the infirmary, and prevents the patients from making any great noise and from bad conversation.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain comes daily at 9 o'clock in the morning; he reads prayers; generally visits the wards afterwards, and converses, reads, or prays with the prisoners. He always has an interview with every prisoner shortly after his admission. He performs divine service, and delivers a sermon, twice on Sundays. He keeps a journal, which includes observations upon the character of the prisoners. A schoolmaster, who is not a prisoner, instructs the prisoners in reading on Sundays. On the week days a prisoner sometimes gives lessons in reading. The establishment is extremely well provided with religious works, which are supplied by the county on the order of the chaplain. The only other office which the chaplain has to perform elsewhere is divine service in the afternoon every Sunday at the County Lunatic Asylum, after the completion of his duties at the gaol.

Salaries.

Keeper, £400, with coals and candles.

Chaplain, £200. This sum includes the duties performed at the County Lunatic Asylum of Cornwall, situated a quarter of a mile from the gaol.

Surgeon and Medicines, £80.

Matron, £18, coals and candles.

Schoolmaster, £4, for attendance on Sundays only; not a prisoner.

Four Male Turnkeys, £155. The head Turnkey receives £50 per annum; all the rest have £35 per annum. All reside in the prison, and may have their families with them. They are all allowed coals and candles.

Female Turnkeys, £18.

Male Taskmaster or Shoemaker, £35.

Miller, £35.

Porter, £35.

A watchman or patrol is ordered, and his salary is fixed at 14*s*. a week, but he is not yet chosen.

Among other suggestions which I have made I have recommended the disuse of the punishment called putting on the bars, which, however, was very seldom used, and was, I believe, not a particularly severe one. The arms were extended and the wrists handcuffed to the bars. It will be no longer practised here.

VIII. Statistics of Religion, Matrimony, Celibacy, and Education.

Extracted from the Registers of Bodmin Gaol and House of Correction this 18th July 1836:—

|---|---|
| Total in custody | 130 |
| Religion— | |
| Established Church | 118 |
| Methodists | 7 |
| Roman Catholics | 5 |
| Married | 63 |
| Single | 67 |
| Instruction— | |
| Read and write | 70 |
| Read only | 25 |
| Neither read nor write | 35 |

N.B. The 5 Roman Catholics are all foreigners; viz., 2 Frenchmen, 1 German, 1 Norwegian, and 1 Maltese.

Very few miners come here; at present there are only nine. The smugglers are the best conducted of all the prisoners. The smugglers once defended the turnkeys in a sort of riot, as has lately been the case also at Exeter. During eight years there have been five escapes, all successful; one was of a woman: she escaped through the roof, which was only a few feet above the floor. Four other prisoners have so far escaped as to reach the outside of the prison, but they were retaken.

IX. The Proportion of Cells to the Number and Description of Prisoners in the House of Correction and Gaol, on the 18th of July 1836:—

In the house of correction the number of sleeping-cells is, for the males 75, occupied by at present 61, of whom 3 are in the infirmary; for the females 30, occupied by at present 21. In addition to these are one female debtor in the old sheriff's ward, one male prisoner, under civil process, in the infirmary (put there as an unoccupied place), and one child.

In the gaol the following is the number of sleeping-cells in proportion to the inmates:— For debtors (male) 10 cells, occupied by 17; male cells, 55, occupied by 29. In regard to the female cells in the gaol, information will be found under the head of Construction. At the time stated there were only two female prisoners belonging to the gaol, and those two were transferred to the house of correction for the reason assigned.

FALMOUTH.

TOWN GAOL.

Construction.

Falmouth.
Town Gaol.

Management.

It is under the jurisdiction of the mayor and town-council. There is one keeper. The association of the prisoners is unrestricted. The meals are taken in the cells. There exist here no written nor printed rules on any subject of discipline, but some are promised soon by the town-clerk. The gaoler's wife waits upon the females, but she has never received any orders to do so from the magistrates, nor has she any salary. No debtors have been received here; they go to the county gaol at Bodmin. The whole establishment, in its present state, would form a good lock-up house, but is not adapted to the purposes of a gaol. Only one register is preserved in the prison, and that is a most meagre one.

Diet.

All (debtors included) receive from the workhouse 1lb. of bread daily; potatoes are sent on most days. Sometimes fish on Mondays; generally a stew on Tuesdays; generally pea-soup on Wednesdays; generally broth on Thursdays; generally liver-gravy on Fridays. There is always rice-milk on Saturdays, and always broth and potatoes on Sundays. All this comes from the kitchen of the workhouse. No food is admitted from without except by order of the mayor. The diet requires a more strict definition.

There is no store nor fixed allowance of clothing and of bedding. If any such articles are needed, the keeper sends to the workhouse for a supply.

Labour.

The prisoners are occasionally employed in picking oakum. They also clean their cells.

Religious and other Instruction.

There is no provision whatever on this head. A bible and a testament are now in the prison: they were both given by a Presbyterian minister.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The surgeon attached to the workhouse comes only when he is sent for. The surgeon is paid for the medicines which he sends into the prison. There were some cases of malignant cholera in the prison, but no death from that disease. From May 3, 1836, to July 14 of the same year, only one case of illness has occurred. There has been no death during the last eight months. No register exists in the prison as to the deaths or state of health at a previous period.

Salary.

In this ill-regulated prison even the keeper has no salary, but the town pays him 2*s*. 6*d*. per head for every prisoner who enters the gaol. This account has now not been settled for the last eight months. He receives besides coals and candles. He is serjeant-at-mace also, but receives no salary for that office. He is town-crier, for which he receives some fees occasionally from the public, and is also public bill-sticker, by which likewise he gains some occasional fees from the public. I have suggested in the proper quarter the propriety of adopting a better system in this and other respects, which will, I believe, take place.

Punishments.

There has been no whipping since the present gaoler (who is a new comer) has been here, nor for the last eight months.

Expenditure.

The prisoners sometimes are made by the magistrates to pay the prison fee of 2*s*. 6*d*. if they have any money. A mutinous crew is sometimes sent in a mass to this prison; in such cases the captain or his agent have paid the half-crown above alluded to, and have defrayed the maintenance of the prisoners; but this has been done as a favour, on the ground that it was hard that the town should be so encumbered.

Statistics of the Population.

The greatest number of prisoners who have been here at one time during the last eight months was four males and six females. From July Sessions 1834 to July Sessions 1835 the number of committals to this prison appears to have been 99. Since 2d November 1835, to 28th of June 1836, 63 males, 9 females. The total number of prisoners in the house at the date of this Report was two males, both committed for misdemeanors.

LAUNCESTON.

THE OLD COUNTY GAOL.

Launceston.
The Old County Gaol.

About five or six years ago the county gaol which existed here was abolished. It is now used as a house of detention for prisoners during the assizes, which are alternately held at this place and at Bodmin. When an execution is to take place, the sentence is carried into effect at Bodmin.

There are two yards, one for males and the other for females. The male ward contains seven cells, and the female ward includes three cells.

The late gaoler's widow is now the housekeeper. She receives £20 per annum, with coals and candles.

THE OLD TOWN GAOL AND DEBTORS' PRISON.

The Old Town Gaol and Debtors' Prison.

This prison, like the old county gaol, does not appear to be used at present, or very rarely, even as a lock-up house. It consists of a few rooms over the ancient gateway, at the southern entrance of the town. It is not detached from other buildings, nor has it a boundary wall. There are cells for debtors and cells for criminals, but there has been no debtor here for two years past, and other prisoners are sent to Bodmin. The whole is in a state of dilapidation, but might serve as a lock-up house, with a little improvement. There is no person resident on the spot; the serjeant-at-mace keeps the key.

It is unnecessary to enlarge upon this gaol, since, if I am to judge by the information communicated to me, and by the local appearances, its vocation no longer exists. It has no yard, nor are the cells well ventilated, and it is entirely unfit for the purposes of a gaol.

PENZANCE.

TOWN GAOL AND BRIDEWELL.

Penzance.
Town Gaol and Bridewell.

This prison adjoins the workhouse, and is entered through a court common to both; it is also placed under the management of the same keeper. It contains only two wards, one for men and one for women. The male ward contains four cells on the ground floor, and on the upper story one large day-room and two cells. In the female ward are four cells, including that which is called the black-hole. There is a yard to each ward. The privies in these yards should be covered over; at present they stand quite open, with no concealment, no shed. As the cells are so few in number, it sometimes happens that a male prisoner must be placed in the female ward, even at the same time that a female is in confinement; but when this happens the keeper locks him up in his cell. There is a tread-mill yard, with a small tread-wheel. There is no chapel, no infirmary, no bath; nor are there any rules for the discipline of the prison: but I have pointed out those and other defects to the authorities, and I believe that some of them will be soon corrected. Hitherto very little inspection appears to have been exercised, but the keeper appears to do the best that can be accomplished with his limited means. It is impossible to enforce silence, or to maintain any regular system at present, because the keeper lives in the workhouse, several yards from the prison, and is of course often engaged there. The tread-mill labour is not productive. Those who cannot go on the wheel are made to sit down and break stones. The prisoners also clean their cells. The punishments used here are the dark cell and a reduced diet. Three dozen lashes is the highest number inflicted in case of whipping.

The gaoler is master of the workhouse, which contains 17 men and 33 females at present. There is no turnkey, but one is greatly needed. Nor is there a matron; but the keeper's wife voluntarily performs that office; she has had no orders to that effect, and has no salary. The gaoler has £10 a-year for the gaol, and £30 per annum for the workhouse, with coals, candles, and provisions.

The keeper has a register and book of accounts. Although the prison is not very secure, there have been only two escapes during his residence: they were successful.

During the nine years that the keeper has resided here the greatest number of prisoners which he has known at one time has been 24. At present (July 16, 1836) there are 16 prisoners, 13 of whom are smugglers (almost all Frenchmen), one is a debtor, and one a female.

The number admitted during 1834 was 31, of whom five were females. During 1833 the number admitted was 33.

There is no chaplain, but the curate comes occasionally. The corporation has not given any religious books, but two or three have been presented by individuals.

The surgeon attached to the workhouse attends here, but receives no allowance beyond the £20 per annum from the workhouse. There has been one death only during nine years; that was of an insane prisoner. No epidemic cholera occurred here; nor can the keeper recollect distinctly any cases of severe sickness during his time. One prisoner, at present here for trial for an assault, is reputed insane.

There is ground adjoining the prison on which a new ward and yard, a chapel, and infirmary might be built. It is probable that the new town-council will soon place the establishment on a better footing.

The diet for the prison and workhouse is, for each person, 1lb. of bread a-day. On Sunday they have six ounces of beef boiled, free from bone, with as much vegetables as they like; they have also tea. On Monday broth made from the meat of the preceding day, with vegetables in it, and some extra bread. Tuesday they have potatoes stewed with pork. On Wednesday fish and potatoes are provided. Thursday bullock's liver and sheep's pluck, with pork fat, is made into a mess, with as much potatoes as they like. (The daily allowance of potatoes is 1½lb. for each person, but, as some of the old people do not eat their portion, there is consequently a surplus.) On Friday, in the winter, they have pea-soup; in the summer, either broth or stewed potatoes. On Saturday they have fish and potatoes. There is no rule fixed as to receiving food from without. Sometimes a magistrate forbids it, sometimes another permits it. The diet is in need of retrenchment, and more precise and simple arrangement.

Debtors and smugglers are allowed cider or ale, in a small quantity, not exceeding a quart, but usually they have only a pint.

The washing is done in the workhouse. All have an allowance of soap, and in the winter coals are also allowed.

The prison is on the whole in neat condition, but it requires whitewashing. It is well ventilated, and all the cells have a fire-place.

LOSTWITHIEL.

STANNARY PRISON.

Lostwithiel. Stannary Prison.

The deputy keeper was appointed in 1833, and has apartments in this ancient mansion free of expense.

The deputy keeper has no salary, no coals nor candles, and no perquisites.

In March 1833 three men were placed here on a charge respecting the dues of the Duchy of Cornwall. They were detained a fortnight.

There is a court-yard, and abundance of accommodation. Some of the cells are in a dilapidated state, and are not used. Those which were used on the occasion referred to are in a tolerable condition.

The prisoners who can support themselves provide their own diet; those who cannot receive sixpence a-day. There is no register kept here, and the present keeper has known no prisoners except the three above mentioned; any one, indeed, who was reluctant to stay would find no great difficulty in quitting the place, which has none of the characteristics of a prison. This prison is a portion of an old castle.

LOCK-UP HOUSE.

Prisoners are immediately taken to Bodmin gaol from hence; they only remain here a few hours in general.

During the last six or seven months only two persons have been confined here: one a deserter, for two or three days, the other for a shorter time.

This is under the town-hall. The constable keeps the key. He was absent when I called, but his son conducted me to the cells. The inner one is without any communication with the air, except through a grating in the door which divides it from the outer cell towards the street. This outer cell has a grating in the door, which serves as a window. A prisoner detained in either cell may easily communicate with persons in the street. Straw is scattered on the floor of both cells. There is no privy. The constable supplies the meals for those who are detained here.

The cells are dark and ill-ventilated; and it would be desirable to have a lock-up house more removed from the power of communicating with persons outside. Some kind of privy is an indispensable addition to the present building.

CITY GAOL.

Construction.

County of Somerset.

Bath. City Gaol.

This gaol is totally unfit for its destination, and especially so in proportion to the population of the city. The want of a new gaol is felt, in addition to other reasons, from the number of cases for trial which this prison cannot accommodate, and which, therefore, must be sent to Shepton Mallet.

There is no infirmary and no bath. There is no proper separation between the female and the male debtors; the female debtors must pass through the part appropriated to the male debtors, in order to arrive at their yard. The male debtors can communicate with the street on one side, and with the criminal yards on the other. There are many defects, into which it is the less necessary to enter, because the building itself will probably be hereafter diverted to some other purpose, and a prison more worthy of the city in which it stands will probably be constructed in a less public situation.

Management.

It is under the control of the mayor, bailiff, and gaol committee, selected from the town-council. The debtors are from the Court of Requests and from the Court of Record. The other prisoners usually placed here are for breaches of the peace, want of bail, fines, and those committed to Shepton Mallet, waiting to be forwarded thither. One prisoner has been here two years; the term of stay is usually from one week to three months. There are no untried prisoners here. The magistrates meet every day. Silence is not observed; singing is restrained. The prisoners take their meals in the day-rooms, and their association is almost unlimited in their respective yards and day-rooms. The females are exclusively attended by one of their own sex, except at locking-up and unlocking. Tobacco is allowed.

The court allows 10*s.* for conveying a single prisoner to Shepton Mallet, and 8*s.* per head, if there are more than one. The distance is about eighteen miles. The gaoler does not convey them himself; a particular individual is employed for the purpose. According to the statement of the gaoler, about 200 prisoners are sent annually to Shepton Mallet.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain attends once a-week on the Sunday. He keeps a journal of attendance.

He is curate of the abbey church of Bath. The prisoners are moderately well supplied with religious books by the town-council. It is almost unnecessary to mention that the prisoners receive no instruction in reading.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The greatest number of sick at one time, during the year, from April 7, 1835, to April 7, 1836, has been two. No death occurred during the year; and, indeed, during fourteen years, only two deaths appear to have happened here. There is no infirmary, but a cell, containing a fire-place, is sometimes used as a substitute. The prisoners seem to enjoy good health. A surgeon is attached, who keeps a journal. During the year, from June 1835 to June 1836, only two prisoners received an extra diet in consideration of illness.

Diet.

All the prisoners may receive food from without. One pound and a half of bread is the daily allowance. No other food is provided for the prisoners; no salt is allowed by the town, but the gaoler gives some to the poorer debtors: some of this last description suffer much. A benefaction is sometimes made from without. No clothing is allowed. The bedding provided for all consists of three blankets, a rug, and a mattress. Coals are supplied during the winter; the gaoler orders them when they are wanted, but fires are not kept up in the summer, except in the debtors' rooms.

Effect of Imprisonment here upon the neighbouring Population.

No dread appears to be entertained of entering this place, as may readily be conceived from the relaxed state of its discipline. A female begged the magistrates to send her hither for three months, in preference to the poor-house.

Labour.

There is no hard labour here. The prisoners all clean their own cells: sometimes they work at their own trade. Occasionally they whitewash the house, and are paid a small sum for so doing.

Letters.

No rule exists here respecting letters, except that the gaoler reads all that come in and go out, excepting the debtors'.

Punishments.

The dark cell for an hour or two is the ordinary infliction. No whipping takes place here, except that a child is sometimes whipped in the presence of his father.

One male turnkey is appointed by the gaoler, and is paid by him. The wife of the turnkey is fed by the keeper, and assists her husband. The keeper pays the turnkey 6*s.* a week, feeds him as well as his wife, and finds them lodging within the house.

Rules respecting Visits and Liquors.

By order of the mayor and justices of this city no person can be admitted to visit any prisoner (debtors excepted) unless by an order from the mayor or one of the justices, and admittance in such case to be limited to the regular visiting hours, which are from 8 till 9 o'clock in the morning, 12 till 1 and 2 till 4 in the afternoon, with the exception of the hours from 1 till 2 on Sunday, instead of 12 till 1.

Strong beer as well as spirits are forbidden to be taken into this gaol.

WALSALL.

Common Gaol.

This prison, up to the middle of the year 1836, was one of the least worthy in England to be called by that name. The new town-council are, however, fully sensible of its defects, and have occupied themselves in considering the means of remedying a state of things so discreditable to the community. In future there will probably either be no gaol at Walsall, or a new one will be built. It is situated under the town-hall, and is below the surface of the ground. It is entered through an inn, by passing through the house, or otherwise through the yard of the inn. As the gate of the inn is usually open, any passenger may walk into the yard and hold a conversation with the prisoners, which happened on my first visit. No keeper resided on the spot; and anything which might pass within would be out of reach of his knowledge, excepting at the time of his visits. The space occupied by the whole is extremely small; the cells are few, dark, damp, and ill-ventilated, unfit even to receive night charges. The gaoler is also inspector of the new police. As gaoler he receives a salary of £12. 10*s.* per annum; as inspector of police he obtains £75 yearly, and a suit of clothes. There is no matron; nor has any stipulation been made with him that his wife or any other female should act in that capacity.

There are two very contracted yards and two day-rooms. For the males there are four cells, and one or two cells for the females. There is no pump. The whole is in the worst order.

The greatest number of prisoners here at one time during the last year was 17.

On the 1st of January 1836 there was 1 prisoner
„ February „ „ 1
„ March „ „ 2
„ April „ „ 2

The last female prisoner was one in January of this year, who remained two days.

At the time of my first visit (April 1836) I found only one male prisoner.

The diet is a loaf of bread daily, weighing 1¾lb.

I found no books. A dissenting minister sometimes comes by leave of the magistrates. When medical aid is required a surgeon is sent for.

The keeper states that when he is absent a policeman is left in charge of the place, but such was not the case at the time of my first visit.

Salaries.

Keeper, £200. He receives coals and candles, but no other emolument whatever. When he conveys convicts, he is allowed 10*s.* per day for personal expenses: he used to receive a guinea, but the fares and coachmen are now paid by the city.

Chaplain, £75. He formerly received £100 annually.

Surgeon, £35; for which sum he also finds medicines. He formerly received £50 annually.

Matron, £20 (is the wife of the keeper).

Two turnkeys receive each £40.

Construction.

This new prison was opened in 1830. It is secure, not overlooked, dry, and moderately well ventilated. The only mode of heating yet practised is by coal fires in the day-rooms: there are also two cells containing fire-places. There are 85 or 86 cells, including debtors' rooms, but not including day-rooms: there are consequently sufficient accommodations for far more than the usual number of inmates. The greatest number of prisoners existing at one time during the last year was 82, but such a circumstance is rare: I have hence been induced to suggest the adoption of separate confinement in this prison, provided that some means are taken to warm the cells, and that proper regulations are framed. All the yards are paved, and each yard has a water-closet and supply of water. In every yard there is a wash-house, for washing the face and hands, cups, plates, &c.: this is a useful appendage to a prison-yard, if only one prisoner is suffered to enter at the same time. There are no dark cells, properly so called. Some of the debtors' cells look upon the felons' yard, and they can thus easily communicate together. This is a fault common, indeed, to most of the cells—that the inmate can look down upon the yards. The cells, in general, are sufficiently well lighted, and well enough ventilated; but some have an iron screen, which diminishes these two advantages, and particularly the former one.

The number of day-rooms is 9; of cells, 86,—of which are set apart 16 for male debtors and 2 for female debtors.

Since 1830 there have never been more than 82 prisoners at one time, but never as many prisoners as cells.

Management.

There are a few printed rules, but new and better and more copious ones are very necessary. Members of the town-council meet to visit the prison on the first Tuesday in every month. Silence is observed in some degree. Wardsmen are chosen from among the prisoners. The use of tobacco is still allowed, but I believe that my representation to the magistrates on that head will soon check that indulgence. All the prisoners associate in their respective yards and day-rooms. No separate confinement has as yet been attempted here. An inconvenience results from the scanty accommodation for women. Of the five women now in the prison, four are sleeping two in one bed; one of these four women is subject to epileptic fits. The practice is most improper. All the men are sleeping separately. The debtors here, as often elsewhere, are found troublesome. One turnkey sleeps in the prison alternately. Both the turnkeys are married: they attend upon the female prisoners, as well as does the matron; but this part of their function should be immediately separated, and transferred solely to the matron. The women sometimes perform a little household work for the keeper, but he has a private servant. There is a fire-place in every day-room, and coals are allowed for the day-rooms throughout the whole year. The prisoners keep the coals themselves. There has been no alarm from fire in the prison during the last nineteen years.

This prison is, in most respects, superior to the generality of borough prisons: it is neat and clean, and generally well maintained.

Diet.

No wine nor spirits are permitted to enter for the use of any prisoner. For the prisoners who are at hard labour 2 lbs. of bread is daily allowed. I have recommended an improvement of this diet. The untried and the debtors receive 1½lb. of bread daily. Warm water they can readily obtain. All may receive food from without, and a majority of the whole number are thus supplied. The surgeon may order meat and extraordinary articles when he thinks proper. In my opinion this diet requires some addition, as of vegetables and gruel. The prisoners who received no contributions from without made heavy complaints to me. One young woman has been receiving for several weeks a quarter of a pound of meat daily, by order of the surgeon, on account of her suffering in health: two men have also lately received an increase of diet on the same account by the direction of the same officer.

Bedding.

There is no fixed scale of bedding, but it is provided for all, including the debtors.

Clothing.

If a prisoner is destitute a dress is furnished, consisting of trousers, shirts, stockings, shoes. A few articles of dress are sometimes allowed to the women. They have combs and towels, and a barber comes on regular days. Soap and salt are allowed to the prisoners.

Accounts.

There are a magistrate's, chaplain's, surgeon's book, gaoler's book for felonies and misdemeanors, and another gaoler's debtors'-book. There are no tradesmen's books.

Suicide.

During nineteen years only one instance of suicide has occurred here; this was in the year 1834.

Punishments.

During the last year three individuals have been whipped for offences committed within the prison, and one has been placed in solitary confinement. About twenty-four is the ordinary number of lashes, and the surgeon is always present.

Letters and Visits.

All letters are read first by the governor: no other permission is necessary. All friends are admitted from 9 till 10, 12 to 1, and from 3 to 4 in winter, and from 4 to 5 in summer. This permission is not in writing, it is only old custom. This freedom extends to all prisoners after they are fully committed. The visit lasts a few minutes—turnkey is present.

Statistics of the Population.

The number of prisoners confined in the course of the last year was 280. The greatest number of prisoners at one time in the prison amounted to 58. The number of prisoners at Michaelmas 1835 was 50. The number of prisoners at Michaelmas 1836 was 33; of these 33, 3 were male debtors, 9 were male misdemeanants, 17 were male felons, and 4 were female felons. Of the 30 misdemeanants and felons 23 have been tried, and 7 are untried. Of all the 33, 30 are above 17 years of age, and 3 are below 17 years of age.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The surgeon comes every other day, and whenever he is sent for. During the year, from June 27, 1835, to June 27, 1836, he visited 178 times, had occasion to order no extra allowances, and numbered only one death among the prisoners: the deceased was a debtor. There is no insane prisoner in confinement. There is a room with a fire-place for the sick males, and a female debtors' room (also containing a fire-place) is occasionally used as an apartment for a sick female prisoner. I have recommended that this female debtors' room should be set apart and fitted up as a permanent infirmary for the female prisoners. There is another room appropriated for the female debtors, capable of accommodating three beds, and also having a fire-place.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain reads prayers every day, twice on a Sunday, and on that day delivers a sermon. He converses with the prisoners frequently. He keeps a separate journal, and has no other professional avocations. No provision is made for instructing the prisoners in reading, but there is a supply of religious works. If the debtors do not go to chapel their allowance of bread is stopped.

Labour.

There is a tread-mill here, which holds six or eight; only six conveniently at once. It has no compartments: only a wardsman is present at the work. A turnkey ought to be constantly in attendance; the presence of a wardsman is a most feeble check. The hours of labour are from 7 till 9 morning, 10 till 11 ditto, 1 to 4 afternoon. The wardsman receives half a pound of meat daily, and has no labour. Beans and oats are ground by the tread-mill; the profits are £5 or £6 annually. The other modes of labour are raising water, whitewashing, and washing the clothes. One prisoner, sentenced to hard labour, cleans each yard.

REPORT.

The county-rate committee have agreed upon the following Report, which they submit to the council for consideration and approval, at the quarterly meeting holden on the 11th day of October next.

Treasurers.—The late treasurers delivered in their book of accounts, and the balance of £8. 10*s.* 7*d.*, due from them to the county, was paid over to the present treasurer; the charge therein of £15 for half a year's salary requires comment, that it may not become a precedent of paying for nothing done.

Remarks.—It is the opinion of your committee that, as the treasurer's account was kept by them in the shape and form of a banker's common pass-book (as between themselves, being bankers, and their customers), the salary of £30 a-year for such services was not only extravagantly high, but altogether unnecessary.

Your committee recommend that the accounts of the present treasurer be kept under separate heads of charge, with a quarterly balance-sheet attached to the same, showing the sum total of the several receipts and payments, and that a salary of £10 per annum be paid to him as treasurer.

Chaplain.—The diary of the chaplain sets forth that divine service is performed twice on a Sunday, and one sermon preached; that prayers are read to the prisoners daily—salary, £75.

Remarks.—It appears to your committee that the salary allowed to the chaplain bears no proportion with the salaries paid by the rectors and vicars of small parishes to their curates; nor do your committee see any reasonable cause for paying chaplains of small gaols a greater salary than they would receive as curates of small parishes. The personal labour of visiting the sick, and administering spiritual comfort to the inmates of a gaol, must be much less fatiguing and hazardous than in a parish: the former is under one roof, the inmates together, ventilation strictly attended to, medical aid constantly at hand, whilst in parishes the sick are scattered, their habitations frequently in a state of wretchedness, and disease and want oftentimes associated therein.

Your committee do therefore recommend that the salary of the chaplain of the gaol and bridewell be £50 a-year.

Surgeon.—The diary of the surgeon shows that he visits the sick when necessary and the prisoners occasionally; his salary, including medicines, £35 per annum.

Remarks.—Your committee have made inquiries what salary is usually given to the professsion for their attendance on rural parochial sick and finding them with medicines; it appears not to exceed 2*s.* per head per annum, and that the most eminent in the profession are satisfied with the remuneration.

Your committee also made inquiry what was the charge made by the Self-supporting Dispensary for attendance and medicine for the workmen engaged in public works or benefit clubs, including accidents; the average rate does not exceed 3*s.* per head per annum.

Your committee cannot therefore recommend that a larger salary than £15 per annum should be paid to the surgeon of the gaol and bridewell for his attendance and medicines to the prisoners.

Gaoler.—The diary of the gaoler shows the present number of prisoners to be 37; the average of the last three months, 40. The food of the prisoners is bread only; 2 lbs. a-day for those ordered to labour, and 1½ lb. for those who do not labour, except when the surgeon thinks it necessary to order other food.

The friends of the prisoners have the privilege to bring food to them, and this custom is pretty generally acted upon, but not abused.

Bread.—The contract for bread is with Mr. * * *, to the 15th of December, at 5½*d.* the 4lb. loaf.

Coal.—The contract for coal is with Mr. * * *, to the 15th of December, at 12*s.* per ton for Baddesley coals delivered at the gaol.

Gaoler's Salary.—The gaoler's salary is £200 per annum, with coals and candles, and the house free from rent, rates, and taxes.

Remarks.—Your committee consider the salary might be reduced to £120 per annum, and still have the same services, the same kindness to the prisoners, and the same securities for the efficient performance of the duties as they find to be the case at the present time, and they recommend the reduction accordingly.

Matron.—The matron attends the female prisoners; her salary is £20 per annum.

Turnkeys.—The turnkeys are two, their joint salary £80 per annum, and coals and candles.

Remarks.—Your committee are of opinion that one turnkey (an able-bodied person) would enable the gaoler to enforce the necessary discipline of the gaol, and to compel the prisoners to a due observance of the regulations; and, in case anything refractory should occur amongst them, the gaoler can call to his assistance any part or the whole of the police, which would effectually subdue any disturbance.

Your committee therefore recommend that one turnkey be employed, and his salary be £50 per annum.

High Constable.—The high constable is an efficient officer, with a thorough knowledge of his duties, and firm and moderate in the execution of them; his salary is £60 per annum.

Your committee have examined the following bills, amounting to £323. 16*s.* 11½*d.*, and recommend they should be paid.

Your committee beg to state that the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury have paid their proportionate share of the costs of prosecutions at assizes and sessions, and the whole expense of the conveyance of transports to the county of Warwick, but they have not paid those for Coventry, amounting to about £100.

Your committee advise that a direct application be made to their Lordships under seal.

Your committee recommend that a rate should be made of 1*d.* in the pound to meet the expenses of the current quarter, viz., the redemption of £400 of the gaol debt, the payment of salaries, prosecutions, incidental expenses, and the interest then becoming due on the gaol debt.

Your committee beg to remind you that the accommodation afforded to the public applying for justice at St. Mary's Hall is insufficient; and your committee suggest that, whatever alterations you may deem it necessary to make to remove the present inconvenience, the same should be perfected before the winter sets in.

Your committee beg to call your attention to the provisions of an Act passed in the last Session of Parliament, viz., the 6th and 7th Will. IV. c. 105, wherein is set forth "That county justices may contract with the council of any borough in which there is a sufficient gaol for the committal of county prisoners to such borough gaol; and where there is a separate court of quarter-sessions in the borough, the offenders committed from the county parishes may be tried at the said sessions."

Your committee recommend that, as the gaol and house of correction in Coventry has sufficient room to receive forty more prisoners than are at present confined therein, you do propose to the Warwickshire magistrates to make a contract with them for the reception of any number of county prisoners not exceeding forty, and that your charge for the safe custody and maintenance of each prisoner be 1*s.* for each night kept in custody.

Coventry, 20th September 1836.

It appears to me that the removal of one of the two turnkeys, which is recommended in this Report, would produce the worst possible effects on the discipline and good order of the gaol: I trust that it will not take place. The above Report of the County-rate Committee, made in September last, was subsequently confirmed by the council, except with regard to the surgeon's salary, wherein they resolved no abatement ought to be made. At present nothing further has been done (14th Janury 1837). If confinement in separate cells is to be practised here, or if each prisoner is to sleep in a separate cell, then it will be highly inexpedient to enter into contract for so many as 40 county prisoners; 20 should in such case be the utmost number.

Debtors' Gaol (for the Liberty of Gower).

Swansea. Debtors' Gaol.

This is a part of the old castle. It belongs to the Duke of Beaufort, whose steward appoints the keeper. He receives £10 per annum from the steward, and is anxious to correct an impression that he receives £15, as is stated in the Municipal Report. He has apartments free from rent and taxes; but he receives no coals nor candles, and his emoluments are certainly too small, if it is supposed necessary that a gaoler shall be a person of intelligence, of good character, and of decent manners.

On the 29th July 1836 I found only one debtor, a female, who had been confined here during six weeks. She made no complaints, excepting of her own poverty. She had made application for some relief, having no allowance made to her.

There are four cells, with a yard of not unsuitable dimensions. There is a pump, but it was out of order, and a privy. The cells are generally large and lofty; each one has a fire-place; but they are not clean nor well maintained. An individual who left about two years ago remained here 12½ years. The prisoners find their own bedding and clothing, and even their own bedsteads; nor is any other allowance of any kind made to them. Their friends may visit them three times a-day. There has been no escape during 18 years. The keeper's own apartments are in bad repair.

Lock-up Cells.

In the old castle, and adjoining the debtors' gaol, are two cells, one of which is used for men and one for women. These are both in a dirty state, and even the straw was filthy. A sort of privy was in each, i. e., a board with a hole, but no front to it. In the station-house of the new police is a better cell for night charges, into which they usually put the younger offenders and girls. But a new police station-house is (I believe) about to be built, in which there will be some new cells; and it will be far more convenient if all the lock-up cells are attached to the station-house, so as to be immediately adjoining and under the care of the new police.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION FOR THE COUNTY OF GLAMORGAN.

Construction.

House of Correction for the County of Glamorgan.

This prison is not highly finished; it was built by contract, and cost about £7000. In front of the windows are bars of cast iron, which are not very strong; and the wooden railings in front of the yards are quite unsuited to a house of correction. A chevaux-de-frise on the walls of the yards, and on the outer wall, would be a useful addition.

| Infirmaries or rooms for the sick (1 male—1 female) | 2 |
| Warm and cold baths, or bathing-tubs (bathing-tubs) | 2 |
| Airing-yards | 8 |

There are five fire-places in five day-rooms, and one in each of the two infirmaries, one in the wash-house, and one in the kitchen.

The windows are clumsily constructed; many have not been opened nor shut for some weeks; and, in fact, the whole building requires survey and repair. It is not very dry, nor very well ventilated, nor is it secure. There is no provision for heating the cells in winter. A receiving-room is wanted, and I have suggested a situation in which it might be conveniently placed.

Management.

Prisoners are sent hither or to Cardiff, according as the next assizes are to be held at one place or at the other. The prisoners from the town of Swansea are placed here as well as the county ones. The prison is clean; but, considered as a county prison, it is defective in several respects, and the only remedy is to be found in a more suitable expenditure. I have recommended, among other things, that tobacco be forbidden, and silence enjoined.

The classification of the prisoners is attended to. They are secured in separate cells at night, but there is ample opportunity for communication by day. The three meals are taken at the hours of nine, one, and six o'clock, in the different day-rooms. There is too much laxity as to visits and letters. A magistrate's order must be obtained previous to the admission of visitors, and all letters are received without restriction, subject only to examination. The female prisoners are exclusively attended by the matron.

There is a bad custom here of taking the prisoners out into the neighbourhood, sometimes a quarter, or even half a mile off, to collect rain water for washing. Another turnkey is necessary here, and more particularly if silence should be enjoined.

No debtors are here, but there are untried prisoners, although it is called only a house of correction.

During the whole of the year 1836 there has been not more than one prisoner in a cell. There have always been more cells than prisoners during this year.

No one has slept two in a bed since the time of the crowd which came from Merthyr Tydvil a few years ago.

Cells—30 regular sleeping ones; 16 day-cells (of the same size, and, in fact, might be used as sleeping cells).

Fire—During seven years the gaoler has been here (it has only been built seven) there has been no alarm of fire.

Suicides—There has been no attempt at suicide during the same period.

Escapes—One was not re-taken; two others escaped, one of whom, a female, returned, the other was re-taken.

The dark cell is the usual punishment. When whipping is ordered, three dozen lashes are usually inflicted. The instrument is a small cat-o'-nine-tails. The surgeon is always present during the infliction. There has been twice only used here, I believe, a mode of punishment for very desperate characters, which I have recommended to be disused,—the culprit is fastened to an iron post by handcuffs.

The following is the rule respecting visits:—

"No person shall be allowed to visit the prison, except between the hours of 9 and 11 in the morning, and 1 and 3 in the afternoon, unless in cases of particular necessity. No stranger shall on Sundays, or during Divine service on any other day, be admitted within the walls of the prison, excepting on occasions of great urgency; but no such visiter, or any other person, except justices of the peace and officers of the prison, shall be permitted to go within the wards of the prison without a written order from a justice of the peace for the county; and no person shall be allowed to hold converse with any prisoner except in the presence of the governor or turnkey."

Labour.

There is one tread-mill, divided into two parts; one hitherto used for males, one for females: a wall separates the wheel into two parts. The women ought not to be put on.

The tread-mill is employed during every month of the year. The number of working hours in the day is ten in summer and six in winter. The tread-mill will hold at one time ten prisoners, five on each division; the height of each step is eight inches; the ordinary velocity of the wheel is forty-eight steps in a minute. The ordinary proportion of prisoners to the total number employed at the tread-mill is half on and half off. The tread-mill power is not applied to any purpose.

The other labour consists in washing, cooking, whitewashing, mending, cleansing the yards. None of the labour is productive.

The untried are employed sometimes in cleaning and whitewashing the prison. Labour is usually regarded by all parties as a heavy punishment

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain performs Divine service on Sundays once (in English); prayers on Wednesdays and Fridays. He occasionally visits, when a prisoner requests to see him, or in case of illness, or when confined in a dark cell. Religious books are supplied very scantily here. The chaplain fills also the office of lecturer of St. John's in the town.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

For the visits of the surgeon there are no regular days; he usually calls three times a-week.

There are two large rooms set aside and used as infirmaries—one for the male and another for the female prisoners.

The following have been the principal cases of disease which have occurred in the last year:—Asthma, 1; gonorrhœa, 1; colds, 2; boil, 1; ulcer on thigh, 1; constipation, 2; diarrhœa, 1; ulcer on leg, 1; epilepsy, 1; syphilis, 1; porrigo, 1. The malignant cholera occurred in a severe form in six cases, but no one died of it in the prison.

During the year which has elapsed, from Michaelmas 1834 to Michaelmas 1835, there has been no death in the prison. There have been altogether 39 cases of slight indisposition; but no one has been removed into the infirmary on account of the severity of his case. The greatest number of individuals unwell at the same time has been 6. Thus we have 39 cases of slight indisposition out of 131 prisoners admitted; in the greater part of these 39 cases, indeed, only Epsom salts or aperient pills were deemed necessary to be prescribed.

There is no lunatic in confinement here at present.

On comparing the above statement with the Return annually transmitted to the Secretary of State, I find a variation with respect to the article of death; in the Return alluded to, one death is reported to have occurred in the prison between Michaelmas 1834 and Michaelmas 1835.

Registration and Accounts.

Food-book; diary; governor's account-book; Michaelmas return-book; receiving-book; and the journals of the magistrates, chaplain, surgeon, and governor.

Diet.

For the untried there is a permission to buy certain articles thus conferred. A proper person, appointed by the visiting justices, goes round the prison twice a-week, and writes opposite the name of each such prisoner the articles he may wish to purchase. This list is submitted to the governor, who puts his pen through such as he may deem improper, and afterwards orders the other articles of tradesmen nominated by the visiting justices, and of no other person on any account whatever. The prisoners receive them at cost price, and may satisfy themselves of the weight and quantity by means of the scales and measures, to which they are ordered at all times to have access.

One pound and a half of bread made of second flour, one pound of potatoes, and a quarter of a pound of oatmeal are daily allowed, and four ounces of salt weekly; care is to be taken by the governor that such food be of the proper quality and weight. Prisoners at hard labour have a pint of soup each in addition to the above.

Scales and legal weights and measures are ordered to be provided for the use of the prison, and to be kept in proper order, and to be open to the use of the prisoners at all reasonable times.

No prisoner who is confined under the sentence of any court, nor any prisoners confined in pursuance of any conviction before a justice, can receive any food, clothing, or necessaries, other than the county allowance, except under special circumstances, to be judged of by one or more of the visiting justices.

No spirituous liquors or beer of any kind are admitted for the use of any of the prisoners, under any pretence whatever, unless by a written order of the surgeon, specifying the quantity, and for whose use.

The bedding consists of two blankets and a rug, with an additional blanket in winter. The untried are clothed, if destitute, but in a plain dress.

Salaries.

LLANGOLLEN.

LOCK-UP HOUSE.

Llangollen.
Lock-up House.

The last keeper was appointed in August 1835, and died in October 1836. His salary was £6 a-year; but he happened also to be in the receipt of a pension, having formerly served in the Coldstream Guards; he enjoyed no other perquisite, except rooms for himself and his family. He was constable of Llangollen, and for the hundred of Chirk. If any disturbance took place, he was the person sent for to settle matters. It was his business to take prisoners before the magistrates, and also to conduct them, when necessary, to the county gaol at Ruthin; a task which he performed on foot, and for which he received a small remuneration. During the period of the late keeper's residence, no prisoner stopped here more than one night. If a prisoner wanted any food, it was usually procured for him with his own money; but, if destitute, the keeper and his wife have sometimes given a little food from their own store. During the late keeper's short term there were never two prisoners here at once. The total number of prisoners admitted here, during the last twelve months, appears to have been about 20.

This house stands by itself; and, compared with the generality of lock-up houses, is neat, secure, and solid: it was built about three years ago. It contains two cells for the use of prisoners, and a small yard. The bedding provided for the prisoners consisted of a straw mattress, four blankets, and two rugs. There is only one privy for the use of the prisoners and the keeper's family. The keeper's bed-room appears to be damp: a spring runs beneath it, which opens in front of the house, and is used by the keeper and by the neighbours. The magistrates and the vestry hold their meetings here in a separate apartment with a private entrance. If I am to believe the statement of the keeper's widow, she and her husband, on the occasion of such meetings, have furnished the coals from their own stock, and have been obliged to borrow the necessary chairs from their neighbours.

RUTHIN.

COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Construction.

Many of the cells are too dark for the purpose of working in them. A few of the larger cells have fire-places. There are no special dark cells provided for the men, but two are used which are a little darker than the rest. There are good baths, and good windows throughout. This prison stands on the outskirts of the town, by the road-side; but it does not communicate with the street, except by some of the windows of the male debtors, whom I have advised to be removed from the front.

| | Male. | Female. |
|---|---|---|
| Cells where one prisoner sleeps only | 12 | 2 |
| Cells where more than one prisoner sleeps | 3 | 4 |
| Prisoners the prison is capable of containing in all cases | 60 | 15 |
| Refractory cells for the women | 2 | |
| Apartments below ground | 0 | |
| Wards or divisions in the prison | 4 | |
| Day-rooms | 8 | |
| Work-rooms | 1 | |
| Tread-wheel houses, or divisions upon the tread-wheels | 0 | |
| Receiving-rooms or cells | 0 | |

| Infirmaries or rooms for the sick—(Male) | 2 | |
| Ditto ditto (Female) | 0 | |
| Warm and cold baths or bathing-tubs | 4 | |
| Airing-yards | 8 | |

The cells for females are eight. The day-rooms for females are four; and there are only four women now in the prison.

There is no infirmary for sick females, nor any public kitchen, but the female wards have ample room for these and other alterations. There are at present three entrances to the prison; one at one extremity for the matron and females, another central one, and a third one at the other extremity. It would probably conduce to good discipline, as well as to the mystery which ought to surround a gaol, and which is destroyed by facility of entrance, that the central entrance alone should remain, and that the two others should be dispensed with, or at least one of them.

Diet.

This is at present arranged on a most faulty plan, and I have recommended its alteration, and the adoption of a fixed diet instead.

Each prisoner receives 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, which they lay out with a shopkeeper who comes to the prison.

The clothing is a shirt, jacket, trousers, and clogs.

The bedding is a straw bed, two or three blankets, and a rug.

Soap is allowed; about 12lbs. is used quarterly. Combs and a towel are also supplied in each ward, and a razor is given to each ward every Saturday.

Management.

Some of the male prisoners sleep two in one bed; the number of cells for the male prisoners is not sufficient in general to provide a separate cell for each. In the female part, on the contrary, there is abundance of room, and some apartments of which no use is made. The male debtors have ample accommodation also. On one of my visits I found 20 male prisoners, who were placed in 14 cells. The want of a lock-up house for the town of Ruthin is a source of disturbance here, because disorderly night charges are brought at all hours of the night to the gaol, which is already too small for its own male prisoners. I have recommended that silence should be enjoined, and that another turnkey should be engaged, in order to strengthen the general discipline of the prison; that tobacco should be prohibited, and letters and visits properly restricted; and some other improvements, on which it does not appear necessary to enter here at length. Crime appears to be on the increase in this neighbourhood, and the discipline of this gaol has also been in a very relaxed state, insomuch so, that people would sometimes commit an offence in winter, in order to obtain comfortable quarters here. On my first visit I had recommended the disuse of tobacco, and restrictions on letters and visits. These suggestions were immediately adopted, and the gaoler assured me, on my second visit, that this strictness had already done some good, and was regarded in the neighbourhood as a great privation, in short, a heavy drawback on the former agreeableness of the gaol. The whole prison is commendably clean.

The keeper has been here nearly two years, during which time there has been one escape—a female. She was not retaken. There have been, during eight years, two escapes altogether. The first, a man, was retaken. There has been no alarm of fire during the last eight years; nor during the same time more than one attempt at suicide; and this one was unsuccessful.

Offences and Punishments.

The chief offences are refractory conduct and refusing to work on the tread-mill, for which they receive solitary confinement.

In whipping, the number of lashes is said (perhaps erroneously) to depend on the discretion of the surgeon, in whose presence the flogging is inflicted; a whip similar to that made use of in the army is employed.

Labour.

There are three tread-wheels here. The power of the tread-mill is applied to pump water for the use of the prison. It is used during the whole year—during the summer eight hours daily, and during the winter six hours. The wheels will hold 16 prisoners at one time. The height of each step is six inches. The ordinary velocity of the wheels per minute is twice round. The average number of prisoners daily employed on the wheels is nine. Two of the three wheels are in daily operation; sometimes all the three are employed. The number of feet in ascent per day is stated to be 72,000. The daily revolutions of the wheels are estimated at 840. The amount of labour is recorded by machinery invented by the turnkey, which rings a bell every ten minutes, and marks the time. The tread-wheel, which goes round twice every minute, moves two teeth of the rack-wheel, until it has gone round, at which time it raises the handle of the bell, which rings. A change then takes place; at the same time a crank from the handle of the bell moves the wheel every ten minutes, which is shown upon the face of the timekeeper by the finger; the time-keeper goes round every four hours. The wheel and the springs are inside of the face of the timekeeper.

The cost of the apparatus is about £4; and I purposely mention the name of the maker: it was invented by Abel Roberts, turnkey, Ruthin gaol.

A change must take place every ten minutes, by which one prisoner steps off the wheel, and another, having had rest, steps on.

The gaoler or turnkey must regulate the valve by the number of prisoners at work, and not allow more than two prisoners of each wheel to rest at one time.

Religious and other Instruction.

Divine service is performed every Sunday, a portion in English and another in Welsh, with a sermon in English or Welsh. Other occasional duties are performed as they are incidentally required. There is no instruction in reading, excepting only occasional voluntary efforts on the part of the keeper. Religious books are well supplied. The chaplain keeps a journal. He is rector of the parish of Efenechtyd, about a mile and a half distant from the precincts of the prison. He comes to the prison sometimes on week-days, but not often. He generally delivers the Sacrament once or twice a-year: when he last officiated no prisoner attended, but only the officers of the prison. He is allowed to purchase whatever tracts he may deem suitable for the use of the prisoners from the depository of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

Although, with respect to the language in which Divine service is performed, the above is the ordinary routine, yet the chaplain regulates the language, delivering it either in Welsh or English, according to the fatherland of the prisoners who happen to be in confinement.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The surgeon visits three times a-week, or more frequently. He (or his partner) comes whenever he is sent for. There has been no epidemic fever here for 20 years. Sometimes a low fever case has occurred. Itch is not frequent. Catarrhs and venereal complaints are common.

There are two sick rooms for the men, extremely well arranged as an infirmary; but no sick room at present specially set apart for the women; one adjoining the male infirmary, originally intended for females, appears not to have been used for that purpose.

During the last five years there has been only one death. There are no particular diseases frequent here. There has been no death during the last year. The proportion of sick to the total number of prisoners admitted during the last year has been about one-fifth. The average duration of each case is represented by the surgeon as ranging about a month.

The total number of prisoners whose cases were sufficiently severe to require removal into the infirmary amounted to only three during the year from August 6th, 1835, to August 6th, 1836. The cases of slight indisposition during that period were forty-five. The greatest number of persons sick at one time was two. There is no insane person in confinement.

It will be observed that there is, on the whole, a progressive increase, and this increase is, I believe, not only in the number but in the gravity of offences. It is affirmed, however, that the strangers now at the gaol are, to the Welsh, as two to one, in proportion.

WREXHAM.

Borough Gaol and Lock-up House.

This is a small building; it contains four cells only and one day-room for male prisoners, and one cell only for the women. The womens' cell (or room) serves both for a sleeping apartment and for a day-room: it contains two double beds and a fireplace. The beds also in the male ward are some of them formed to hold two persons. There is a small yard and a privy for the male ward, and also for the females another small yard and privy. There are no rules here, neither printed nor in manuscript. The following list will explain the population during the year 1835.

| July | 2 | 0 |
| Total | 36 | 4 |

The greatest number of prisoners here at one time during the year 1835 was at Whitsuntide, when so many as 14 were here together. But this was owing to a fight; it is a very unusual event. The greatest number of prisoners here at one time during the year 1832 was nine. When I visited it in August 1836, there was no prisoner of either sex. Debtors are not received here; they go to Ruthin. No prisoner remained longer than two weeks during the year 1835.

The salary of the keeper is £12; but he is also superintendent of police, for which office he receives £1 per week. He has no perquisites as gaoler except the apartments. There is no matron and no turnkey. The keeper is allowed 2*s.* 6*d.* per head for the diet of each prisoner per week. He distributes to each a portion of this sum daily, until the whole half-crown is exhausted. They may buy what they please, and may also receive food from their friends without.

The keeper is also allowed by the county 2*s.* 6*d.* a-quarter for straw, and 3*s.* a-quarter for washing the blankets, and also 2*s.* a-quarter for mops and brooms. There is no allowance of soap, nor is there any stock of clothing. I found a few old blankets. The keeper conveys the prisoners to Ruthin gaol, and receives £1. 1*s.* for taking each prisoner. In his absence his wife has charge of the house, and he finds a man to sleep in the prison during that period. During 19 years there has been only one escape; the fugitive fell into a neighbouring coal-pit, and died there. During the same period there has been one suicide—a prisoner hung himself with his blanket. No other death save this has happened here for 19 years. There is no chapel, nor chaplain, nor surgeon, nor infirmary. I saw no books. Considered as a lock-up house for a detention of two or three days, this place is suitable enough, but it is quite unfit for a prison, and has a neglected aspect.

DOLGELLEY.

COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION FOR MERIONETHSHIRE.

Dolgelley. County Gaol and House of Correction for Merionethshire.

Construction.

This gaol stands particularly well, on a very elevated situation, apart from the high road, to which the ascent is steep and tiresome, so that few persons will be tempted to seek it as an agreeable lounge. There are no buildings near it: it is not at all overlooked; few prisons in short have been so judiciously placed, but on this feature alone can any approbation be bestowed. A great deal of room is lost throughout the gaol; there are large passages which might be converted into cells; and there are also some cells which appear never to have been used, or which are not used at present, as two solitary cells, for instance, and two cells belonging to the yard in which the stones are broken. The privy in the male criminals' yard has no door to it. The great want throughout is of separate cells: there are several rooms which may be converted into such by a little arrangement and strengthening. There are three cells for the debtors, three cells for male prisoners, and two cells for female prisoners. Of the three day-rooms, one belongs to the debtors, one to the females, and one to the male prisoners, consequently the untried and the convicted are mixed together. There are four yards for exercise. There is no infirmary, no proper bath, no dark cell, nor any pump, but there is a trough to collect water from the hills. The chapel has five divisions. The boundary wall is very favourable for escape, but I do not find that escapes are frequent. It would not be difficult to increase the number of cells; the day-room for the females might form one or two new cells, and still enough space would be left for a small day-room, if it were thought necessary to continue that appendage.

Management.

The keeper is the only resident officer. If a good system is ever introduced here, it must be by the assistance of a permanent turnkey. In one male prisoner's cell I found one double bed, in which two prisoners sleep. No rule as yet exists as to the female prisoners being attended exclusively by one of their own sex; it is true that the gaoler's wife does perform that office, but voluntarily, without appointment, without salary. The untried and the convicted associate freely with each other, all together, in the day-room and yard. Silence is not yet introduced. Four prisoners sometimes sleep in one cell, but not often. The prisoners eat together in the day-room. As to visits and letters there is no rule, except that visits can only be made by leave from a visiting magistrate. Debtors may receive their friends without any rule by day-time. There is no regular turnkey; but when the prisoners are numerous an assistant is allowed. During six years there has been one escape, but the prisoner was retaken in two or three days. Within the above period there has been no instance of suicide, and no alarm from fire. Three fires are usually kept up in the day-rooms during the winter, and the prisoners then cook their own food. In summer the gaoler boils for them, and supplies warm water.

Diet.

I have recommended that the present allowance of money should be exchanged for a regular fixed diet, to be prepared in the prison. As it is, 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly is allotted to all prisoners, including debtors, if destitute. They buy whatever they please, but not more than a pint of beer daily may be bought by felons, nor more than a quart by debtors. No spirits may be purchased; tobacco, however, may be bought: all may receive food from their friends without.

The clothing is a great coat, waistcoat, trousers, clogs when necessary, nothing else. No soap nor salt are allowed; the county supplies no towels, but the gaoler furnishes some. Some wash for themselves; others have their things washed by their friends.

Labour.

If any women happen to be confined here they are compelled to knit and to make bonnets. There are no fixed hours for labour. The hard labour consists in breaking stones; there is no other occupation for the men except cleaning the premises, and doing trifling jobs for the prison. The prisoners perform no work for the gaoler himself, according to his own statement. The labour is not productive; instead of profit, a loss is incurred by it to the county. It is not profitable, because it costs 7*d.* to cut the stones from the rock, and 2*d.* for wheeling them to the prison per load, and when broken the stones only sell at 6*d.* per load: 10*d.* per load is paid to the prisoners for their labour, so that 1*s.* 1*d.* is lost per load.

Recommittals and Effects of Imprisonment.

Recommitments are rare, and the imprisonment is said to be formidable; strangers are frequently admitted, but the prisoners are all Welsh at present. Three out of the six inmates are not, however, natives of Merionethshire. The discipline is relaxed, and yet, in relation to the simple habits of the neighbouring peasantry, and to the remoteness of the situation, it may operate as a greater preventive than might at first sight be anticipated.

Religious and other Instruction.

A curtain should be put up in front of the females in the chapel. Divine service and a sermon are delivered once every Sunday, usually in Welsh, except when some Englishmen are here. No other service is performed in the week. The chaplain never comes in the week to visit or instruct; the chaplain's curate comes instead of him on the alternate Sundays. The chaplain is rector of the parish. A journal-book is provided, but I find it apparently blank since the year 1829, as far as regards the portion allotted to the chaplain. Religious books are supplied.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The surgeon only comes when he is sent for. When he has occasion to order extra provision for a prisoner, the order must be sanctioned by one or two visiting magistrates before it can be carried into effect. The disorders are chiefly rheumatic cases and itch: venereal cases are rare here, and scarcely any fever occurs. No death has happened since 1813, when the prison was first inhabited. The surgeon, in 1835, paid about 17 visits. From the commencement of 1836 up to September 8th he had not had occasion to come above six or seven times. The gaoler sometimes goes to the surgeon to fetch a medicine in trifling cases of indisposition.

Prison Offences and Punishment.

The prisoners committed here usually behave very well. Quarreling, sometimes stealing from each other, sometimes bad language, are the chief offences. Whipping has only been inflicted once in six years—20 lashes was the number. The instrument is not now in the house. The surgeon and under-sheriff were present. According to the statement of the gaoler, he makes use of no punishment more severe than reproof.

Inspection.

The visits of magistrates appear to be rare. I find only one entry from the beginning of this year (1836) to this 8th of September 1836.

In 1835 two visits are entered.

In 1834 six visits are entered; but they come also sometimes without entering their name, and the inmates are often very few.

Registration and Accounts.

1. A book, which serves as journal for magistrates, chaplain, and surgeon.
2. Gaoler's weekly journal.
3. Gaoler's private journal, for his own use.
4. Register of commitments.

Statistics of the Population.

I.

The number of prisoners committed for trial in this county is happily most scanty. At the last summer assizes, held at Dolgelley, there were only two prisoners for trial; and at the last spring assizes, held at Bala, there were only five prisoners for trial. There has been no execution here since the year 1813, when two men were hung. The total commitments to this prison during the year 1835 were 19, of which one only was a female. There were, besides this woman, nine debtors, two misdemeanors, one bastardy case, one case of horse-stealing, one of administering unlawful medicine, and four more cases of felony.

From the 1st January 1836 to 8th September, only 14 have been committed, of whom one was a woman.

II. Number of prisoners confined at the date of this Report, Sept. 7, 1836, was six, among whom there was no female.

Conveyance of Convicts to Woolwich.

When there is only one convict sentenced to transportation the gaoler takes him unattended, but when there is more than one he is accompanied by an assistant. He receives £12 for conveying one convict, £26 for three, and £4 for the assistant, when it is necessary to have one. While the gaoler is absent from Dolgelley on this business a constable, or some other person, remains in the prison. The gaoler's father always lives in the prison.

General Suggestions.

I have recommended a few alterations which would tend to raise this gaol a little nearer to the standard of a county prison; among them I may notice briefly the following:—

The boundary wall to be raised in some parts, and revolving chevaux-de-frise to be fixed on it.

A matron to be appointed and regulated.

Separate beds for all.

The separate cells not now used to be prepared for the reception of prisoners.

A sick room for males and for females.

A bath, instead of a trough, in the open yard

A dark cell for refractory prisoners of both sexes.

A turnkey to be added to the establishment.

Silence to be enjoined.

Tobacco to be forbidden.

Visits and letters to be regulated accurately.

A regular diet, instead of the 2*s.* 6*d.* per week now allowed.

An allowance of soap.

CORWEN.

THE BRIDEWELL.

Corwen. The Bridewell.

The bridewell, as it is called, is a small house, inhabited by the keeper, who is a shoemaker, his family, and the very few prisoners who are usually to be found here. The keeper receives only £10 per annum, but, acting also as the constable of Corwen, he sometimes gains a trifle in that capacity. A load of coals is now and then sent in by the county for the use of prisoners, if there happen to be any. The county allows 2*s.* 6*d.* for the weekly maintenance of each prisoner; but, as the profit of their labour goes to the county, they are often able to raise the requisite sum by their own toil; if not, the county supplies the deficiency. The keeper dresses their dinner, and provides warm water for them. In September 1836 I found two male prisoners here. One had been confined four weeks, and the other so long as fifteen weeks; one was a bastardy case, the other was a poacher. During the whole time which they had passed here together they had slept in one bed, in a small cell. Their labour consists in breaking stones, which they perform in a small yard at the back of the house. There are four cells appropriated to the use of the prisoners, two on the ground floor and two above. The greatest number of prisoners that the present keeper has ever had under his charge at the same time has been four; and the longest period during which he has detained any prisoner has been about 18 months; in 1834 one was kept here three months. In the year 1835 there was no prisoner at all. From the 1st of January 1836 to the 9th of September of the same year three prisoners have been admitted. During 16 years one prisoner escaped, and was not retaken; but all other attempts have been unsuccessful. During the above term of years the keeper has known no attempt to commit suicide.

The keeper makes a singular statement, to the effect that convicted prisoners have formerly been sent hither from Dolgelley, because there were at that time no means of finding labour for them at the county gaol of Dolgelley.

The cost of bringing 12 loads of stones to the prison, for the purpose of being broken, is 6*s.*; 1*s.* a-week is allowed to the keeper for assisting the stones in and out, and this shilling is only paid to him when the labour is actually in operation. The Inspector of Roads gives 1*s.* 6*d.* for a square yard of the stones when broken.

The prisoners are locked up at eight o'clock, both in winter and summer. In winter they are allowed to sit occasionally, after it is dark, in a front room, which looks upon the road.

The county finds no clothes, except such as are used to work in. At present there is only bedding enough in the house for one prisoner; and this is offered as an explanation of the fact which I have stated above of the two prisoners sleeping together. More bedding is said to be ordered, and the keeper has engaged not to suffer the same practice to occur again. The bedding is washed by the keeper's daughter, at the expense of the family. No soap is allowed for any purpose; nor is there any compensation nor provision made for pots, pans, or brushes.

There is ample room for criticism here, but the state of crime is so different in North Wales from that which exists in other parts of England, and the habits of the lower orders so different, that it would be unfair to apply the same standard to all. The prisoners who are placed here ought only to be such as are confined previously to commitment, and those remanded for further examination; it certainly ought not to serve as a house of correction, and, indeed, is only an indifferent lock-up house, placed under the care of a shoemaker, without rules, or the means of enforcing them; and conducted altogether with excessive parsimony and neglect of all fitness.

House of Correction and Lock-up House.

BALA.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION AND LOCK-UP HOUSE.

THIS ought to be nothing more than a lock-up house, although it is sometimes used as a bridewell. It is a small building, forming a part of the Guildhall; and every feature betrays parsimony and neglect, but not on the part of the keeper. It is insecure, out of repair, and slovenly; it has no pump; there are no rules, neither printed nor manuscript.

The salary of the gaoler is £10 a-year: he is allowed two loads of coals a-year; he lives on the spot, and has been here three years. There are no prisoners at present.

From 6th December 1834 to March 1836, inclusive, fourteen prisoners have been admitted in all; of them, only one was a woman.

The greatest number of prisoners who have been here together at one time, during the three last years, has been only four at the time of the assizes.

The prisoner who made the longest stay remained ten weeks; another passed two months here; sometimes a fortnight is the length of stay, sometimes two or three days. Serious charges are only kept here two or three days, and are then sent to the county gaol at Dolgelley.

An allowance of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week is made by the county to each prisoner: they spend this as they please, but not in beer; tobacco may be purchased. Those who break stones must support themselves by their own labour.

The gaoler is a constable, and must go into the town if his presence is demanded; in which case his wife alone remains in charge of the prison.

The bedding allowed is a mattress and two blankets. No clothes are allowed, except two shirts—no shifts. Only one prisoner has escaped during the last three years.

No soap nor salt are allowed. The gaoler's wife washes for the prison, and receives no remuneration, finding even her own soap; the gaoler also supplies salt to the prisoners from his own store. All the cooking and boiling of water is also performed by the gaoler's wife in her own kitchen, providing herself with pots and pans and cups. The gaoler conveys prisoners to Dolgelley unattended: he often walks thither with them. It would be difficult to find a prison maintained at a smaller cost than this, or with less attention to what is usually deemed essential. On the ground floor is the gaoler's kitchen; behind it is a very small yard, 4 yards long, 3½ wide, in which stones are broken by the prisoners sentenced to hard labour. When broken, they are brought out into the street through the gaoler's kitchen. There are two privies in this yard. There are two cells on the ground floor; and above is a room with two double beds, in which men sometimes sleep two together. There is a separate cell for disorderly night charges. If a female comes, she is put into a cell on the first floor, looking down upon the yard. It is scarcely necessary to state that there is no chapel, no chaplain, no surgeon; nor are there any books provided by the county.

This gaol was opened about four years ago. The whole expense of the building is said to have amounted to £13,000. It is solid, stands well, and is moderately dry; there is no boundary wall; and a public path runs in front of the gaol, which it would be very desirable, if possible, to remove to a greater distance. Things are not thrown over to the prisoners, as is the case in some other gaols similarly circumstanced; but this is owing to the scanty population and simple habits of the neighbourhood. The yards are not paved; there is a good supply of water, and a privy in each. The gaol is in general well ventilated, and it is not overlooked in any part, as there are no adjoining houses. The privies are moderately clean. There is no laundry, no prison kitchen. The day-rooms are glazed, but not the cells; the cells have shutters to put up at night. The females are not well arranged here: there is only one yard and one privy for all the women, whether debtors, untried, or convicted prisoners. The chapel requires some easy alterations: the women can be seen by the men, and a curtain ought to be placed in front of their division of the chapel; the preacher and gaoler might be advantageously raised on a higher floor in order to see what is going on around.

Management.

Silence is not as yet enforced here; and the intercourse in the different yards is unlimited during the day-time; at night the greater part of the prisoners are locked up in separate cells. The prisoners take their meals in their respective day-rooms. At present all the men are sleeping in separate cells, but I found four women sleeping in one cell on a large guard-room bedstead; two of the women were sleeping under one covering, and two under separate coverings. The reason assigned for such a mixture of the four in one room was that the women asked for it; and, indeed, the same answer is not unfrequently given in gaols where the discipline is rather relaxed; but I have earnestly recommended the magistrates not in future to allow any two to sleep together, and to place all of both sexes, at night, in separate cells, as far as possible. The prisoners do not work in the keeper's garden and ground. The magistrates have made new rules, but they have not yet carried them into effect, as they have not been sent back from the Home Office.

The conduct of the prisoners appears to be generally good. Prison offences are very rare; and, when they do occur, are punished by solitary confinement, which is considered by the prisoners themselves as the most severe punishment. Only two acts of disobedience, however, are represented to have happened here in the course of two years. There has been no whipping inflicted here for three years and a half, nor is there any instrument for whipping at present in the gaol. No fees are demanded from prisoners.

There has been no alarm from fire since the prison was built.

Labour.

There are two tread-mills; there is no other labour, except washing and cleaning yards, and repairing blankets and sheets. Each prisoner washes for himself or herself. A quarter of a pound of soap is allowed to the untried weekly; half a quarter to the convicted.

|---|---|
| Not employed | 42 |

The number of working hours per day is six. The wheels will hold at one time eight prisoners. The height of each step is 7½ inches, and the ordinary velocity of the wheels per minute is seven revolutions. The number of feet in ascent performed daily is 37,800. The wheels make 2520 revolutions daily. The power is applied to raise water.

County of Montgomery.

Montgomery. County Gaol and House of Correction.

It must be remarked that, although six hours per day have been the ordinary rate of labour, two hours have lately been deducted from the six, in consequence of an apprehension that the present reduced scale of diet would render the prisoners too weak to undergo the longer period of toil.

Labour is here regarded generally as a punishment.

Diet.

The diet was very recently furnished by an allowance in money: that is happily now abandoned, and the prisoners receive daily 1½lb. of bread—no salt, and nothing else whatever. I have recommended that this diet should be increased by the daily addition of vegetables and gruel.

The debtors may receive three pints of ale daily, if they can afford to buy it.

The prisoner receives for clothing a cap, jacket, trousers, a shirt, if he has none, socks when they have none, and wooden clogs; but there is no fixed scale of clothing, nor of bedding.

Conveyance of Prisoners to Welshpool.

The assizes are always held at Welshpool, and the gaoler accompanies the prisoners thither. They are carried in an omnibus made for the purpose, and the bill is paid to the person who finds the horses. The prisoners usually return the same day. The gaoler is allowed nothing at present for his own expenses. The quarter-sessions are held at Montgomery.

Religious and other Instruction.

The chaplain reads the second lesson in Welsh, but all the rest in English. He performs full service once every Sunday, visits the prison occasionally, and converses with the prisoners, in their day-room. He keeps a journal, but not a character-book.

There is a good supply of books. The chaplain suggests to the magistrates when there is a necessity for more books.

He is curate to the parish of Cherbury.

The chaplain has been never asked to administer the sacrament by any prisoner, although he has often exhorted the prisoners to attend it. There is no provision made for instructing the prisoners to read.

Care of the Sick, Disease and Mortality,

The surgeon attends once a-week, according to the rules of the prison; he has been attached to the establishment during 14 years, and keeps a journal. The poor debtors are visited by him gratuitously. He has only twice during the whole term received any remuneration from a debtor. There is an infirmary appropriated for the male prisoners, but it is not fitted up as such: and this measure ought to be adopted without delay, although it may be true that such an apartment is seldom demanded in this prison. For the females there is at present no infirmary whatever; this deficiency may be easily remedied. The principal disorders are constipation, influenza sometimes, bowel complaints, itch, and venereal diseases. There was no malignant cholera here, notwithstanding that some cases appeared in the town. No death occurred here during the year 1835, nor has any taken place from the 1st of January till the 1st of October 1836. No epidemic disorder, with the exception of an occasional influenza, has been seen here during 14 years. The number of sick amounted in the year 1834 to 48; in the year 1835 the number was only 33; and from the 1st of January to the 1st of October 1836 there have been 27 on the sick list. There is no insane prisoner at present in confinement. There was one insane prisoner here about 16 years ago; but it is believed that there has been no more than one insane person confined here during the space of 18 years. From Michaelmas 1835 to Michaelmas 1836 the number of sick is reported by the keeper as 37, and the greatest number of prisoners sick at one time as five. He also reports one death to have happened during the same period, which does not accord with the previous account which I obtained from the surgeon. Admitting, however, that one death may have occurred in the gaol during twelve months, amongst 124 prisoners, the circumstance detracts nothing from the favourable state of health in this gaol. According to the return from Michaelmas 1834 to Michaelmas 1835, the greatest number sick at one time was two, and one death occurred, out of 119 prisoners admitted.

Salaries.

Keeper £100. He enjoys no perquisites whatever, and this sum includes the remuneration for the matron, who is his wife. The matron states that she does not understand that she receives any salary, and this is a point which it would be better to define explicitly. The gaoler has lost the advantage of conveying convicts sentenced to transportation, which he formerly possessed, and which he considered to form a portion of his income.

Chaplain £40.

Surgeon £21. He finds medicines, and attends midwifery cases, if any such occur in the prison, for this sum.

One male turnkey £31. 10*s*. He receives no perquisite whatever.

Registration and Accounts.

I found here no printed book of accounts of any kind. There are magistrates', surgeon's, and chaplain's books, a book of criminals, of debtors, and a check-book for the diet.

A printed register, divided into columns, should be immediately procured, and regularly filled up by the keeper.

The recommitments are at present very few. At the time of my visit, out of 25 prisoners then confined here, only one had been committed before.

WELSHPOOL.

Welshpool.

Up to the present time (October 7, 1836) a lock-up house has existed here, consisting of two cells, adjoining the Record Office, on the ground floor, and with doors opening to the street. They are lighted and ventilated indifferently by an aperture protected by a grating, admitting of conversation with passengers, and even of the introduction of some articles through the gratings. In each cell is a wooden bedstead with straw and a rug. No keeper resided on the spot.

County of Montgomery.

Welshpool.

Recently four new cells have been built under the Assize Hall, and these are henceforth to be appropriated to the double purpose of a lock-up house for the town, and as a temporary residence for the prisoners brought from Montgomery county gaol to be tried at the county assizes, which are always held at Welshpool.

By an arrangement made with a neighbouring proprietor, the old lock-up house is to be made over to him, and he is to give in exchange a house adjoining the Assize Hall and the new cells; and in this house it is intended that the police serjeant shall reside. This will be an advantage, because the police serjeant will have the charge of these cells, as he formerly had of the old lock-up house. He supplies the prisoners with necessaries, and sends in his account to the magistrates. Prisoners have only usually remained in the old lock-up house a few hours, or at most a few days.

The new cells have a very small yard, in which is a privy. There is no pump in the yard, but there is one in the court of the adjoining house, which is to be the residence of the police serjeant. The cells are protected from the neighbouring houses by a double wall. At present they are not very well lighted, and not well ventilated, and, indeed, felt damp at the wet season at which I visited them. But they have only been finished six months, and a member of the town-council, who accompanied me, assured me that at other times he has found them dry. There are iron bedsteads ready, but at present no bedding, which is, however, shortly expected. A small corridor divides two cells on one side from two on the other. Women, if any come here, are to be placed on one side of this passage, and the men on the other. I recommended immediate measures to be adopted for drying the cells, and that they should come into actual use as soon as bedding arrived.

FLINT.

County Gaol and House of Correction for the County of Flint.

Construction.

Flint.
County Gaol and House of Correction for the County of Flint.

This prison is secure, dry, and well ventilated. The single cells are sufficiently large for separate confinement, provided that a proper quantity of out-door exercise is allowed, and suitable rules adopted. The female debtors, having no separate accommodation, are placed in the same ward with the male debtors, and have no separate yard nor privy. The day-rooms might easily be converted into separate cells.

| Apartments below ground | 0 |
| The number of cells appropriated for debtors is | 5 |

| For female prisoners | 2 |

There is a fire-place in each day-room, and one also in every debtor's room. Water is well supplied in every yard, and the privies are neat. A revolving chevaux-de-frise, placed all around, would be an expensive, but not a useless addition.

Management.

The day-rooms still continue in use here, but silence is enforced in a moderate degree. A few improvements may readily be accomplished; one is to set aside two rooms for the sick, one for males, and the other for females; another is to supply an additional privy in a yard in which there is at present none, so that the prisoners must be conducted out of their own yard to the next one for this purpose. The custom of suffering prisoners to work in the garden, and to carry stones outside, appears to me a mischievous one—it is true that a turnkey is present. I state my objection on this head reluctantly, because the chaplain, who is a most judicious and zealous functionary, sees strong reasons in favour of the practice. There has been no attempt at suicide known here during the twelve years that the chaplain has officiated. There has been no escape during the four years of the keeper's residence; one prisoner escaped in the last 12 years, but he was retaken. During four years there has been no alarm from fire. For every ward 100 lbs. of coals are provided weekly in the autumn, and 150 lbs. weekly in the winter. A most satisfactory diminution of the number of inmates has taken place, in consequence of increased strictness as to diet and discipline; this is conspicuous as to recommitments. The usual offences committed within the walls of the prison are swearing, and violations of silence, but offences are said to be rare, and are punished by solitary cells. The female prisoners are exclusively attended by the matron. Convicted prisoners are not permitted to receive visits nor letters from their friends during the first six months of their imprisonment, unless under peculiar and pressing circumstances. This recommendation of the Lords' Committee has been adopted with the best effects. The whole prison is neat. There has been no whipping here for four years.

Diet.

One pound and a half of bread is allowed daily to each prisoner; one pound and a half of potatoes enters also into the daily allowance, and the prisoners receive a quart of gruel morning and evening, obtained from three ounces of oatmeal. Salt is distributed without limit. If the debtor is destitute, he receives the value of the above scale of food in money. The untried are permitted to receive food from their friends without, but no ale nor spirits may enter, except only two pints of beer daily for a debtor. Comb, towel, and soap are allowed. Clothing consists for the men of a cap, jacket, trousers, clogs, a shirt changed once a-week, and stockings changed once a-week, or more frequently. The clothing for the women comprises shift, gown, stockings, and clogs. The bedding is composed of two blankets, a rug, and straw. The Chaplain thinks that the health of the prisoners has been better since the adoption of the present scale of diet.

Labour.

Breaking stones forms the more severe description of labour; the other employments are washing for the women, mending shoes and clothes, and the general cleaning of the prison. The hours allotted for labour are six daily in winter and nine in summer. The profits received from labour in the last year amounted to between £10 and £15, the whole of which sum went to the county.

Religious and other Instruction.

There is one service performed on Sunday, and one sermon is delivered: the service is rarely in the Welsh language, usually in English. Service is also performed on Wednesdays and Fridays. The Chaplain also attends on other days as occasion may require. When he comes to the gaol he takes an opportunity of conferring privately with the prisoners. He keeps no journal of the character of the prisoners, but a separate book is preserved to register his own attendance. There is no instruction in reading provided for the prisoners, but they are very well supplied with religious books. The debtors do not attend the chapel with regularity.

Recommendations for Pardon.

One prisoner was so recommended in the year 1832, on the ground of good conduct.

Care of the Sick, Disease, and Mortality.

The number of cases of illness during the year 1835 was twenty-two. They consisted principally of stomach complaints and cutaneous eruptions, of scrofula, venereal disease, opthalmia, gout, coughs, constipated bowels, and ulcerated leg. The above forms a fair annual average of the number of sick. The surgeon has attended the gaol above twenty-four years, and during that period no malignant or epidemic disease has prevailed in it, only occasionally a solitary case of mild fever. There have been only five deaths during his entire attendance, one from small-pox, three in worn-out subjects from stomach disease, ulcerated bladder, enlarged prostate, and hydrothorax, and one woman in child-bed.

Salaries.

Borough Gaol, or Lock-up House.

Although formerly used as a borough gaol, this small building appears destined in future to serve a more appropriate purpose, that of a lock-up house, under the control of the county magistrates. Prisoners were formerly detained here so long as eleven weeks, five weeks, or a month. It is not secure. The keeper receives the humble salary of 8*s*. weekly. He has been here about six years. His wife is not called matron, nor paid as such. He has no allowance of coals nor candles; in the winter, when a prisoner happens to be here, 1*s*. a-week is given for coals.

There are two yards; each yard contains two cells, and each yard has also a privy. The gaoler's apartment is in the centre. There is no pump. For the diet of each prisoner 4*d*. a-day is allowed. The gaoler buys what they desire. The allowance was formerly 5*d*. daily. No soap is provided for the prisoners; nor are any brushes nor mops furnished. For the washing of the bedding 8*s*. is annually given to the gaoler's wife. One prisoner was here on the day of my visit. During the year 1834, 24 prisoners were admitted here from the county, and 14 from the town. During the first seven months of the year 1836 no prisoner was admitted here; only some disorderly night charges occurred. There are two registers, one for the town, the other for the county. There are two sets of bedding. There is no chaplain nor surgeon, and no chapel. There has been no death for six years; three escapes have been made during that time.

SECOND REPORT on the PRISONS OF SCOTLAND.

MY LORD, London, 25th February, 1837.

Tour.

I LEFT London on my last tour of inspection on the 1st July, and returned about a fortnight ago, having passed nearly seven months in Scotland. After a short stay at Edinburgh I proceeded to Dundee; and, travelling along the coast to Inverness, I visited all the Prisons within a range of 20 or 30 miles from the sea; a tract which comprises nearly all the Burghs and Prisons in the north-eastern division of Scotland. Several of these Prisons I had previously inspected; but this second visit was of great use in enabling me to introduce improvements, and to ascertain how far some suggestions which I had made on my first visit had been acted upon, and how the changes had worked. I shall presently speak more fully of these matters; and I am sure your Lordship will be gratified to learn that much has already been effected in ameliorating the condition of the Scottish Prisons and improving their discipline; little as it may be in comparison with what remains to be done. From Inverness I proceeded direct to Shetland, as the season was becoming rather advanced, and, after examining the Prison of these islands, and inquiring into the state of crime, &c., I returned by the first conveyance to Orkney, and from thence to Wick; and there beginning with Caithness, and taking each county in turn (with the exception of Argyleshire) as I went southward, I examined all the Prisons north of the line between Edinburgh and Glasgow; excepting only the small ones of Grantown in Inverness-shire, Crief in Perthshire, and Falkirk and Linlithgow in Linlithgowshire. I have subsequently inspected the Edinburgh Prisons, revisited the chief Prisons at Glasgow, and examined the minor ones, and inspected the Prisons of Renfrew, Paisley, Ayr, Dumfries, Haddington, Dunbar, and Jedburgh.

District visited.

I have now, therefore, examined most of the Prisons of Scotland; including all the largest, and indeed all of the second class with the exception of the Prisons of Lanark and Hamilton. The district, too, which I have explored, includes the greater part of the country; comprising the whole of the northern and eastern divisions, part of the western, most of the central, and part of the southern; and it contains the bulk of the population.

Previous views confirmed.

The general result of this second examination has been a confirmation (in my own mind) of the views contained in my last Report. Some modifications have certainly suggested themselves, but they are slight; and do not so much regard the general plan which I took the liberty of submitting as the mode of carrying one or two parts of that plan into operation.

Existing evils

The chief existing evils in the Scottish Prisons, as enumerated in my last Report, are, want of the means of separating prisoner from prisoner and of preventing intercourse from without; want of employment, and of a provision for teaching the prisoners a trade or other occupation, by which to earn an honest livelihood when restored to society; want of mental, moral, and religious instruction; insecurity; the luxurious diet and life of ease in some Prisons when compared with the food and labour of the lowest class of honest and industrious people; great expense of many of the Prisons; incompetency of many of the keepers; want of female officers; want of the means of inspection; want of cleanliness and ventilation; sloth and injury to health induced by the long time the prisoners pass in bed; and want of a uniform system.

Bad results.

Among the evils arising from this state of things are, first, that in the great majority of the Gaols the prisoner, instead of being reformed, or at least improved, becomes worse; and, second, imprisonment on the present system is but slightly deterring in its effects on the criminal population generally: for the present evils in the Prisons are most of them of a moral rather than a physical kind; and are therefore little formidable in the eyes of the depraved; whilst the food—the grand object of interest to a prisoner—is generally better than that of many honest people out of Prison; to say nothing of the freedom from labour—a great luxury generally to criminals. In the accounts of the Prisons I have lately visited, your Lordship will find much additional evidence of the existence and extent of the foregoing evils.

SCOTLAND.

Remedial measures proposed.

The following is an enumeration of the remedial measures proposed in my last Report:—A uniform system to be adopted; a few Penitentiaries to be provided for the use of the country at large; prisoners to be kept separate; female prisoners to be placed under the immediate charge of female officers; all prisoners to be required to work, and to be instructed as far as possible in such kinds of labour as will enable them to earn an honest livelihood on quitting Prison; an increased provision to be made for the mental, moral, and religious education of prisoners; a general Asylum to be provided for the reception of juvenile offenders on their release from Prison; a Lunatic Asylum to be provided for all the lunatic prisoners in Scotland; the royal burghs to be relieved of their peculiar burdens and liabilities, and all classes to contribute alike towards the expense of Prisons and prisoners; the management of all the Prisons in Scotland to be placed under one directing authority to be appointed by Government; and the cost of the Prisons and prisoners to be defrayed out of one general fund, to be put under the same control.

Number and general Condition of the Prisons of Scotland at the present time.

Lock-up Houses.

Generally in state.

Bedding.

Few clean and neat.

Best.

Worst.

Counting Prisons of every kind, there are at present about 170 in Scotland. Of these about 70 are mere Lock-up Houses, consisting for the most part of only one small room each, frequently forming a separate building, and in very few instances in the charge of a resident Keeper. Some of them are dark, close, damp, cold, and insecure; and most have one or more of these faults; few having a glazed window, and many no fire-place or other means of warmth. In almost all, too, communication can be kept up with people on the outside; and spirituous liquors, knives, files, &c. obtained. The bedding generally consists of loose straw only, usually contained in a crib, but sometimes lying in a heap on the ground. It should, however, be remarked, that the most frequent occupants (though not the sole ones) of these Lock-up Houses are drunkards and vagrants, who would many of them have to pass the night in the open air, or at best in a wretched gipsy-tent, if they were not placed here. Most of the Lock-up Houses I have seen were in a slovenly state, but some few were neat and clean. Among the best that I have examined are those of Kintore, Old Meldrum, and Turriff, in Aberdeenshire, and Dunkeld in Perthshire; though (as will be seen by referring to the separate Reports) the claim to praise even of these is of the slenderest kind. The worst I have visited are to be found at Huntly in Aberdeenshire, Macduff in Banffshire, Fochabers in Elginshire, and Cupar-Angus in Forfarshire. There are many Lock-up Houses in the south, however, which I have not examined; some of which have probably a claim to be inserted in one of these lists.

Small Burgh Gaols.

Bad, but better than the Lock-up Houses.

Number of rooms.

The next class of Prisons are the small Burgh Gaols, of which there are about 80. These, as a class, are considerably better than the Lock-up Houses, but they are generally quite as unfit for their purposes—considering that the prisoners have to remain longer in them—as the Lock-up Houses are for theirs. The Burgh Gaols (many of which are used for County prisoners also) generally form part of the Town-house, which is usually an old building standing on one side of the main street or of the market-place. The rooms used as a Prison are frequently on the ground-floor; and, when not so, are generally on the second floor, or partly on one and partly on the other; the Town-hall and Council-room usually occupying the intermediate or first floor. The number of rooms varies generally from two to five or six; though in some cases, as at Fortrose in Ross-shire, and Anstruther in Fife, there is only one room: in such cases, however, I was assured that males and females are never confined together; for that if a female were brought while there was a male prisoner, the Magistrates would either refuse to receive her or would hire a room for her at an inn; and that in point of fact the sexes are never mixed.

Average number of prisoners.

Dryness, &c.

The average number of prisoners in the small Burgh Prisons is not more than two or three, but there are occasionally many more; and even when there are as few prisoners as there are rooms, the usual practice is to put them together; males being kept apart from females, and criminals generally from debtors. This arrangement is adopted partly to save fuel, and partly because the advantages of separation have not been considered. When the accommodation is very small debtors are sometimes allowed the use of the Town-hall or Council-room, when not otherwise tenanted. Such is the arrangement, for example, at Dysart and Earlsferry, in Fife. As respects dryness, ventilation, temperature, and cleanliness, there is every variety; though certainly the general standard is low. In several Prisons dark and damp rooms, which were formerly used, have now been shut up or turned to some other purpose, some being converted into lumber-rooms, others into cellars. Still there are many places, such as the Prison at Fortrose in Ross-shire, and the existing Prisons in Shetland and Orkney (which, however, will soon be abandoned) containing cells entirely unfit for the reception of a human being.

SCOTLAND.

Few of these Prisons have airing-yards, and few are properly furnished with privies. A common arrangement is to have stools or buckets in the rooms, which are generally emptied once a day, sometimes twice: but in one prison at least—that of Haddington—this is done only once in two days; there being in that town no place but a corner of the public street in which to deposit the filth. Few of these Prisons have a resident Keeper: many of them, too, are insecure, and numerous instances of escape will be found recorded; but, considering the wretched state of several of them, it is doubtful whether their insecurity ought to be looked upon as a fault. The best that I have seen in this class of Prisons—if, indeed, they can properly be placed among them—are those of Kirkaldy (in Fife) and Calton (part of Glasgow). It is difficult to select from the bad, their number being so great: among them, however, would stand the Prisons at the following places: several Burghs in Fife; Brechin and Forfar, in Forfarshire; Queensferry, in Linlithgowshire; Kilsyth, in Stirlingshire; Banff and Elgin; Tain and Fortrose, in Ross-shire; and the present Prisons in Orkney and Zetland. There are several bad small Burgh Prisons also in the south of Scotland, and two or three on the western side (including the islands) which I have not yet visited.

Few airing-yards or privies.

Few resident Keepers.

Insecurity.

Best.

Worst.

The next class of Prisons, proceeding in the order of size, contains twelve; namely, those of Ayr, Cupar-Fife, Dumbarton, Dumfries, Greenock, Hamilton, Inverness, Lanark, Perth, Stirling, and Wick, and the old Prison at Dundee, which, though soon to be abandoned, is still in use. The Prison at Ayr is a tolerably good one, especially since the recent improvements; and, I believe, those of Hamilton and Lanark, the only two I have not examined, are tolerably good also. Little, however, can be said for the others: that of Wick is the best; and those of Dundee, Inverness, and Stirling, the worst; and very bad they are. The prison of Inverness is, with the exception of that of Tain, more oppressively close than any place I ever was in. It would be a waste of money to attempt to make any considerable improvement in the three last, or, indeed, in those of Greenock and Cupar-Fife. That of Dumfries, however, may, I think, at a small cost, be made to serve, at least for a time; and those of Dumbarton and Perth might probably be made tolerably good, at a moderate expense, if they should be required. I found some of these Prisons in a dirty and disorderly state. Full accounts of all of them, however (excepting those of Hamilton and Lanark) will be found, some in my present, some in my last Report. At the Prisons of Dundee, Inverness, and Stirling, there is no resident Keeper, or officer of any kind. The average number of prisoners in each of the foregoing Prisons (excepting the old one at Dundee) varies from 6 to 40.

Prisons of the third class.

Few good ones.

Some dirty and disorderly.

The fourth class contains eight Prisons; that is, all the remaining ones except the Glasgow Bridewell, which stands alone, being much the largest and much the best Prison in Scotland. The Prisons which I have put in the fourth class are, the two at Aberdeen, the Gaol and Bridewell of Edinburgh, the Gaol of Glasgow, the Prisons of Paisley and Jedburgh, and the new Prison at Dundee, which, though not yet in use, is nearly completed. Most of these Prisons have been built within the last twenty-five years; the two oldest being the Edinburgh Bridewell and the Glasgow Gaol; the former erected about forty years ago, and the latter about thirty years ago. No one of these Prisons is on a thoroughly good construction, or, in my opinion, is well situated; most of the cells being too small, and the Prisons being placed within the towns or on the outskirts, instead of in retired situations, at some distance. The average number of prisoners in each of these Prisons is approximately as follows:—

Fourth class.

Construction of none very good.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ayr | 25 | Inverness | 30 |
| Cupar-Fife | 12 | Lanark | not known. |
| Dumfries | 30 | Perth | 40 |
| Dumbarton | 6 | Stirling | 30 |
| Greenock | 34 | Wick | 10 |
| Hamilton | 24 | | |

In the Aberdeen Bridewell, the best of the foregoing Prisons, there are the means of keeping the prisoners entirely separate; the number of cells (100) exceeding the greatest number of prisoners at any single period for a long time. The Aberdeen Gaol also contains more cells than prisoners (except on extraordinary occasions), though the power of separation has been turned to no account. In the Prisons of Paisley and Jedburgh, also, the number of cells is as great as the ordinary number of prisoners; and in these Prisons, as in those at Aberdeen, the cells are large enough (with some improvement in the ventilation) for prisoners to occupy them by day and night, going out for short periods into the open air. This, too, I hope, will be found possible, without prejudice to the health of the prisoners, in the cells of the new Prison at Dundee: about many of them, indeed, there is no doubt; though some are unfortunately so small as to make the matter very uncertain. In the Edinburgh Bridewell the cells are, I fear, quite too little to be used each for the tenement of a prisoner; but considering that this Prison was erected forty years ago, when little was known on the subject of prison discipline, the building is on a better construction than could have been expected. The two worst of the Prisons under review are the Edinburgh and Glasgow Gaols, and these are both so thoroughly bad in their construction as to be incapable of material improvement. In proposing, however, to abandon them I should not recommend to build others in their stead.

Means of separation.

Dryness, &c.

The Prisons in this class are all dry, and for the most part tolerably warm; some being heated by a warm-air apparatus and others by open fires. The Aberdeen Bridewell is warmed by steam; but there is no provision for warming the new Prison at Dundee. The ventilation is but moderately good in any of them, and in the night-cells of the Glasgow Gaol it is miserably defective. I found them all clean except that part of the Paisley Prison which is used as a Gaol, and excepting, to some extent, the Prison at Jedburgh. They are all, too, tolerably secure; the Glasgow Gaol least so, however. All of them have resident Keepers, and all airing-grounds.

Glasgow Bridewell.

The only remaining Prison is the Glasgow Bridewell, a full account of which will be found in my last Report.

State of the Prisoners.

Physical condition in general tolerably good.

The physical condition of the prisoners is in general tolerably good, though it is by no means uniform. In some Prisons it is certainly low, owing, generally, to damp, dirt, or closeness; but in others the prisoners are in very good condition, better than, I fear, is the case with many honest people. There is but little serious sickness, and but few deaths; and upon the whole I am satisfied that the health of the prisoners is, generally, at least as good on their leaving Prison as on their entrance. I have found nothing like that formidable disease which used to be known under the name of Gaol-fever; and in only two instances have I found fever of any kind; and one of these (at Perth) was a case of two children of a female debtor, who were suffering from scarlet fever when they entered the Prison. I confess, however, that I am surprised that fever does not frequently break out at such Prisons as those of Dundee, Inverness, and Tain; and that, when it does appear, it is not fearfully destructive.

The smallness of the number of deaths in the Scottish Prisons is in some degree accounted for by the circumstance, that prisoners are sometimes removed to the Town Infirmary, or liberated, on account of illness, or (if debtors) are allowed to go home, on giving security for their return; and a further explanation is, that most of the prisoners are at an age at which the animal functions are in fullest vigour. But, on the other hand, the dissipated life which criminals generally lead impairs the constitution prematurely, and exposes them, in a peculiar degree, to the inroads of sickness. On the whole, I am convinced that the regularity of diet, disuse of spirituous liquors, and attention to cleanliness, &c., which exist in the best regulated Prisons of Scotland, and which, even in the others, are to be found in a higher degree than in the disorderly abode of a criminal, more than counterbalance any causes tending to the injury of health. The most prevailing diseases are bowel-complaints, catarrh, itch, and venereal disorders.

Prevailing diseases.

Prisoners often dirty.

In most of the small Prisons, and in some of the large ones also, the prisoners, though probably quite as clean as they would be at home, are often dirty; some, indeed, I found disgustingly so. In many of the Prisons, it is left entirely to the prisoners to wash themselves when they like; and, as criminals, generally speaking, have no taste for cleanliness, they often remain unwashed for several days. In most of the large Prisons, however, cleanliness, in a greater or less degree, is enforced; and there has already been a considerable general improvement in this respect since the period when I entered upon my duties. Improvement in cleanliness, indeed, is easily obtained. Let but a prisoner's breakfast depend on his having washed himself thoroughly by a certain time, and there is little danger of his neglecting his ablutions.

Food.
Money-allowance common.
Allowance varies in amount.
Contracts.
Dietaries.
Glasgow dietary.

Food.—There is a great variety in this respect. In most of the Prisons, except those in the highest class, a money-allowance is given, or, at least, has been given until lately; for I have always advised its immediate discontinuance; and the recommendation has, in several instances, been acted upon. There are still many places, however, in which the money-allowance continues. This allowance varies from three-pence a day, in some prisons, to six-pence in others. In some Prisons, those of Dumfries and Haddington, and the Gaol of Paisley, for example, a contract is entered into with the Gaoler to supply the prisoners with food at a certain rate per head. This rate, like the money-allowance, varies at different Prisons from three-pence to six-pence, and that without any assignable reason. In all the instances which have come before me, the Gaoler acts according to his own judgment and sense of justice, both as to the quantity and quality of the food he gives; no fixed scale having been laid down for him to follow. Under these circumstances, it is very creditable to the Gaolers that no serious case of abuse has come to light in my examination; and, to the best of my belief, few, if any, such instances exist; for I have always examined both the prisoners and the medical men on these points. In some Prisons, indeed, the Paisley Gaol for example, the food supplied by the Gaoler, is, in my opinion, both too good and too abundant, compared, as it ought always to be, with the diet of the poorest class of honest and industrious people out of Prison. In several Prisons, including, of course, the best ordered, a regular dietary is in use. This, however, varies considerably; and is not quite the same in any two Prisons. In some Prisons, too, the dietary is alike for all the prisoners, whether children or adults: but in the best regulated, it varies partly according to age, and partly according to the nature of the work at which the particular prisoner is employed. The food, where there is a diet-table, generally consists of oatmeal-porridge, milk, broth (containing barley, vegetables, and a little meat), and wheaten bread. At the Glasgow Bridewell the prisoners have two meals a day (the usual number at other Prisons also), their breakfast consisting of 10¾ ounces of oatmeal made into porridge, with a little buttermilk; and their dinner of a quart (half a Scotch pint) of soup, (containing four ounces of barley, with vegetables, marrow-bones, and seasoning,) and an allowance of brown wheaten bread, varying from four to eleven ounces, according to the age, &c. of the prisoner. (The prisoners often keep this bread to serve for a supper.) The food is plain, but sufficient. The general good health of the prisoners is the best proof in its favour; but I may add, that I did not receive any complaints about it. The daily cost of the food in the Glasgow Bridewell, including fuel, water, repairs of utensils, part of the Matron's salary, and every other expense of cooking, is about 2½*d.* a day per head. The same, too, is about the cost of the food at the Edinburgh and Paisley Bridewells. At the Aberdeen Bridewell it is rather higher; but even there it is only 3*d.* a day. At the Edinburgh Gaol the daily cost is about 3½*d.*; and at the Glasgow Gaol, 5*d.*

Supplies from without.
Whiskey smuggled in.

Where the allowance is paid in money, or where the Gaoler supplies by contract, additional supplies from without are generally permitted; but this is seldom the case where there is a regular dietary. In these irregular supplies, food of an objectionable kind, including spirituous liquors, is of course often introduced. By referring to the Reports on the Prisons of Dumfries and Lerwick your Lordship will see to what an extent this abuse is sometimes carried. One way adopted for smuggling whiskey into a Prison is by mixing it with milk. This fraud is known to have been practised at Wick; but it was there carried on by the friends of the debtors. It is deserving of remark, that, as a general rule, most dissatisfaction appears to exist, and I have received most complaints, in those Prisons where the food is most expensive, and where the greatest irregularities are permitted. This, however, is to some extent explained by the circumstance, that there is no work in these Prisons to give the prisoners other subjects for thought and occupation than eating their meals and wrangling about the quantity and quality of their food.

Bedding and clothing.

Bedding and Clothing.—I have already mentioned, that in the very small Prisons, or Lock-up Houses, the bedding consists of loose straw only, sometimes contained in a crib, and sometimes lying on the ground. In the larger Prisons there are generally either bedsteads, boards fixed in the wall to serve as such, or hammocks; and the bedding usually consists of a straw mattress and pillow, two or three blankets, and a coverlet. In a few Prisons there are sheets also. The bedding appears to be generally warm enough; and where it is not so, the prisoners usually sleep two or three in the same bed, and thus make up by their animal-heat for the want of blankets. In some Prisons, too (such as the Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Aberdeen Bridewells, and Edinburgh Gaol), the bedding is very clean; but in others—those of Dumfries and Dunfermline for example—I found it very dirty. The best bed for a Prison, in my opinion, is the hammock: it is cheap, requires fewer blankets than a wooden or iron bedstead, and is readily removed from the cell; thereby giving facilities for ventilation, making it impossible for the prisoner to lounge away his time during the day in bed, and increasing the space for work.

Hammocks.

Clothing seldom supplied.

There are only two Prisons in Scotland in which the prisoners are fully supplied with clothing; these are the Edinburgh and Aberdeen Bridewells. The general rule is for the prisoners to continue to wear the clothes which they had on at their admission; clothing being supplied to those only who are in a state of destitution; and there is seldom any regular provision even for this, the object being sometimes effected by private charity. In the Glasgow Bridewell, about a third part of the prisoners are furnished with clothing; but excepting this, and the two Prisons just mentioned, I have not been in any Prison in which more than a very few of the inmates wear a prison dress. Yet, under good arrangements, the cost of prisoners' clothing is but small; and it is very desirable that this expense should always be borne: for, to say nothing of the evil of creating a kind of distinction, and offering a reward for extreme poverty, the difficulty of insuring personal cleanliness, of keeping the Prison free from vermin, and of preventing the concealment of instruments for escape, is greatly enhanced by the circumstance of the prisoner continuing to wear his own clothes.

Small cost of clothing.

The clothing in the Aberdeen and Edinburgh Bridewells is, in my opinion, just what it should be—plain, cheap, durable, and without any badge to keep the prisoner constantly in mind of crime and disgrace. The average yearly cost of a prisoner's clothing, including shirt, stockings, shoes, and every other article of dress, is only 10*s.* in the Edinburgh Bridewell, and in that of Aberdeen only 8*s.*

Discipline. Idleness, &c.

Discipline.—Few of the Prisons of Scotland have anything deserving the name of discipline; the prisoners generally passing their time in idleness (either in bed or in lolling about in the day-rooms) and in the corrupting society of their companions; seldom required to attend to their personal cleanliness, seldom obliged to observe silence and order, and seldom receiving any instruction. The exceptions, happily, to this demoralising state, include those Prisons in which there are the greatest number of prisoners; the best regulated Prisons being the Houses of Correction at Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, and Paisley; to which may now be added, the Prison at Ayr. In these the prisoners are employed in useful labour, are for the most part kept separate (except at Edinburgh), are obliged to wash themselves regularly, are required to observe order and silence (again to some extent excepting Edinburgh), and receive at least some amount of instruction; although certainly this last has hitherto been a weak point, even in the best Prisons. A full account of all these matters will be found in the separate Reports.

Exceptions to bad state.

Few punishments in well-regulated Prisons.

In the best regulated Prisons there are few offences or punishments; but in some of the others the offences are numerous; consisting generally of making loud noises, calling to people in the street, obtaining supplies of whiskey, quarrelling with each other, abusing the officers, swearing and using obscene language, stealing from one another, and injuring the furniture and building. In some Prisons these offences pass by without punishment of any kind; in others, they are punished either by the withdrawal of food, by putting the prisoner in irons, or by confining him in a solitary cell, sometimes a dark one. I am glad to say, that there are very few Prisons in which there is any kind of corporal punishment. The only Prison I have visited in Scotland where the prisoners are ever whipped is that of Greenock; in other respects, a comparatively well regulated Prison. And, even here, whipping is seldom employed, and never for adults, and of course never for females.

Corporal punishment very rare.

Where the prisoners are separate and fully occupied they are under little temptation to break through any reasonable rule, or indeed to commit offences of any kind; and, in point of fact, in the Glasgow Bridewell, and in the Bridewells of Aberdeen and Paisley, together with the Prison at Ayr (in all of which work and separation exist), there are few offences, and but little punishment. And the separation which tends so much to this result is attained without any great depression of the spirits of the prisoners, and certainly without destroying their health, for the inmates of these Prisons are more healthy than the generality of other prisoners in Scotland.

Work liked by prisoners who separate.

As might naturally be expected, I have always found that prisoners in a state of separation are fond of their work, and like to be employed; and thus, whilst they are assisting in their own maintenance, they are gradually acquiring those habits of industry which form one of the best securities against crime. There are so few Prisons in Scotland in which the inmates associate, and are at the same time engaged in any kind of rational labour, that I cannot say with what feelings employment, under these circumstances, is regarded. The usual kinds of work in the best of the Scottish Prisons are hand-loom weaving, picking oakum and worsted waste, winding weft, spinning, sewing, shoemaking, and tailors' work. When possible (and it is found to be so much more frequently than might be expected), a prisoner is employed in that kind of work to which he has been accustomed; if, indeed, he has been accustomed to any honest employment, which is not generally the case.

Kinds of work.

Treatment generally kind.

I have received but few complaints of the treatment of prisoners, and I am satisfied that almost all the Keepers, however unqualified they may generally be in other respects, are at least of kind disposition. The common error, indeed, has been laxity and unwise indulgence. Visiting, for instance, is carried to much too great an extent; and there is seldom any security against the admittance of people of bad character. So long as a prisoner remains untried he should, of course, have facilities for communicating with his friends; but the moment his guilt is determined, and a course of treatment is entered upon with a view to his cure, intercourse from without, except under very peculiar circumstances (as when the friend to be admitted is of unblemished character and of sound judgment), should be entirely stopped.

Females.

Want of female officers.

Female Prisoners.—The treatment of females is generally much the same as that of males. And in most Prisons they are, I am sorry to say, under the immediate charge of male officers. This, however, is of course not the case at the Glasgow Bridewell, and it is not so at the Gaols of Edinburgh and Ayr; while it is only partially the case at the Edinburgh Bridewell, and now only partially also at the Gaol of Stirling. But I know of no other Prison at which there is a female officer. The Keeper's wife, indeed, sometimes attends to the female prisoners when they are ill, and they wait on one another to some extent; but the general rule is, that female prisoners are under the direct management of male officers.—I have met with no instance in which males and females are confined in the same cell during the night; and I have found only three or four Prisons, and those small ones, in which, as a regular thing, males and females occupied the same room by day. But there are several Prisons, some of them even comparatively large ones, where male and female prisoners have occasional opportunities of associating in the day-time, and there are some in which they can converse at all times.

Separation of males and females.

Revenue prisoners. Small number

Revenue Prisoners.—This class, I am glad to say, is much diminished; the average number for the whole of Scotland not being now more than about 40.

Often in worse state than criminal prisoners.

These prisoners are often in a worse condition than any others, owing to a delay in the granting of orders for their aliment, and to there being no provision for their maintenance until such orders arrive. These orders are sent by the Board of Customs or the Board of Excise, as the case may be; and the rule is not to grant an order until satisfactory evidence has been given that the prisoner is unable to support himself. This often produces a delay of several weeks; nay, a period of three months has been known to pass before the order arrived; and in the mean time the prisoner, if he really have no means of support, as appears to be frequently the case, is dependent on charity for every morsel of food he gets. Sometimes the magistrates order relief; sometimes the Gaoler makes a collection among the neighbouring inhabitants; sometimes the Gaoler feeds him at his own expense; and sometimes the other prisoners share their food with him. And I may here remark, to the honour of humanity, that even among this, its lowest class, I have generally found that when, for any reason, any one prisoner was worse off than his companions, he has met with pity and help from them.

Debtors. Number much reduced.

Debtors.—The number of these also, I am happy to say, is much reduced, and is fast declining, owing, apparently, in part to the improved state of the country; in part to the growing disapproval of imprisonment for debt; in part to the recent Act for abolishing imprisonment for sums less than 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* (100*l.* Scots); and in part to the alteration of the law respecting the cessio bonorum, by which a surrender of goods can now be readily made, and release, or even protection from threatened imprisonment obtained.

Aliment.

Visits.

Idleness.

Sometimes dirty.

Irregularities.

In Scotland the debtor who can show that he is unable to maintain himself must be supported by the imprisoning creditor, according to an allowance to be awarded, within certain limits, by the Magistrates of the particular borough, and which generally runs from 8*d.* or 9*d.* per day, to 1*s.* or 1*s.* 3*d.*; the debtor generally providing his own bedding and fuel.—Visits from friends are in general freely allowed, and they often interfere with the due order and discipline of the Prison. As evidence of this I may mention, that till lately a considerable item on the credit side of the accounts of the Glasgow Gaol has been the profit obtained from supplying the debtors and their friends with malt-liquor.—The debtors generally pass their time in idleness, and get up and go to bed when they choose. As a class they are cleaner than the criminal prisoners; but there is sometimes much difficulty in inducing them to wash themselves; it being very uncertain whether, in the present state of the law, any power exists for enforcing the obedience of debtors to any regulations of the kind. I have already alluded to abuses arising from debtors being allowed to receive supplies of food from without the prison. Indeed, the very presence of this class of prisoners appears to be an anomaly, seeing that, although they are sent to Gaol, they are placed above its discipline. Trouble and complexity of arrangement are the natural results.

Officers.

Often unqualified.

Small remuneration.

Officers.—The Governors and Keepers of several of the Prisons are able, efficient, and trustworthy; but there are many who do not possess the two former qualities, and some few who cannot lay claim to the latter. The remuneration, however, is generally very moderate, and in some of the small Prisons exceedingly low; 3*l.* or 4*l.* a year only being no uncommon salary—nay, the allowance is some times smaller even than this. At Crail, a little Borough in Fife, the Gaoler's yearly pittance (it cannot be termed a salary) is only 1*l.*! Gaolers receiving such payments as these cannot, of course, give much time to their official duties; and are not likely to apply with much zeal to the study of the art of discipline, or to the acquirement of the various kinds of knowledge which are desirable even in the Keeper of a small Prison. The only wonder is, that, under the present circumstances, men, comparatively so respectable and well-disposed as the Goalers, even of the small Prisons, generally appear to be, can be obtained.

The want of female officers has already been spoken of.

Fees.

Seldom demanded of criminals.

Debtors' fees often heavy.

Fees irregular.

Fees.—The only two Prisons I have visited in which Fees are demanded of criminal prisoners are those of Dunfermline, in Fife, and Lerwick, in Shetland; and even at these the sums demanded are small, and the claim is seldom enforced when the money is not forthcoming. In several Prisons no fees are asked of debtors also; but, generally speaking, there are fees of this kind, and they are often heavy: for, in the first place, the imprisoning creditor has generally to pay a certain per-centage on the amount of the debt, and a fee of 1*s.* on the debtor's admission; the former sometimes going to the Gaoler, and sometimes to the Prison funds; the latter always to the Gaoler. The next fee arises on an application for aliment. This fee, and those consequent upon it, often amount to 9*s.* or 10*s.*, and sometimes even to a guinea: for, first, a petition must be written, setting forth the prisoner's inability to support himself—the fee to the person drawing up this document is generally half-a-crown, or five shillings;—then comes a fee to the Sheriff's officer, for serving a notice of the debtor's application on the imprisoning creditor; then a Magistrate must hold a Court to decide between the contending parties, and to fix the amount of the allowance—the fee in this case (generally half-a-crown) goes to the Town Clerk;—and, in the last place, there is a fee to the Sheriff's Officer for serving a notice of the Magistrate's award. All the fees relating to the petition for aliment have to be paid by the debtor; and are generally deducted, a little at a time, from his daily allowance. Again, there is often a fee when the debtor leaves the Prison. This fee is sometimes 1*s.* only; but a claim is not unfrequently made to 2*d.* or even 4*d.* a night for all the time the debtor has been in Prison. This last fee, however, is not often paid, at least in full. In truth, there is every kind of irregularity in these fees; a difference, for example, being made in some places between the fees demanded of debtors who are inhabitants of the particular Borough and of such as are strangers.

Accounts.
Often unsatisfactory.

Accounts.—The Accounts in some of the Prisons, especially among those in the highest class, are kept with neatness, perspicuity, and trustworthiness; but in many of the small Prisons, and in some of the larger ones, they are in a very unsatisfactory state. In some cases the Gaoler himself is unable to keep even a register of the names of the prisoners; a duty which is then performed generally by the Town Clerk; and in two small Prisons which I have examined (those of Cromarty and Fortrose) there is no register at all. Indeed, the general rule is, not to record persons confined for a single night, although in some places these form the most numerous class of prisoners. Most of the registers contain the date of each prisoner's admission, but in many, that of his release is habitually omitted; and in examining the accounts, in order to ascertain the average number of prisoners, and other particulars, I have often been obliged to estimate as well as I could the probable length of some of the periods of confinement, and to depend on the recollection of the Gaoler. Indeed, one of the most tedious parts of my duty has been to obtain trustworthy information from the clumsy and insufficient records now generally kept. And yet these records are, for the most part, extremely limited in the subjects they embrace; omitting many matters of the greatest importance, as elements of a statistical account of the circumstances attending crime; as for example, the state of the offender's education, his character for drunkenness or sobriety, &c.—nay, the fact of a prisoner's previous commitment is omitted in the records of most of the Prisons; nor do these records even supply the means of ascertaining it.

Many important subjects omitted.

Expenditure.
Good system economic.

Expenditure.—It fortunately happens, as respects Prison discipline, that a good system is essentially economic (at least such appears to me to be the case), the very means on which I should chiefly rely, for the reform of the prisoner being, with few exceptions, such as would tend on the one hand to save expense, and, on the other, to make the prisoner a productive labourer. Thus, we find that those Prisons in Scotland, in which the best system is maintained for the real welfare and cure of the offender, are the very Prisons that are least expensive to society. This is eminently the case with the Glasgow Bridewell, which, while it is by far the best Prison in Scotland, is also, with one exception (the Paisley Bridewell), the cheapest; the average yearly cost of a prisoner in the Glasgow Bridewell, including his share of salaries, repairs, and all other expenses (except that nothing is put down for rent), being only 3*l.*, or about 2*d.* a day, whereas the average yearly cost of a prisoner in the Glasgow Gaol, where the inmates are idle and disorderly, and where they must necessarily become worse every day of their confinement, is as much as 15*l.* If, indeed, I had to arrange the Prisons of Scotland in the order of excellence, I might, with great general accuracy, place them in the inverse order of expense.—Taking the Prisons at large, the average annual cost of a prisoner, including salaries, repairs, &c., is about 9*l.* 10*s.*; and the whole average annual cost of the Prisons and prisoners of Scotland, exclusive of the cost of new building, is about 14,500*l.*

Number of prisoners.

Number of Prisoners.—The present average number of prisoners in Scotland, including those in Lock-up Houses, Police Cells, and Prisons of every kind, is about 1570; namely, about 1460 criminals, about 30 revenue prisoners, and about 80 debtors. Of the criminals, about 930 are males, and about 530 females. The revenue prisoners, and the debtors, are almost all males. Most of the prisoners are between the ages of 15 and 30. The total number of prisoners appears to have diminished somewhat during the last two or three years.

The following Table shows the present cost of the different Prisons in Scotland (except the Lock-up Houses, and some of the smallest Burgh Prisons); the average number of prisoners in each; and the yearly and daily cost of the prisoners per head. In most of the Prisons which I have visited, I have ascertained the average expenditure for the last three or four years, and the average number of prisoners, and in such cases I have given these averages, instead of the amount and number for the particular year. Where particular entries appear, instead of averages, they relate to one of the last two years; and, in some instances (all, however, relating to small Prisons), I have been obliged to estimate the number of prisoners, and the expenditure, as well as I could.

Improvements Effected.

It will afford your Lordship pleasure to learn that I have met with a cordial reception from the Local Authorities all over Scotland; and that my recommendations have always been received with attention, and, in many cases, carried into effect, sometimes by the Magistrates and Council of the particular Burgh alone, and sometimes (invariably when applied for) with the assistance of the Commissioners of Supply and other leading gentlemen of the County. I have never advised the expenditure of much money, seeing that everything relating to the Prisons of Scotland is at present quite unsettled. But where it appeared that a considerable immediate improvement could be made, either in the building itself, its internal arrangements, or the discipline in use, at a small cost, I have recommended the outlay. Several improvements, too—such as increased attention to cleanliness, restriction of visits, and the discontinuance of a money-allowance for food—have been brought about at little or no expense. The Prisons in which improvements, to a greater or less extent, have been carried into full operation, are at the following Towns:—

Aberdeen (the Bridewell only).
Ayr.
Banff.
Dingwall.
Elgin.
Forres.
Glasgow (the Bridewell and the Calton Prison only).
Inverness.
Montrose.
Stirling.
Stonehaven.

Improvements are going forward, also, at Wick and in Shetland; and similar changes have been determined on at Aberdeen (the Gaol), Brechin (in Forfarshire), Dumfries, Kirkwall, Paisley, and Perth.

An account of these improvements appears in the Reports on the separate places. Some of them are certainly of small amount; but I trust they will all be found useful; indeed, in several instances, where the change has been effected, I have received letters from Provosts and other gentlemen, informing me that good results have already been obtained. The most striking improvement is in the Prison at Ayr. Twelve months ago this Prison was in as disorderly a state as any I have visited: the prisoners were idle, dirty, and noisy; and persons living in the neighbouring houses, or passing by the Prison, were often annoyed and disgusted by the gross language and the ribald songs that assailed their ears. My first examination, however, convinced me that, with a small expenditure, the place might be rendered suitable for the introduction of a good system of discipline; and, finding a strong disposition in many of the leading gentlemen of the County and Burgh to take immediate steps for improving their Prison, I proposed various alterations, and strongly recommended that Mr. Brebner, the able Governor of the Glasgow Bridewell, should be engaged to superintend the changes and the introduction of a new order of things. These proposals were readily adopted, as was also one for pensioning off the old keeper, and engaging an efficient one in his stead. Some delay arose in carrying the measures into effect; but in the course of about four months everything was ready for the change, and the new system was immediately put in action. Some of the prisoners were at first very sullen, and shewed a spirit of insubordination. By a mixture of firmness and kindness, however, on the part of Mr. Brebner and the new keeper, this spirit was soon suppressed, and at the end of a couple of days everything was going on smoothly. That which chiefly excited the hostility of the prisoners was their separation one from another.—I visited the Prison lately, and was highly gratified by the change that had taken place. Industry, order, and cleanliness, had succeeded idleness, confusion, and dirt; and I found no trace of the bad feeling I have described: but, in truth, few of the prisoners who were in confinement at the period of the change were there at the time of my visit. I examined every prisoner in private, and received no complaint whatever; several, indeed, spoke in grateful terms of the treatment they received from the keeper and his wife, the latter of whom has the charge of the females.

Ayr.

All said they liked their work, and no mention was made of the separation. Of course, however, I did not seek for complaints; although I gave every prisoner an opportunity of bringing them forward, informing him, in general terms, that I was ready to hear a statement of any grievance.

Still, much as has been done at Ayr, there is yet room for considerable improvement. Indeed, I purposely omitted many proposals in the first instance, lest, by attempting a great deal, I should accomplish nothing. The results already obtained, however, having been so very satisfactory, at my last visit I proposed several additional measures. Every disposition was shown to adopt them; but, unfortunately, without calling a special County meeting, little can be done before the end of April—the period at which Meetings of the Commissioners of Supply and Justices of the Peace, &c. are held all over Scotland.* At Ayr an energetic committee was fortunately appointed, who carried forward the improvements with vigour; but at some other places, where changes have been determined on, the progress has been but languid; gentlemen who undertake the necessary duties often having other and various business to attend to, which it would be unreasonable to expect them to set aside for the sake of the Prison. So long, too, as improvements are to be effected through others, it will, I fear, be impossible to make them complete; for with every disposition on the part of the Local Authorities to act for the best—and I have almost uniformly found a strong desire to do so—it cannot be expected that those whose attention has not been strongly drawn to the particular subject of Prison Discipline can fully recognize, even when they are described, other than great faults or great advantages. A keeper, for instance, may be a good kind of man, and perform the more evident of his duties with diligence and regularity, and yet be very unfit for his office. But how difficult is it to make this apparent to persons whose inquiries have not led them to see how many qualifications ought to be united in the director of a Prison!

Delay.

Want of knowledge.

State of Crime in Scotland.

With a view of determining what number of prisoners it will be necessary to provide for, I thought it important not only to ascertain the number of offenders actually in confinement, but to extend my inquiries to the general state of crime in Scotland, and to the probable number of criminals at large. This I was the more tempted to do on account of the peculiar facilities for obtaining such information which exist in Scotland, owing to the system of Local Judges and Public Prosecutors. I was also urged to this examination by the great importance of the inquiry abstractedly, and by a consideration of the few opportunities which arise for obtaining trustworthy information on this head; especially as relates to some of the remote parts into which I was going. I have not, however, allowed these matters to withdraw my attention, to any considerable extent, from the objects specifically laid down for my pursuit; and this necessity for confining my main attention to the immediate business I had in hand will, I hope, be received as my excuse for any errors I may have fallen into on the general subject of crime, and which a more thorough inquiry would have prevented. An examination of the state of crime almost necessarily led also to some other matters strongly bearing upon it; such as the state of the Police, the amount of drunkenness in different districts, the state of education, and the condition of the people. I offer the statements under these heads, however, only as an approximation to the truth.

I am happy to inform your Lordship that the general result of the foregoing inquiries is very satisfactory. I am satisfied that the great bulk of the Scottish people are honest and peaceable; that education has advanced; and that the condition of the people has for a long time been gradually improving, and is now better than at any past period.

Great bulk of the people honest and peaceable.

A great decrease has evidently taken place in most kinds of serious offences, and that without taking into consideration a concurrent increase of population. In petty offences, too, when the increase of population is considered, a decrease is almost always observable, and in many instances the decrease is not merely comparative but absolute. Upon the whole, then, bearing in mind the great increase in the population and wealth of the country, the amount of crime appears to have much diminished. I am fully aware that the returns of convictions might, in many cases, lead to a different conclusion; but the increased efficiency in the administration of the laws, and the improvement in the Police also, (feeble and unorganized as the Police still is in many parts of Scotland,) will explain this discrepancy. But so common is it to confound the number of convictions with the number of offences, that it has happened several times that, on my first putting the question whether there was more or less crime than formerly at a particular place, the reply has been that crime had increased; but on my further inquiring what particular kinds of offences had become more numerous, and whether there was a less feeling of security than used to exist, the respondent has gradually changed his opinion, and declared his belief that crime had diminished, and that he had been thinking entirely of the number of convictions. In many cases, however, even the number of convictions, as respects heinous offences, has fallen off.

SCOTLAND.

Kinds of crime that have diminished.

Kinds of offences now most common.

The following offences have undoubtedly diminished: murder, highway robbery, (which was common 60 or 70 years ago in some of the Highland districts,) housebreaking, (particularly when accompanied with violence,) child-murder, violent assaults, cattle-stealing, and forgery. While these offences have been on the decline no other serious offence, as far as I am aware, has increased, although one species has certainly come into existence, namely, offences arising out of strikes among workmen, which are sometimes of a very serious character. But even of this kind there is, I believe, no bad case of recent occurrence. As to the offences of smuggling and illicit distillation, (which, however, I of course do not rank among serious crimes, although they often lead to such,) they have almost disappeared. The most common kinds of offence at the present time are thefts, (for the most part of a petty character,) assaults, and wanton injury to property, such as defacing mile-stones, &c. In the Highland Counties, indeed, assaults alone constitute the bulk of the offences; though even there the people appear to be gradually adopting a more peaceful and decorous mode of settling their disputes than beating each other with cudgels. They now often appear in their own local Court, and abide by the decision of the Sheriff.

Number of criminals generally small.

Kinghorn.

Inverness.

East Lothian.

I have given it as my opinion, founded on the inquiries I have made, that the great bulk of the people of Scotland are honest and well-disposed. In many places I have been able to obtain, from those connected with the administration of justice and others, what I believe to be a tolerably correct estimate of the criminal population; and the numbers, I am happy to say, are generally very small. In small places the bad members of the community appear generally to be known to a single individual. At Kinghorn, in Fife, for example, the population of which is about 1,500, I was informed that there are exactly nine persons who steal; and it is believed that if these nine persons could be got rid of and vagrants excluded, the Town would be altogether free from crime. To give two or three more examples of the estimated amount of the criminal population in different places, I may mention that at Inverness, (population about 12,000,) there appear to be about 60 resident thieves; 30 of whom are female prostitutes, and from 15 to 20 young boys and girls. At Perth (population about 20,000,) the number of regular thieves appears to be about 30, together with about 20 who occasionally steal, making altogether about 50. About 30 of these are prostitutes, and of the others about six are boys, six or seven are men, (one of them an old man,) one is a girl, and six or eight are old women. In East Lothian I was assured by Mr. List, the efficient Superintendent of Police, that there are not more than about 12 resident thieves in the whole County, the population of which is about 36,000. There are, to be sure, generally several thieves from other Counties, but the whole number is very small. Mr. List says that the ages of the resident thieves run from 10 to 24 years.

Usual age of offenders.

Offenders often of drunken habits.

Few know a trade.

Low in education.

Parents often bad or neglectful.

Many offenders strangers.

I have not been able to form an estimate of the whole number of thieves in Scotland; but it cannot be great, certainly not many thousands; for the examples which I have given, though favourable ones, are not excessively so, as will be seen by an examination of the different Reports. Most of the thieves are from 12 or 14 to 25 or 30 years old; very many being transported, it is believed, before they get beyond that age. Death too probably carries off considerable numbers, especially among the prostitutes. As a class the thieves are much more drunken and dissipated than others in the same rank of life. Comparatively few, too, have a knowledge of a trade, or have been brought up to any regular occupation; and as a class they are almost always reported to be much below others in the same rank of life in education. The parents of juvenile offenders (those of older ones are seldom known,) are generally stated to be at least neglectful of their children, and frequently to be in habits of drunkenness, and often to be themselves addicted to crime. The chief exceptions are cases of widows left with large families. Many of the offenders are strangers at the place at which they commit their offences. This is particularly the case with regard to the most serious offences.

775

Drunkenness the chief immediate cause of crime.

Of all immediate causes of crime and offences in Scotland drunkenness is by far the most potent. A considerable portion even of the thefts are committed under the excitement of whiskey, and the desire of obtaining this liquor is the cause of many others. And again, the means of committing a robbery are often afforded by intoxication in the person robbed. This is particularly the case with thefts by prostitutes—a numerous class of thefts, and one including robberies of large sums of money. As for assaults, they almost invariably spring from drunkenness. On my inquiring of Mr. Henderson, the Procurator Fiscal for Caithness—a county abounding in assaults—on this point, his expressive reply was, "Sir, I never knew a sober assault."

Prison Accommodation required.

Existing provision insufficient.

Probable increase of prisoners.

Having now ascertained the number of prisoners at present in confinement, and given such information as I have been able to obtain relative to the probable number of criminals at large, I come to consider what amount of Prison accommodation is necessary. There is no doubt that the existing provision is quite insufficient even for the present number of prisoners. In the Glasgow Bridewell, for instance, which is calculated for 260 prisoners only, and which does not contain more than that number of cells, there are often upwards of 300 prisoners; destroying, to a certain extent, the principle of separation, one of the leading principles of the establishment. Some of the other Prisons, too, are improperly crowded; and, as I have already stated, there are several which should be abandoned altogether. Again, one of the first effects which may be anticipated from a great general improvement in the Prisons, and the system of Prison discipline, is a considerable increase in the number of prisoners. For so soon as the prisons are changed from places of corruption to schools of reform, the periods of imprisonment (which in Scotland are less regulated by statutes than in England, and depend more on the discretion of the Judge), will probably be considerably lengthened—a step to which the Judge will be urged as well by a desire to protect society from further injury as by a wish to promote the real welfare of the offender himself. It may be expected, too, that many juvenile criminals whose early offences are now passed over to some extent rather than that they should be exposed to the contamination of a Prison, will be apprehended (as it is highly important they should be) in the first stage of their bad career, and before their habits of crime become fixed. Indeed it is much to be desired that the whole criminal population, young and old, should be got within Prison walls; so that society may be literally weeded of its bad members, and these latter placed under the most favourable circumstances for cure. Some persons, indeed, have fears that to withdraw a number of criminals is only to create a void which will call new criminals into existence. But this appears to me to be a great mistake, founded probably on a false analogy between crime and food, or some other thing for which there is a natural demand, the pressure of which would increase with any diminution in the number of producers. Such, however, is not the case with crime; for crime is opposed to the interests and feelings of society; and the community at large would be glad to drive it out of existence; and instead of the expansive power of crime increasing with every contraction, I believe the reverse to be the case, and that the withdrawal of every criminal, inasmuch as it tends to break up organization for dishonest purposes, and to bring each remaining offender more prominently before the public eye, weakens the position of criminals generally, and facilitates the complete suppression of crime. It is this want of a crowd of offenders to afford the means of divison of labour and mutual concealment that, in my opinion, does much to account for the almost total absence of crime in many small places.

Desirable that the whole criminal population should be in confinement.

Three penitentiaries proposed.

Best of present prisons to be still used.

I propose that there should be three chief Prisons or Penitentiaries in Scotland; namely, the Bridewell at Glasgow (enlarged), for the west and south-west; the great military Prison at Perth (converted into a Penitentiary), for the east and south-east; and Fort George* (converted either in whole or in part into a Penitentiary,) for the north. The best of the existing Prisons, however, should be used as far as their accommodation will go; for several of them, though insufficient as the only Prisons of their respective districts, would still be useful as part of a general system; might afford material relief to the great Prisons; and often obviate the necessity of removing prisoners considerable distances. The principal Prisons coming under this description (exclusive of the Glasgow Bridewell) are the Houses of Correction and Gaols at Aberdeen, Paisley, Lanark, Hamilton, and Jedburgh, the Bridewell at Edinburgh, the Prisons of Ayr, Dumfries, Wick, and Kirkaldy, and the new Prison now building at Dundee. Some of the smaller Prisons also will do for temporary purposes, and there are several which can with a little alteration be made to serve, at least for a time.

In order to provide, to some extent, for the first influx of prisoners, without incurring a great expense in building, I should propose that some of the large rooms in the Military Prison at Perth, should, in the first instance, be used for considerable numbers of prisoners placed together; with a view to their being divided into separate cells at a future time. An incidental advantage of this arrangement would be, that it would afford the means of trying the two different principles of separation and congregation, under circumstances the most favourable for testing their respective value. I am, myself, strongly in favour of the principle of separation; but there are many men whose opinion is deserving of much weight, who support the opposite principle.

Saving in construction of separate cells.

In constructing separate cells, a great saving might, I think, be obtained, by making them of various degrees of strength, and of various sizes, instead of having them all on one uniform plan, as is generally the case. In a Prison, as in many places in the outer world, there are commonly a few desperate fellows who set all ordinary means of control at defiance, and who are only to be restrained by physical means. But, under good regulations, the great majority of prisoners are quite tractable, and make no attempt at escape; and a skilful Governor soon becomes acquainted with their different characters. Moreover, when, by a good system of inspection, a prisoner can never feel certain, at any moment in the 24 hours, that the keeper's eye is not upon him, he must (unless he be very wild) give up all idea of forcing his way out. Even at the Glasgow Bridewell, where the means of inspection are far from perfect, the shock of an earthquake would scarcely more astonish the inmates than the escape of a prisoner. Another reason why it is unnecessary to provide such strong cells for all the prisoners is, that many of them are always too young, or too old, or for other causes too weak, to make any great effort at escape, even if they were so disposed. Under these circumstances, I should propose always to have a small number of very strong cells, but to construct the greater portion in a comparatively slight and unexpensive manner.

Future enlargement.

One thing which is frequently overlooked, and which is subsequently productive of great inconvenience and expense, is the necessity of providing for the enlargement of a Prison, if such enlargement should be required. And here arises one of the many reasons which exist for not placing Prisons within towns; for in towns land is dear, and there is, therefore, a strong disposition to limit the allotment. It fortunately happens that at the Glasgow Bridewell (which is in the outskirts of the town), a considerable quantity of land has been retained; and that no valuable property has at present been put up on any of the adjacent ground. At Perth, too, and at Fort George, there is fortunately plenty of land, if it should ever be wanted for additional buildings; which, however, I hope will not be the case.

Small local prisons.

The three main Prisons at Glasgow, Perth, and Fort George being provided, and the best of the other Prisons being rendered suitable for a good system of discipline (which may be done at little expense), nothing would remain but to put up a number of small local Prisons for temporary use; and these might be erected a few at a time, beginning with those places at which they are most wanted.

Prison for lunatic offenders.

A Prison should certainly be provided for lunatic offenders; but some one of the present Goals, which by its construction is unfitted for the introduction of a good system of discipline for ordinary prisoners, would, I should think, do tolerably well for this purpose.

Probable Cost of the Buildings required.

Glasgow Bridewell.

The chief outlay, in the first instance, will be in the enlargement of the Glasgow Bridewell, which I should propose immediately to extend so far as to make it capable of receiving about 600 more prisoners, all in separate cells. By a rough estimate which has been made of the cost of this enlargement, I expect it would be about 37,000*l.*, including the cost of the land, and all other expenses, such as those of beds, work-tools, &c. The expense of the alterations at Perth, including the necessary furniture, &c., I estimate, roughly, at about 12,000*l.* The least expensive changes would be at Fort George; where there is fortunately a great number of strong separate rooms, which would require but little to turn them into very good cells. The only considerable expense, indeed, at Fort George, would be the purchase of furniture and tools; and I should not expect this to exceed 1,000*l.* or 1,200*l.*; since the number of prisoners there would be comparatively small. Thus the whole expense of the proposed alterations at Glasgow, Perth, and Fort George, and of the purchase of the necessary furniture, tools, &c. may be put down at about 52,000*l.*; although, when careful estimates come to be made, the sum may certainly prove to be considerably greater or less.

Perth.

Fort George.

A very few thousand pounds would be sufficient to effect all that I should recommend in other Prisons; the general rule being to turn these Prisons to the best account they are capable of in their present state, but not to enlarge them, or to go to any considerable expense, even in improvement.

Local prisons.

The small Prisons for local and temporary purposes, if they contained rooms for the keeper to live in, as appears very desirable, would, I think, cost about 500*l.* or 600*l.* a piece, but I fear not less. The keeper's rooms, however, would of course stand for some part of his salary. As already stated, these minor Prisons may be erected a few at a time; and experience will probably suggest improvements in their construction, and in the means of reducing their cost.

Ornament should be avoided.

In building several of the present Prisons in Scotland, a good deal of money has been expended for the sake of ornament, or architectural effect. This appears to me to be quite unsuitable to the legitimate objects of imprisonment, and to be worse than waste; but I cannot but consider it highly objectionable that, because a man has done wrong and injured society, the style of his dwelling should be raised from that of an humble tenement to the grandeur almost of a palace. Everything which adds to the éclat of crime is, in my opinion, most pernicious, and adds greatly to the incentives to indulge in it. One of the most striking instances of the error under consideration, which I have met with, is at Cupar-Fife; where, walking out early in the morning after my arrival, to look round the neighbourhood, I observed a fine building, with a large portico in front, which I supposed to be the residence of one of the wealthiest men of the town. But when, after breakfast, I desired to be conducted to the Prison, to my surprise, I was led to the building with a grand portico, which proved to be the place I was come to inspect. I may add that, on inspection, I found the internal arrangements as bad as the outward appearance was imposing. Errors such as these, at least, will be prevented by putting the building of Prisons under the direction of those who have other objects in view than the adornment of a town. Not only may great errors be avoided, indeed, but, in building Prisons under one general direction, there will be a security for having them erected on the best known plan, instead of the matter depending, as is often the case at present, on the skill of some local architect, who may never have given particular attention to the subject of Prisons, and who is of course desirous of putting up a building which shall have a pleasing exterior. Nor will there be any necessity of employing a separate architect, however well qualified, for each separate Prison; for there is little need of variation, especially in small Prisons; and (with the exception of the three Penitentiaries) such alone would be required. Working-plans, therefore, having been once prepared, on two or three different scales, they would serve wherever a new Prison was wanted. A considerable saving of expense, also, would be obtained by having the doors, window-frames, &c. cast in large numbers, and according to one pattern; and a like advantage might be secured in the purchase of the hammocks, beds, &c.

No necessity for a separate architect for each prison.

Saving in Purchases.

It fortunately happens that building materials are cheap both at Glasgow and Perth, where the greatest quantity will be required. Few, if any, building materials will be wanted at Fort George; but they might probably be had there also at a cheap rate, owing to the readiness of access by water.

Proposed System of Management and Discipline.

If it be allowed that the legitimate objects of imprisonment are the protection of society and the reform of the offender, that system of course should be adopted which is best calculated to attain these objects; provided that at the same time it does not entail too great a sacrifice of any other kind. Thus, although the reform of the offender is an important object, it would be unreasonable to expect society to provide for its accomplishment, if, by so doing, it would have to expend large sums of money which might be more effectually employed for the prevention of crime, in providing good education, &c. for those who have not become contaminated. There is fortunately, however, no necessity for entering into a comparison of the effect to be produced by the expenditure of money in these two different ways; for, as already stated, a good system of Prison discipline is necessarily economic; since the means of reform, instead of imposing an additional burden upon society. tend (most of them at least) to a saving of expense; partly by keeping down the amount of disbursements, and partly by rendering the prisoner a productive labourer, and thereby enabling him to contribute to the Prison Funds. Thus industry and economy should, in my opinion, be leading features in the management of every Prison; and a great effort should be made to render the Prison self-supporting; and I have little doubt that, under favourable circumstances, this object may be obtained—nay, that the prisoners may eventually earn even more than their cost, so as to afford an opportunity for introducing (at least to some extent) the important principle of compensation for injury. To effect this, however, the Prison must be large, well constructed, and placed in a district where there is a demand for labour; and lastly, the prisoners must be sent for longer periods than at present. The experience of the Glasgow Bridewell shows that much may be expected under such circumstances, for that Prison already nearly maintains itself, although there is comparatively but a small number of prisoners, and those prisoners are on an average changed six times every year.

A prison should, if possible, be made self-supporting.

One great advantage of the self-supporting principle is the ease with which it can be ascertained whether the principle is, in fact, carried into operation. With respect to many principles, the effect is so far removed from the cause, that it is often very difficult to trace the connection; but this principle presents a ready test, and one which no Governor could evade. The moment, too, a Prison becomes self-supporting (and is at the same time good in other respects) there is every motive, whether we regard the good of society or the real welfare of the offender, to send every criminal for a sufficient time to effect a cure.

The principle of separation may appear to be opposed to the system of economy, which I so strongly urge; and so, to a certain extent, it is; but not nearly in so great a degree as might be anticipated; while its advantages in promoting the cure of the offender are, in my opinion, great. In point of fact, the Glasgow Bridewell, in which a separate cell is provided for each prisoner, instead of costing much more in its erection than other Prisons of like capacity, was comparatively unexpensive; though this was probably owing to unusual care in the application of the Building Funds. This Prison, which is able to accommodate 260 prisoners, cost about 25,000*l.*; while that of Durham, with a less amount of accommodation, cost about 100,000*l.*; and the Prison of York, also with a less amount of accommodation, cost 200,000*l.*! or more than 1,000*l.* per inmate!

Cost of building the Glasgow Bridewell.

It appears, then, that good economy in building will more than counterbalance the cost of providing separate cells for the prisoners; and this cost may, I am satisfied, be materially reduced in the way I have pointed out.

Some other points in the proposed system of management and discipline, such as an increased attention to education, will be found in the enumeration at the beginning of this Report, of the remedial measures brought forward in my last Report; and most of which I have already had repeated occasion to refer to.

General Arrangements proposed.

Union of Counties.

The whole of Scotland to be regarded, as respects Prisons, as one undivided state, instead of a number of separate counties. (Under this arrangement the most convenient Prison would of course be always used, without reference to the particular county or burgh in which it happened to be. Thus, for example, offenders taken up at Maxweltown, which joins the town of Dumfries, although in a different county, would, under the new arrangement, be sent to the Prison of Dumfries, which is close at hand, instead of to Kirkcudbright, a distance of 27 miles; and the witnesses, also, instead of having to travel to Kirkcudbright, would give their evidence close to their own homes.)

Removal of peculiar burdens.

The peculiar burdens and liabilities of Royal Burghs, and all other peculiar burdens and liabilities relating to Gaols, and imposed by general or local Acts, to be abolished.

One common prison fund.

All expenses relating to Prisons, of whatever kind, whether of building and repairs, of aliment (except that of debtors, to be paid for by the imprisoning creditor, as at present,) of salaries, of removing prisoners from Prison to Prison, &c. &c., to whatever kind of Prison the expenses relate (including Lock-up Houses and Police Cells), to be defrayed out of one general fund; Government, however, on whom the cost of removing certain prisoners has hitherto fallen, to pay into this fund, once a year, a sum equal to the average annual payment for the last three years.

Mode of assessment.

The Prison Fund to be raised by a general rate on land and houses all over Scotland, to fall equally on all classes. (Strict justice would perhaps require that a distinction should be made in raising that portion of the Prison Fund which is wanted for building, in favour of those counties which have lately erected Prisons. The whole sum to be raised, however, is so moderate, and there would be so much difficulty in determining how far to go back, and in apportioning the rates, that it is much to be hoped that this distinction will not be pressed for; especially when it is considered that some of the new Prisons are so ill-constructed that they are of little value; that every county requires new small local Prisons which will be paid for out of the general Fund; and that each county will partake of the advantages of the general Penitentiaries.)

One general direction.

The entire management of the Prisons of Scotland (including the appointment of the officers) and the control of the Prison Fund, to be placed in the hands of Government; a detailed account being presented every year to Parliament, showing how the money has been applied, the average number of prisoners in each Prison, the value of their productive labour, the clear average cost of each prisoner, and the balance for or against every Prison. (The directing body who may have the management of the Prisons under the arrangements proposed, would in all probability avail themselves of the assistance of the present local authorities, where the Prison is in a good state, if these should consent to continue their services.)

Fees to be abolished.

All Fees to be abolished.

Probable Yearly Expense of the Prisons under the proposed Arrangements.

On grounds, several of which I have already pointed out, I think it may reasonably be expected that, under the arrangements proposed, the current expenses would be small; indeed for them to be large would, I think, necessarily argue bad management, and such as under a good system of supervision and responsibility could scarcely exist. The necessary expenses of a prisoner are, with the exception of rent and salaries, trifling; for I have shown that he can be supplied with a plain but sufficient diet for 2½*d.* per day; and that he may be neatly clad for 10*s.* per year, or less than a halfpenny per day. The salaries are certainly heavy at present, but this arises very much from having so many separate establishments, instead of a few upon a large scale. This is at once shown by a reference to the Glasgow Bridewell, the greatest Prison in Scotland; for there, although the corps of officers is more efficient, without reference to the greater size of the place, than at any other Prison, the proportionate expense of salaries is unusually small, being equal, if divided among the average number of prisoners, to about 3*l.* per head. This sum, however, though comparatively small, is really high; but I have no doubt it will be considerably reduced on the enlargement of the Prison; and that the addition made to the salaries in consequence of the introduction of a great number of new prisoners will be found trifling compared with the total amount of salaries now paid at the Prisons which will then be superseded; such as the Glasgow and Greenock Gaols, &c.

Necessary expenses small.

Sources of economy.

Another source of economy will of course arise from the purchase of food and stores of different kinds in large quantities; while a great increase may be looked for in the receipts for productive labour, by bringing the prisoners near the labour-market, by setting those to work who are now idle, and by the gradual abandonment of the system of short imprisonment, by which, so soon as a prisoner has got into a good train, and begins to work with zeal and success, he is withdrawn from Prison, soon to lose what he has acquired.

Increase of productive labour.

Removal of prisoners.

Removal of Prisoners.—This, as far as I can foresee, is the only expense that can be increased by the changes proposed; and I am doubtful whether, under good arrangements, there will be any considerable increase even here, so expensive is the removal of prisoners under the present system, and so many are the journeys which are now performed, but which will then become unnecessary: for in the first place, as there is no organization at present, it is generally found necessary to send two officers to escort a single prisoner; and these often have to hire a gig or light cart; and it must sometimes happen that different escorts are travelling at the same time, towards the same Prison, along near and parallel roads; whereas, under the arrangements contemplated, the prisoners would be picked up one after another, and conveyed by one and the same escort; this single escort costing less than either of the two escorts on the present plan. Under the head "Perthshire" will be found a detailed account of the travelling expenses now incurred in conveying a prisoner from Alyth to Perth. The distance is only 22 miles, yet the cost is nearly 2*l.*

Present want of organization.

Carriages for prisoners.

Instead of proceeding on this expensive and isolated system, I should propose that each Penitentiary (and perhaps each of the principal local Prisons also) should be provided with a strong carriage, in which to fetch prisoners; these carriages to be something like those used in London for the same purpose, except that they should be divided in the inside into two rows of small cells (like sedan-chairs), with a passage running between them; so that the prisoners may all be kept separate and out of sight of each other, and yet be under the immediate inspection of an officer. Two or three officers, with a pair of strong horses, may in this way convey a dozen prisoners with more safety, and at but little more expense, than a single prisoner is now taken; and, as there would of course be communication by post informing the Governor of the Penitentiary where prisoners were waiting to be fetched, the carriage would make its round from time to time, and pick them up at the different stations. It should be remarked, too, that although under the new arrangements it will be necessary to convey a greater number of prisoners than is now the case, yet, if the projected improvements lead to the abandonment of the system of short and frequent commitments, no prisoner will have to travel so many times as at present, which (as far as it goes) will cause a reduction in the number of journeys. And, lastly, I may observe, that the three projected Penitentiaries will all be so situated as to be readily accessible both by land and by water, and that they will be near the masses of population. And the same may be said, in a less degree, of several of the most important of the local Prisons, such as those of Aberdeen and Dundee. The only important exceptions to this proximity are the towns of Edinburgh and Leith; but there is already easy communication between Glasgow and these places, both by road and canal, and this facility will probably soon be greatly increased by the construction of a railroad.

Diminution in number of journeys.

Proposed penitentiaries readily accessible.

It may then, I think, be fairly presumed that even the expense of conveying prisoners will not be greatly increased, while most other expenses will probably be much diminished; and that, therefore, the whole cost per head of prisoners in Scotland will become considerably less. Indeed, as respects the Glasgow Penitentiary (which will be the largest of the three), there is every ground for believing that the prisoners will soon earn their entire maintenance, including every kind of disbursement. It appears, therefore, that although there will probably be a considerable increase for a time in the number of persons in confinement in the country, little or no increase will take place, even in the first instance, in the current expenses (now amounting to about 14,000*l.* per annum), and that there will ultimately be a great reduction.

Present expense of prisons.

Probable Effects of the proposed changes.

The most important effect to be anticipated or hoped for is, of course, a diminution of crime. Powerful remote checks to crime will, I trust, be afforded; but an immediate one also may, I think, be looked for from the circumstance that the Sheriffs (local Judges in Scotland, and not at all corresponding with officers holding the same name in England) will no longer be deterred from sentencing to sufficient periods of confinement by the fear of exposing the offender to further corruption; and another check may be expected from the circumstance that the authorities in small places will not be prevented, as at present, from apprehending gipsies and other vagrants (the principal law-breakers in the rural districts) by a consideration that the whole expense of guarding and maintaining them would fall upon their particular burgh. After a time, the training in good habits, and the instruction in the means of earning an honest livelihood, which will go on in the Prisons, may be expected to produce a palpable effect on the amount of crime; for many of the children who now get into a course of crime, and who eventually become hardened offenders, are the offspring of bad or negligent parents, who have given them no education, and taught them no trade; and who have even, in many cases, as well by precept as by example, led them into the commission of crime. Such children can have little or no opportunity of doing well, even if they were so inclined; for, supposing them to be able to perform some kind of work, they have never acquired a character that would induce respectable people to employ them. But the habits of most of them are, from the circumstances under which they have been brought up, so bad, and they have obtained so little self-control, that they must be without the power as well as the will to be industrious and honest; and it would appear as idle to attempt to drive such children into good conduct by dint of mere punishment as by the same means to try to add to their stature. By a good system of training, however, especially if the offenders be placed under it at an early age, there is good ground for hoping that many may be cured and become respectable members of society. This object would be greatly facilitated by the establishment of a general House of Refuge, open to all who might chose to avail themselves of it, and which might serve as an intermediate station between a Prison and the world at large; where the inmates might learn the rudiments of agriculture, &c. (at the same time raising their own food), with a view to voluntary emigration to some of the colonies, where the necessaries of life can easily be procured, where they would be exposed to few temptations, and where they would be removed for ever from their former associates and from the scene of their crimes.

Remote checks to crime.

SCOTLAND.

House of Refuge.

Nothing has been more clearly shown in the course of my inquiries than that crime is, to a considerable extent, hereditary—crime appearing in this respect greatly to resemble pauperism; which, according to the evidence collected by the Poor Law Commissioners, often proceeds from father to son in a long line of succession. This circumstance is favourable for its gradual extinction. Indeed, if all the criminals in the present generation could be collected and placed in confinement—the young to be cured, and the old to pass the remainder of their days under control—the next generation would probably contain but few thieves. One of the most serious evils, perhaps, of the system of short confinements is, that it allows the perpetuation of the race of criminals. So long as a man is in prison he cannot, at any rate, become the father of future offenders; and as the greatest number of crimes is committed at that age at which the passions are most violent, this consideration is a further and important reason for long and unbroken periods of confinement.

Crime hereditary.

The saving in expense that is likely to arise has already been considered so far as the cost of Prisons and prisoners is concerned; but a great saving may also be looked for, after a time, both to the counties and to Government, by a reduction in the number of prosecutions; seeing that, under the present arrangements, every offender is generally prosecuted several times; short periods of imprisonment doing but little to interrupt a series of offences. A great saving, too, will probably take place, at no distant period, by a reduction in the number of offenders receiving sentence of transportation—a punishment which leads to great expenses, both in the conveyance of the culprit to the distant region of Australia, and in his control and management when there.

Saving in expense of prosecutions.

Saving in expense of transportation.

Owing to the excellent moral condition of the people of Scotland generally, and to the admirable system of administering criminal justice, the results of any great improvement in prison discipline (the want of which at present paralizes, to a considerable extent, the operation of the latter, and conceals the full existence of the former) would, in all probability, be peculiarly striking; while, at the same time, the country presents unusual facilities for carrying it into effect: for, in the first place, it is admitted on all hands that, with few exceptions, the present Prisons are in a bad state—bad in construction, and bad in conduct and management—and that a change of some kind must be made. The Prisons, too, are, most of them, old, so that comparatively little has been expended upon them for many years—a mere trifle compared with what has been laid out in England. Moreover, the mode in which the expenses of the Prisons are at present chiefly paid creates great dissatisfaction; falling, as the burden does, on a particular class. Again, the number of offenders being small, there is no necessity for going to any great expense in providing Prison accommodation; and there fortunately happen to be two large public buildings (Fort George, and the Military Prison at Perth), one of which is at present turned to no account, and the other only partially occupied, which are suitable for the purposes required; while the good construction of the Glasgow Bridewell, the readiness with which it can be enlarged, and its proximity to one of the greatest labour-markets in the world, afford easy means of converting that building into a third Penitentiary.

The ease of communication, too, in Scotland, owing to the country being nearly sea-girt and much indented, presents unusual facilities for placing its Prisons under one general and combined system; while it, at the same time, increases the necessity for combination; for so long as this ease of moving from place to place exists, it is almost vain for any district to make an isolated attempt to banish crime.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

REPORTS ON SEPARATE PRISONS.

[I have judged it most convenient to arrange these Reports, generally, in the order in which I visited the prisons, partly on account of the similarity which is often to be found in the circumstances of Prisons in the same district.—By reference to the table of contents, however, any particular Report may readily be found.]

KIRRIEMUIR, FORFARSHIRE.

Population about 4,000.

(Visited July 19th, 1836.)

Kirriemuir.

This prison consists of a single vaulted room, on the basement floor of the town-house, and is situated in the middle of the town. The spot appears to be healthy. The room is about 16 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 8 feet high; its cubical contents, therefore, is about 1,500 feet. The prison is now tolerably secure, but there has been much trouble in rendering it so; for, being the prison of a burgh of barony, the old law requires that it should be open to inspection from without, probably as a security against secret and unjust imprisonment. One consequence of the communication with the street is that a prisoner is sometimes supplied with whisky.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of Lord Douglas, the superior of the barony.

Present State of the Prison.—The prison is moderately clean and moderately dry, but it is ill ventilated. It is warmed, when necessary, by an open fire; and there must be some danger of the loose straw which is used as bedding taking fire; but the building itself is safe from fire, being built entirely of stone.

State of the Prisoners.—There were not any prisoners at the time of my visit, and in fact the place is generally empty, the average number of prisoners being equal only to one during a fifth part of the year. Offenders under serious charges are sent to Forfar, which is only five miles off.

Food.—Four-pence a day, paid in money.

Clothing and Bedding.—No clothing allowed. Loose straw is given as bedding.

Discipline.—There is nothing beyond simple confinement.

Offences and Punishments.—The usual offences are, getting drunk, breaking the furniture, and attempting to escape. The period of the prisoner's confinement is sometimes lengthened; but generally speaking no punishment is inflicted—corporal punishment never.

Miscellaneous.—Debtors are never confined here. Visits and letters are allowed, the gaoler being present when any person is admitted.

General Observations.—The prison is considered to form part of the police establishment, and no separate account is kept of the expenses; they must, however, be trifling.

Besides this prison, there are two small cells, used by the police. No one is ever confined in them, however, for more than one night. They are made of wood, and stand in one of the rooms of the court-house. They are neither well ventilated nor very secure.

The Local Police Act has been adopted in this town, during the last 18 months, with great advantage. The total cost it entails is only about 100*l.* a year, while the population of the town is about 4,000.

The corps of police consists of a superintendent and two subordinate officers. The superintendent, who was formerly a serjeant in the artillery, is said to discharge his duties with great intelligence and efficiency.

Before the Police Act was adopted the town is said to have been in a very turbulent state; but it is now generally quiet, and few offences are committed. If the roving tinkers could be got rid of, and about a dozen other troublesome fellows removed, little would probably arise to disturb the order of the town.

The town appears to be much indebted to the baron bailie, who acts as magistrate under the Police Act, and to the procurator fiscal. The former, as usual, renders his services gratuitously; and these services are much enhanced by the circumstance of his belonging to the legal profession. The procurator fiscal also, in this instance, acts gratuitously, in consequence of the poverty of the place.

BRECHIN, FORFARSHIRE.

Visited 20th July, 1837. (Second inspection.)

Brechin.

On my arrival at this town I found that great alterations were in contemplation in the gaol, public attention having, I was told, been directed to the subject, in consequence of the bad report which I had been obliged to make. I advised, however, against any expensive changes, seeing that the present site is very objectionable, and, moreover, that all matters relating to prisons and prison discipline in Scotland are at present unsettled. But it appeared on examination, that the prison might be put into a sufficiently good state to be used, till a new one was provided, for about 40*l.*; and the magistrates determined, provided the Council gave their sanction, to expend this sum in the way I suggested. I find, however, by a letter dated 12th January, 1837, that although the matter has been quite determined on, and the work contracted for, the alterations have not yet been made, owing partly to the continued bad state of the weather.

Brechin.

MONTROSE, FORFARSHIRE.

Visited 21st July, 1837. (Second inspection.)

Montrose.

I proposed various changes in the management of the prison of this town, and these changes, having been adopted by the magistrates, have been carried into effect. By a letter from Mr. Crawford, Provost of Montrose, dated 14th January, 1837, I learn that separation is now enforced as far as possible; that visits to prisoners are much restricted; that personal cleanliness is enforced; that the prisoners are encouraged to work; that they are required to get up earlier in the morning; that a plain dietary has been substituted for a money-allowance, and all supplies of food from without put a stop to; that the female prisoners are placed under the charge of the keeper's wife; and that a chaplain has been engaged, to give the prisoners moral, mental, and religious instruction.

BERVIE, KINCARDINESHIRE.

Population about 1,100.

(Visited 22d July, 1836.)

Bervie.

The prison of Bervie was formerly used as a regular place of confinement both for criminals and debtors, but it was condemned about 12 years ago by the courts of session and justiciary, and it now serves as a lock-up house only. There are two rooms, one of which (and the only one that is tolerably secure) is built of stone, and vaulted over. They are on the basement-floor of the town-house, which stands in the middle of the town. Their dimensions are nearly as follow, viz.—

| | Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. | Cubical Content. Feet. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Vaulted room . . . . | 15 | 8 | 5½ | 650 |
| Other room . . . . . | 15 | 15 | 7 | 1,550 |

The rooms are dry, but dirty. There is an open fire-place in one of them, which is used sometimes in winter.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit; and there seldom is a prisoner.—Prisoners detained for more than one night are sent to Stonehaven, the county-town, which is 10 miles distant.

A short time before the prison was condemned as a regular place of confinement a prisoner made his escape, and in doing so he stole and carried off the very bars that were placed in the window to secure his detention!

The population of Bervie is about 1,100. Few offences are committed. Many of the inhabitants are hand-loom weavers, and until lately their earnings were scanty, and they were ill off. Their condition is now improved, although their wages are still low. It is believed that most of the inhabitants of Bervie are able to read easily.

STONEHAVEN, KINCARDINESHIRE.

(Visited 22d and 23d July, 1836.)

Stonehaven.

This is a small prison, forming the lowest story of the county court-house, which stands at the foot of a hill on the outskirts of the town. The situation is rather damp, owing, probably, to the neighbourhood of the hill.

There are four cells for ordinary use, and one (which is dark) for refractory prisoners. The dimensions are as follow:—

| Cells. | Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. | Height. In. | Cubical Contents. Feet. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 . . . . . | 12 | 12 | 7 | 3 | 1,050 |
| 1 . . . . . | 12 | 11½ | | | 1,000 |
| 1 . . . . . | 12 | 10 | | | 850 |
| 1 . . . . . | 17 | 12 | | | 1,500 |
| Cell for refractory . . . | 12 | 7 | | | 600 |

The cells open into a kind of lobby, in which a prisoner is sometimes allowed to walk. There is no airing-yard; the propriety, however, of converting a small court behind the prison into one has been sometimes considered. I have, however, advised against this change at present, and against other alterations which have been in contemplation (particularly the erection of an iron railing in front of the prison), as I think it very doubtful whether the prison can, by any alteration, be rendered a good place of confinement.

The place is moderately secure.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the sheriff of the county; but all expenses connected with it must be passed by the heritors.

Stonehaven.

Present State of the Prison.—Very clean, but not well ventilated. Three of the cells are warmed by open fires, but there is no provision for warming the other two. The cells being built entirely of stone, little or no danger arises from the open fires.

State of the Prisoners.—There were three at the time of my visit, viz., two men and a woman; which is one less than the average number. One of the men, a Highlander, was rather dirty; the other man and the woman were clean. The means of insuring personal cleanliness are not sufficient.

Health.—Generally good. Upon the whole, however, the prisoners suffer in health from their confinement. This the surgeon attributes principally to the occasional dampness of the cells, and to the want of occupation for the prisoners. Ill effects, too, arise from the want of a personal examination of each prisoner on his admittance. The surgeon stated that the itch had sometimes been communicated in consequence. There has been no death in the gaol for several years; but a prisoner was liberated last year on account of illness. No sick-list has been kept. There is no particular provision for the sick; but one of the cells would do tolerably well as a sick-room.

Food.—Five-pence a day, paid in money, is the allowance for food. Out of this, however, the prisoner has to pay for his own fuel. Supplies of food from without are permitted.

Clothing.—There is no regular allowance of clothing, but a supply is sometimes given on an order from the sheriff.

Bedding.—Loose straw, and five single blankets.

Discipline.—There is nothing beyond simple confinement, and the partial separation of the prisoners; there being neither work nor instruction. No chaplain is engaged, but the parish clergyman voluntarily attends once a month to perform religious service. There is no regular provision for supplying the prisoners with bibles, but I was assured that whenever a prisoner asks for one it is always given. The gaoler, too, stated that he sometimes lent the prisoners other books belonging to himself.

Offences and Punishments.—The conduct of the prisoners is stated to be generally good. Of the offences which do occur, the most common are fighting, injuring the building, using obscene language, and stealing from each other. Punishment is seldom inflicted; occasionally, however, a prisoner is put in the cell for the refractory. Corporal punishment is never employed.

Female Prisoners.—They are kept separate from male prisoners, but their treatment is the same. The keeper's wife, who is apparently a good-natured and intelligent woman, attends to them to some extent, but there is no regular provision for female superintendence. The number of female prisoners, however, is very small.

Debtors.—Their allowance for aliment is commonly 9*d.* a day, they, as usual, providing their own clothing and bedding. There is no other difference between the treatment of debtors and criminals. The number of debtors is very small.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits to prisoners are allowed in the presence of the gaoler, or of one of his family. Smoking tobacco is permitted. There is no insane prisoner.

Officer.—There is only one officer, the gaoler, who lives in the prison. He appears to be active and acute, and to be better qualified than might be expected from the amount of his salary, which (in addition to house-room, and a fee of 1*s.* with every debtor), is only 16*l.* a year.

Surgeon.—He has the the medical care of all the sick prisoners, whether criminals or debtors. He attends when sent for.

Accounts.—The accounts are kept by the procurator fiscal for the county. They consist of a register of criminals, a description of their persons, a register of debtors, and an account of disbursements.

Average cost of each criminal prisoner during the year, about 16*l.* 10*s.* Daily cost, about 11*d.*

General Observations.—Comparatively little effect can be produced by the prison on its present system. I am satisfied, by the inquiries I made, that, as respects food, the prisoners are better off than many honest people out of prison.

The house of correction at Aberdeen is made use of, to some extent, for prisoners from Kincardineshire; the commissioners who have the management of that prison consenting to receive such prisoners at the rate of 6*d.* a day each.

---

October, 1836.—By a letter from the procurator fiscal, I learn that new rules have been drawn up embodying some recommendations I made for the improvement of the system of management; but that these rules can scarcely be said to have come into operation "for want of prisoners." The money-allowance has been abolished, and a plain cheap diet is to be substituted. Fires in the cells are to be discontinued, except in cold weather. The persons and clothes of the prisoners are to undergo a thorough examination at the time of admittance. The prisoners are to be required to wash themselves every day; and to insure this being done, they are not to receive their breakfast until they have obeyed the regulation. Work is to be found for the prisoners; the untried being allowed one-half of their clear earnings.

---

State of Crime in Kincardineshire.—There appears to be but very little crime in this county. Of the offences which are committed, the most common are assaults and petty thefts. The latter generally take place either under the excitement of partial intoxication, or are committed with a view of getting the means of indulgence in drunkenness. The offences of smuggling and private distillation have nearly gone out of existence; although I was assured that, till within the last few years, no person, whatever might be his rank, ever thought of buying other than illicit spirits.

Most of the offences committed at the present time are on the part of non-residents. The offenders are observed to be generally more ignorant than others in the same class of life.

Causes affecting Crime in this District, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is but little drunkenness at Stonehaven.

State of the Police.—Feeble and insufficient. There is a subscription in the town to pay a constable to look after vagrants and beggars, with which the place is much infested; but this man and the gaoler are the only police officers.

Condition of the People.—There is a good deal of comfort among the people generally, but some of them (chiefly fishermen, whose earnings are precarious) are often in a low state of poverty.

Education.—Comparatively good. Almost all the inhabitants, except some of the fishermen and their families, are said to be able to read easily; and I learned that, in fact, there is a general habit of reading among them. There are two subscription libraries, which are much used by the labouring classes; and there are several other libraries, some of which are used by the poorer classes.

ABERDEEN BRIDEWELL.

(Visited several times between the 7th and 13th November, 1835, and between the 23d and 30th July, 1836.)

Aberdeen Bridewell.

The building is well situated. It is placed on the outskirts of the town, on the western side. The soil is gravelly and dry. There are many defects in the construction, but it is better adapted for its purposes than the generality of prisons, even those of most recent erection. Here, as elsewhere there has been too great a sacrifice to architectural appearance. The land occupied is equal to about two acres and a half, and is surrounded by a wall, the prison standing in the central part. The bridewell was built in the year 1809, and cost between 11,000*l.* and 12,000*l.* There are in the whole 100 cells, all of the same size, and there are two infirmaries. There is also a house for the governor, forming part of the general building, and there is a porter's lodge, &c. The dimensions of the cells and infirmaries are as follow:—

| | Length. | | Breadth. | | Height. | | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Ft. | In. | Ft. | In. | Ft. | In. | Ft. |
| Cells, 100 . . . . . | 8 | 0 | 7 | 0 | 7 | 8 | 430 |
| Infirmaries, 2 . . . . | 26 | 6 | 15 | 6 | 8 | 3 | |

Security.—The prison, though tolerably secure, is not perfectly so. The stones which form the floors of the cells are small, and can easily be loosened, and the cells are arched over with bricks instead of stone. The outer wall, too, is only 12 feet high, and could in some places be easily got over. The last successful attempt at escape happened eight years ago. It was made by a man who, on account of illness, real or feigned, had been allowed to walk in the grounds by order of the surgeon. There was another attempt, which was nearly successful, about five years ago. One of the prisoners, after being locked up for the night, forced off part of his bedstead, which was of iron, and using the fragment as a tool, made an opening in the door of his cell, through which he crept. He then got up part of the floor of the passage near his cell, and let himself down into the story beneath, and, in like manner, got down to the next story, which is on the ground-floor; and placing himself by the prison door, he stood ready to force his way out, when the turnkey (who did not reside within the prison) should come in the morning to open it. The turnkey, however, grappled with the prisoner, and the governor, hearing his calls for assistance, came to his help, and after a severe struggle, the prisoner was forced back into confinement. There is now but little danger of a similar occurrence, as a watchman is on duty throughout the night, and hammocks are being substituted for the iron bedsteads.

The prison affords the means of complete separation of prisoner from prisoner, of employing the prisoners in productive labour, and of inspecting them.

Jurisdiction.—The management of the bridewell is in the hands of 14 Commissioners, appointed under a Local Act of Parliament. They consist of the Members of Parliament for the county and city, the sheriff and convener of the county, the provost of the city, the convener of the incorporated trades of the city, four justices of the peace for the county, elected triennially by the freeholders and justices of the peace, and four burgesses of the city, elected triennially by the magistrates and city council.

Present State of the Prison.—The prison is clean, dry, tolerably well ventilated, and of moderate temperature. Half of the cells are heated by steam, conveyed by cast-iron pipes. The remaining cells, which till lately were used as night-cells only, have no provision for artificial heat, except what little is obtained from the gas-lights which are now burned in them. The great thickness of the walls, however, must prevent the temperature ever being very low.

State of the Prisoners.

Number.—The present number of prisoners (July 30, 1836) is 60 (45 males and 15 females), which is about the usual number. The average number last year was 61, the greatest number 70 (53 males and 23 females), and the least, 52 (41 males and 11 females).

Cleanliness.—The prisoners are tolerably clean. They wash themselves, however, only once a day, which, although not frequently enough, is as often as in most prisons. Orders have now been given for the prisoners to wash themselves in the evening as well as in the morning.

Health.—Good. Upon the whole, the health of the prisoners appears to improve during the time they are confined, their bodily functions acquiring greater vigour and regularity of action. The most prevalent diseases are itch and venereal complaints, contracted, of course, before entering the prison. It is several years since there was any epidemic disease. Some of the prisoners, especial butchers, and others accustomed to eat a good deal of meat, and those, also, who are in the habit of spending much of their time in the open air, suffer in health ; from their confinement probably, and from the loss of animal food. No other connection can be traced between the illness that occurs and the diet, and other circumstances of the prison. A sick-list has been kept from the time of my first visit (in November last), and when opened, entries were made from recollection, for the two previous months. In this list are recorded the name, age, and usual occupation of the invalid, the day on which he became ill, the nature and probable cause of his disease, the medical treatment adopted, and the result ; also the day on which his name is struck off the sick-list, and the number of days he has been withdrawn from his work. The number of entries during the last eleven months is 29 ; and the number of days during which prisoners have been off work on account of illness is equal to 266 for an individual ; which gives an average of about five days in the year for each prisoner. There have been two deaths during the present year ; although the whole number of deaths from the time the bridewell was first opened (in 1809) is but four. Of the two prisoners who died lately (both of whom were females), one entered the prison with a broken constitution, and expired a few days after her arrival, and the other was an old woman, more than 90 years of age, who at different periods had passed the greater part of the last 20 years of her life in the bridewell.

There are two infirmaries ; but it very rarely happens that either of them is used, the prisoner's own cell generally serving as a sick-room.

Food.—The prisoners are divided, as regards food, into five classes, depending in some degree on age and industry. Most of them generally stand in the second class. The following is the Dietary :—

| Classes. | BREAKFAST. | DINNER. | SUPPER. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1st . . | Three ounces of oatmeal made into porridge, and half an imperial pint of butter-milk. | Two ounces of barley, made into a chopin (an English quart) of soup, thickened with vegetables, and 5 ounces of bread. | None. |
| 2d . . | Same as above. | Same as above. | Half an imperial pint of milk, and 5 ounces of bread. |
| 3d . . | Six ounces of oatmeal, made into a chopin of porridge, and an imperial pint of milk. | Four ounces of barley made into a Scottish pint (two English quarts) of soup, thickened with vegetables, and 5 ounces of bread. | An imperial pint of milk, and 5 ounces of bread. |
| 4th . . | Same as Class 3d. | Same as Class 3d. | An imperial pint of milk, and 10 ounces of bread. |
| 5th . . | Same as Class 3d. | Same quantity of soup as Class 3d, with 10 ounces of bread. | Same as Class 4th. |

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Aberdeen Bridewell.

On Sundays the prisoners in the first and second class get half a pound of potatoes made into a chopin of soup, and four ounces of good meat for dinner; or the same quantity of potatoes and four ounces of salt fish boiled together. The prisoners in the three highest classes get double these allowances. Prisoners sentenced to be fed on bread and water only have 15 or 20 ounces of bread per day, according to their behaviour and the length of their imprisonment.

The average daily cost of the food, including cooking, &c., is about three-pence per head. No supplies, in addition to the ordinary prison diet, are allowed from friends or associates outside the prison.

Clothing.—The whole of the clothing is supplied out of the funds of the Bridewell, the prisoner's own dress being taken off on his entrance, and restored to him when he leaves. The following is the prison dress:—

For males—jacket, trowsers, shirt, shoes, bonnet, and apron.
For females—gown, shift, petticoat, shoes, flannel cap, and apron.

The clothing appears to be sufficient, and of strong and good quality. The average yearly cost of each prisoner's clothing is about 8*s*.

Bedding.—Alike for all, viz., one double blanket, one sheet, a rug, a straw mattress, and a hammock. The bedding is very clean. The allowance of blankets may appear insufficient, but I received no complaint from the prisoners; and it should be observed, that a less quantity of bed-clothing is required with a hammock than with a bedstead.

Discipline.

Allotment of Time.—The prisoners rise in summer at a quarter before six, and in winter at a quarter before seven, and are allowed a quarter of an hour for dressing, washing, &c. After this they begin their work, the quantity of which is apportioned so as to occupy them till eight in the evening, allowing an interval of an hour for breakfast, and another hour for dinner. At eight o'clock they have their supper, and after that they are at liberty to go to bed when they choose. The appointed times for rising, &c. appear to be punctually observed.

Labour.—The prisoners work twelve hours in summer and eleven hours in winter. The chief employment is picking oakum, though some are engaged in work of a more productive kind, as weaving, making mats, &c. There is a good deal of difficulty in providing other than the simplest kinds of labour for many of the prisoners, owing to the general shortness of the period of imprisonment and to the circumstance that most of the prisoners have no knowledge of a trade when they first come to prison. Still, I think, more might be done than is at present accomplished, and some steps have been taken with a view to amendment in this particular.

Separation.—When I was last at Aberdeen many of the prisoners were associated two and two, working together in one cell by day, and sleeping together in another cell by night. I recommended a change in this arrangement, and the commissioners of the bridewell readily adopted this and some other suggestions, and ordered that the prisoners should be separated, one half to occupy the night-cells continually, and the other the day-cells; and in order that they might have room to work, hammocks (which are removed during the day) were substituted for the fixed bedsteads. Since that time, excepting for a short period, when the prison was unusually full and when the number of hammocks was insufficient, the prisoners have, for several months, been in a state of complete insulation; and the commissioners having now ordered additional hammocks, I trust that the evil even of temporary association will not again occur.

Instruction.—The provision for instruction has hitherto been quite insufficient. A clergyman, who has many other duties, has been in the habit of attending five hours each week to perform religious exercises with the prisoners in their separate cells, and a young man has attended three hours each week to give instruction in reading and writing, which is all that has hitherto been done by way of instruction: but the commissioners of the bridewell, and the provost and bailies of the town, have, with readiness and liberality, acceded to my recommendation to engage a competent person to give the whole of his time to the elementary instruction of the prisoners in the bridewell and gaol, the chaplain attending as usual, in addition.

Punishments.—There is but little punishment in the bridewell—on an average less than one case per day. The punishments usually consist of the stoppage of part of the food, and occasionally of confinement in a dark cell; sometimes, too, though rarely, the prisoner is put in irons. Corporal punishment is never inflicted.

Treatment of the Prisoners.—Apparently kind. I received no complaints.

Effects of the Discipline.—Good order is observed throughout the prison, and the habits of the prisoners must certainly be improved during their confinement. The prisoners appear generally to feel the justice of their punishment, and not to entertain any ill-will towards the officers. Most of them look upon their work as an alleviation of punishment.

There are no untried prisoners or debtors, the prison never being used as a gaol.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer to take charge of them. A female officer is about to be engaged at the gaol; and it would be a great advantage if the female prisoners in the bridewell could be sent there, to be under her care; male prisoners coming in their stead from the gaol to the bridewell. The female prisoners are treated in every way like the males, except that they are never put in the highest class for food.

SCOTLAND.

Aberdeen Bridewell.

Miscellaneous.—Visits are allowed once a month, on an order from a magistrate. The prisoners go down, one at a time, and speak to their friends through a grated door opening into the area round the prison. Letters may pass at any time, subject to the governor's inspection. Smoking tobacco is not allowed. There is no regular provision for enabling a prisoner to return home on his liberation; but the governor is empowered to give him a small sum of money if he think fit. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—There are five regular officers, viz., the governor, two turnkeys, a watchman, and a porter. There are also a chaplain (with an assistant) and a surgeon. The governor and one of the turnkeys reside within the prison, and the porter's lodge is also within the grounds. The governor appears to be well qualified for his duties; indeed, much more so than could be expected, considering the limited scale of the prison, and the consequent moderate remuneration afforded. He is active, intelligent, well informed, and of a kind, though firm, disposition.

None of the officers receive any fees in addition to their salaries. Prisoners are never employed as officers.

Accounts.—There is an unusually comprehensive set of accounts, and they are kept with admirable neatness and perspicuity. The only thing to be regretted is, that the present complex system of assessment for the maintenance of prisoners should render such a number of accounts necessary. The following is a list of the accounts, all of which are kept by the governor:—

1st. Alphabetical List of the Prisoners—with the dates of their different commitments, and the names of the courts by which tried.

2d. Daily progressive state of Prisoners—Showing the dates of commitments and liberations; the names and ages of prisoners; how often committed; by whom committed; whence committed; offences; sentences; numbers from "City," "County," "Courts-Martial," and "Circuit Courts of Justiciary;" number of males and females under 17, and above 17 years of age; dates of previous commitments; and state of accounts at liberation.

3d. Prisoners' Earnings—In which an account is opened for each prisoner, showing the nature, quantity, and value of the work performed by him every month.

4th. Town Journal—In which the names of the prisoners from the city are inserted, with the expense of their food, and the amount of their respective earnings monthly.

5th. County Journal—Similar to No. 4.

(At the end of each month the average number of prisoners is shown, the cost of the provisions during the month, and the average daily expense of each prisoner's food.)

In addition to the foregoing, small books are kept for the different manufacturers who send work to the bridewell, which are all checked monthly with the prisoners' work-tickets, and transferred to the proper accounts.

Two portions of No. 2 are circulated monthly amongst the Commissioners, with an abstract of the expense of food and amount of earnings, and a statement showing how the different prisoners are employed.

General Observations.—Now that the principle of complete separation has been carried into effect, I consider the management decidedly good; and it will, of course, be yet better when the new provision for instruction has come into operation. Still, no very decisive effect can be looked for, so long as the bulk of the prisoners are committed for such short periods as at present. The average period of imprisonment does not exceed 80 days; and that system of discipline, whether in or out of prison, must indeed be admirable, and far superior to anything that human talent has yet devised, which can, in so short a time, eradicate bad habits and create good ones.

It is not possible to say to what extent the fear of this prison has hitherto acted upon the criminal population of the district; but it is believed that, in consequence of the recent changes, the deterring effect is increasing. During the last year there were 120 re-commitments.

It is much to be regretted that two separate prisons have been built at Aberdeen. A single prison, large enough to receive all the prisoners, would have been much less expensive in the original construction, and much less costly in manangement. One governor, one set of accounts, one contract for the purchase of food, and one arrangement for providing the prisoners with useful labour, would have sufficed. Even under present circumstances it would, in my opinion, be an improvement to place the two prisons under one governor, and assimilate the arrangements as far as possible. In that prison in which the governor did not reside, however, there should be an officer superior to an ordinary turnkey.

January, 1837.—The following are extracts from a letter received from Mr. Watson, sheriff-substitute of Aberdeenshire, and one of the commissioners for the management of the bridewell, showing which of my last recommendations have been carried into effect.

"1st. Forty additional hammocks have been procured, and now every prisoner has a separate bed and a separate cell.

"2d. One hundred foot-mats have been made out of old bed-mats, and they tend greatly to the comfort of the prisoners.

"3d. The hour of shutting-up in summer is to be eight, as usual; but in May, June, July, and August, work is to commence at five in the morning instead of six. [This is a modification of what I had proposed, which was for the prisoners to go to bed at nine instead of eight, rising, as at present, at six.]

"4th. The commissioners and the magistrates have appointed a teacher at a salary of 50*l.* He is to give seven hours' attendance daily between the bridewell and the gaol. He has only been employed about ten days; but both Mr. Chalmers and Mr. Cockburn (the two governors) speak highly of him, and say that the prisoners appear to value his instructions.

"The commissioners have not raised the walls near the entrance. For some reason, which I forget, they thought it inexpedient to do so; but I have no doubt they will soon consider it proper to render the grounds more secure, as two prisoners who were employed at out-door work lately made their escape, but in what way it is not ascertained.

"I am much pleased with the alterations that have been made, which, in my opinion, are all decided improvements; and I have no doubt that good effects will soon be apparent."

State of the City and County of Aberdeen as respects Crime.

Amount of Crime.—Less apparently than the average amount in other districts which are equal to it in population. Notwithstanding the increase of population in this county there are fewer crimes of great magnitude than formerly. This applies particularly to the most heinous of all offences—murder. Another kind of offence—that of uttering forged bank-notes, which was once common here, has wholly disappeared; although the circulation of paper money (including one-pound notes) appears to be at least quite as great at the present time as at any previous period. There is another offence, however, which has come into existence of late years, namely, robberies by farm-servants, committed on each other. It is now a common practice among the farmers in this neighbourhood (most of them, I believe, holding small farms only) to hire young unmarried men as labourers, and to lodge them in out-houses called bothies; and it is after the men have received their wages (which they generally put in their boxes in the bothy) that these robberies take place. Under the system of bothies, also, the offence of bastardy has increased among farm-servants. No decided change appears to have taken place latterly as regards petty offences; but, upon the whole, I am inclined to believe, that the number even of these has decreased, when compared with the amount of population.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Aberdeen Bridewell.

Among other causes which have acted beneficially on the moral character of the inhabitants of this county (and the same observation will apply to the inhabitants of most other parts of Scotland) may be mentioned that measure of the legislature which, by reducing the premium on smuggling and illicit distillation, has caused the downfal of a nursery for crime. A similar observation may be made respecting the practice of stealing dead bodies, which used to be common here as elsewhere.

Usual state of Prisoners when they enter the Aberdeen Bridewell.

Age.—Generally from 15 to 30.

Drunkenness.—The prisoners appear to be decidedly more addicted to drunkenness than persons generally in the same class of life.

Knowledge of a Trade, &c.—Comparatively few know a trade, or have any regular means of getting a livelihood.

Character of Parents.—Where known, generally bad.

Intelligence, Education, and Knowledge.—Inferior to people in the same rank of life. Not more than one-half of the prisoners are able to read easily; whereas it is estimated that among the poor classes generally about five in six can read easily. This estimate, however, can be looked upon as some approximation to accuracy.

To what extent Inhabitants of the District.—At present about five-sixths of the prisoners are inhabitants of the district. This proportion, however, is greater than usual.

Causes affecting Crime in this District, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is much drunkenness in Aberdeen, although not more, it is believed (in proportion to the population), than formerly; and certainly much less among the richer classes. All whom I have had an opportunity of consulting, connected with the administration of justice in Aberdeen, consider drunkenness the cause of the greatest part of the offences.

State of the Police.—Much improved of late, and now vigilant. Till within the last seven years the police establishment was quite insufficient. It is now, however, on a good footing, although the number of men employed, especially in the day-time, might probably still be increased with advantage.

Condition of the People.—Aberdeen partakes of the general prosperity of the country; and though the wages earned by some classes of the community are still low, it is believed that there are few, if any, families who are at the same time industrious and tolerably sober and provident, and who, nevertheless, are unable to procure the necessaries and some of the comforts of life.

Education.—Improved, though still in an unsatisfactory state. Public efforts are now making for increasing the provision for popular education. Considerable effect, too, is expected in the county generally from the operation of the munificent bequest of the late Mr. Dick, amounting to upwards of 100,000*l.*, the interest of which is to be applied "to encourage active schoolmasters, and gradually to elevate the literary character of the parochial schoolmasters and schools" in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, and Elgin. The trustees of this fund, who possess large discretionary powers, appear to be discharging their duties with great zeal, and acting upon enlightened principles. There has not, however, yet been sufficient time for any marked effect to be produced; and it should be observed, that the town of Aberdeen itself, together with a few others of large size, is excepted from any participation in the bequest.

Miscellaneous.—More than 3,000*l.* have been subscribed for establishing in Aberdeen a house of refuge for the destitute, and active measures are taking for opening one without delay*. It is hoped, also, that a savings' bank, under the Act of last year, will be shortly opened.

OLD ABERDEEN.

(Visited 30th July, 1836.)

Old Aberdeen.

The prison at Old Aberdeen is a mere lock-up house, and consists of a single room (built of stone), 9 feet long, 7 feet broad, and about 8 feet high. It is tolerably secure, dry, and well ventilated. There are no means of warming it, but the walls are thick, and no one is ever confined in it more than a single night.

As is generally the case in small prisons, the window opens upon the public street; and as the room is on the ground-floor, a constant communication can go on with persons on the outside.

---

* This house of refuge was opened some months ago, and is going on tolerably well.—January, 1837.

The short distance of Old Aberdeen from New Aberdeen (about a mile) makes the inconvenience arising from the want of a good lock-up house much less than it otherwise would be. Still there would be an advantage in having a good small prison here, in which persons might be confined for a short time.

OLD MELDRUM, ABERDEENSHIRE.

Population about 1,000.

(Visited 2d August, 1836.)

Old Meldrum.

The small prison of Old Meldrum consists of a single room on the ground-floor of the town-house, which is 10 feet long, 10 feet broad, and about 6½ feet high. It is built of stone, and has a vaulted ceiling. An escape was made about five years ago, by means of tools which were handed in at the window; but the place is now tolerably secure, although the window is as much exposed as formerly. Adjoining this room is another of larger size, which is used whenever there are a male and female prisoner at the same time.

Old Meldrum is a burgh of barony, and the prison is under the jurisdiction of Mr. Urquhart, the superior of the burgh.

The prison is remarkably clean, and the bed and everything about it in the neatest order, doing much credit to the keeper*.

There is no fire-place in the room that is usually occupied, but there is one in the adjoining room. Both rooms are dry and tolerably well ventilated.

I found no one in confinement; and I was informed that the place was not used generally more than about 20 or 30 times a year, and then chiefly for vagrants.

Amount of Crime at Old Meldrum.—Much diminished, and now but little. There are fewer thefts than formerly, and illicit intercourse between the sexes is much less common. This neighbourhood has been much relieved lately by the transportation of two notorious thieves, against one of whom there were no fewer than 11 separate charges of robbery.

Causes affecting Crime at Old Meldrum, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Certainly decreased among the farmers and others of the richer class; and probably somewhat decreased also among the poorer classes, although these are still a good deal addicted to it.

State of the Police.—There is but one officer, namely, the man who has the care of the prison. He appears, however, to be intelligent and active, and to be quite equal to the performance of the duties of both offices.

Administration of Justice.—There is a want of a resident magistrate here. The clergyman of the parish is in the commission; but he said that it was with great reluctance that he ever acted, as he considered the exercise of the magisterial power calculated to weaken his influence as a pastor.

Condition of the People.—Improved, and now, upon the whole, tolerably good.

Education.—Extended latterly. Most of the inhabitants can now read easily.

INVERURY, ABERDEENSHIRE.

Population about 1,500.

(Visited 2d August, 1836.)

Inverury.

The prison of Inverury is on the ground-floor of the town-house, which, as usual, is in the central part of the town, with an open area in front. There are two rooms, one of which, however, is used only in case of need. It is sometimes necessary to confine prisoners in the town-hall also.

The room generally employed is built entirely of stone, and is 11 feet long, 7 feet wide, and about 8 feet in average height. Until the present magistrates came into office the place was insecure, the window being quite exposed to the street, and the floor unpaved; and a prisoner made his escape a few years since, by making a hole under the door. The floor is now paved with large stones; and communication from without, though still practicable to some extent, is rendered much more difficult.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the provost and bailies of the burgh.—I found the place only moderately clean. It is, however, dry, and tolerably well ventilated. There is no provision for heating the room which is generally used, but the walls are thick, and the temperature can seldom be very low.

There were no prisoners at the time of my visit.—Loose straw and three rugs are allowed for bedding.

Amount of Crime at Inverury.—Little, and much less than formerly, when the increase of population is taken into account. The offences now committed are generally by people attending the markets, and almost always proceed from drunkenness.

---

* I was afterwards informed that the keeper's merit in this matter was of small amount, and that the good state of the prison was the result of a manœuvre; for that having heard that I had arrived in the village, he set to work with his mops and brooms, and brought things into the admirable condition in which I found them, contriving that I should receive a message in the mean time to the effect, that he had gone out to work in the country but had been sent for.

Inverury.

Causes affecting Crime at Inverury, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Diminished. It is stated that there is but little drunkenness now, except on the market-days, and that it is then chiefly on the part of strangers.

Police.—Not in a good state: an active and intelligent police-officer is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Speaking generally, the condition of the people appears to be tolerably good. Inverury is increasing in size and wealth, owing to the establishment of an export trade in corn, a considerable quantity of grain being now sent from Aberdeenshire to London *.

Education.—It is stated that most of the inhabitants can read easily, and that there is in fact a good deal of reading among them, particularly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. The instruction of the children, however, at the present time appears to be in an inefficient state.

The inhabitants of Inverury appear to be very orderly and industrious. The provost remarked that the place is distinguished by the circumstance that people are seldom seen loitering about the streets, or standing in knots, spending their time in gossip; and on returning to the inn from the provost's house, the truth of this remark was confirmed by my own observation as far as that went. I noticed that even in the inn-yard, and near the gates—the great rendezvous of idlers—not a single person was to be seen except those who were engaged in cleaning the horses and carriages.

KINTORE, ABERDEENSHIRE.

Population about 1,200, or, including the population of the whole Parish, 1,800.

(Visited 2d August, 1836.)

Kintore.

This prison consists of a single room on the ground-floor of the town-house. It is built of stone, and is about 18 feet long, 6½ feet broad, and 8½ feet high. The window is of the ordinary kind in Scottish lock-up houses, being a narrow unglazed aperture in a thick wall, secured by iron bars; as usual, also, the window looks out upon a place to which the public have access, and whence communication can be carried on with any person confined. Some time ago a man, who had been put into prison for being drunk, procured a fresh supply of whisky while there, and soon got into such a state as to render his former condition, in comparison, one of sobriety.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of Lord Kintore, as superior of the burgh.

I found the place in a dirty state, but dry. There is an open fire-place. The clergyman of the parish, who accompanied me in my inspection, said that he had never observed the place damp, and that he did not think it ever was so. The prison is tolerably secure. Loose straw is supplied as bedding.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and I was informed that the prison was seldom used, and, except for vagrants, seldom required.

State of Kintore and its Neighbourhood, as respects Crime.—There is but little crime; and most of the offences that do occur are committed by vagrants, or by persons who are not permanent residents.

Causes affecting Crime at Kintore and its Neighbourhood, independent of Prison Discipline.

There is but little drunkenness.—The police is inefficient.—The general state of the people is one of comfort.

Education.—Comparatively good. The clergyman, who has lately been making minute inquiries into the state of the parish generally, with a view to the new Statistical Account of Scotland, now in course of publication, told me, that he did not think there was a single person who had been brought up at Kintore who could not read easily; and that, in point of fact, there is a good deal of reading in the place. There is a library, which was set on foot by the late schoolmaster, and some members of the poorer class (by the latter of whom it is still managed), now containing about 400 volumes, including many of Sir Walter Scott's novels and several standard works of history. The subscription is 2*s.* a year, and there are between 30 and 40 regular subscribers, and from 10 to 20 more who subscribe during the winter. The whole income is about 5*l.* a year; and with this sum the books are kept in repair, and the library gradually enlarged.

* Till within a recent period, this county, I was told, did not produce corn enough for its own consumption; but such have been the improvements in agriculture, and such the extent to which waste land has been brought into cultivation, that the county is now able to produce, not only enough for its own consumption, and that with a considerable increase of population, but a large quantity for exportation.

Peterhead.

PETERHEAD, ABERDEENSHIRE.

(Visited 4th and 5th August, 1836.)

|---|---|
| Population:—Resident, about | 6,000 |
| Usual number of seamen in the town, about | 1,000 |
| | 7,000 |
| Additional number of inhabitants during the herring season, about | 2,000 |
| | 9,000 |

For several years there has been no accommodation whatever for prisoners at Peterhead. There is, indeed, a cell in the town-house, called the black-hole, in which people were once confined, but this has been out of use for a long time. There is also a room which was once employed as a watchhouse; but at the time of the cholera it was converted into a kitchen, to supply the poor with food, and it has remained ever since in the state in which it was then put. Thus, in point of fact, there has not for a considerable time been any place in which a person could be confined; and in case of an arrest, the only resource has been to put the offender in the town-hall, under the charge of an officer. This room, however, not having been intended to serve as a prison, is quite insecure, there being neither bars nor shutters to the windows. The detention of the prisoner, therefore, depends on the constant vigilance of the officer; and during the last 12 months two men, taken up on rather serious charges, have made their escape.

Fortunately, the inhabitants of Peterhead appear to be an orderly body of people, and very few of them to be addicted to crime. Were this not the case, the evil arising from the want of a prison would be unbearable; and as it is, serious inconvenience arises, and impunity is given to many petty offences; for, the county gaol (that at Aberdeen) being at a distance of 35 miles, a person cannot be sent there without considerable trouble and expense. Moreover, as the magistrates of the burgh have no power to award punishment, however slight, unless the imprisonment take place within their own town, it is necessary to send witnesses also to Aberdeen, in order that the case may be tried by the sheriff. These obstacles, together with a reluctance to subject a person charged with a slight offence to the disgrace of being publicly conveyed to a considerable distance, as a criminal, necessarily cause offences to escape with impunity, and thus a check is wanting to the first steps on the road.

The present magistrates of Peterhead are fully alive to the evil arising from the want of a prison, and would probably ere this have supplied the deficiency, had they had the control of the town-funds, but those who formerly had the management of this property have never given up the possession, and, at the present time, no part of the income is applied to any purpose, nor will it be, until it shall be decided who are the rightful trustees; the money is consequently accumulating.

As an immediate measure, I have advised the construction of a small prison out of the room which was formerly used as a watchhouse. This I find can be divided into two cells with a passage between them, at an expense of about 35*l*., including the cost of everything necessary for fitting them up; and at a very small expense, also, the old cell, called the black-hole, can be rendered suitable as a place for refractory prisoners. The magistrates told me they should raise the funds necessary for these alterations by private subscription.

State of Peterhead and the Neighbourhood, as respects Crime.—I have already said, that there is but little crime here; and the amount appears to be becoming less and less, especially as regards heinous offences, these being now of rare occurrence. Assaults too, which used to be common, now seldom take place; and riots on account of the price of food have long since totally disappeared. When the great increase of population is taken into account, the decrease in the amount of crime is very considerable. The apparent causes of the change that has taken place are an increase of lucrative employment for the people; a decrease of drunkenness; the discontinuance of smuggling and private distillation; and the employment of an officer to keep vagrants out of the town.

Usual state of Criminals and other Offenders.—Most of them are between 14 and 30 years old. They are more addicted to drunkenness than others in the same class of life. They are, as a class, inferior in intelligence and education, though most of them can sign their own names. It is observed, that many of the offenders are butchers. About one-half of the offenders are inhabitants of the town or parish.

Causes affecting Crime in this District, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is a general habit of drinking whisky to a certain extent; but it is seldom carried far enough to produce intoxication; except indeed, when the whalers come into port, at which time there is generally some excess. Upon the whole, however, there appears to be but little drunkenness at Peterhead, and less than formerly. There is a Temperance Society in the town.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There is only one officer on constant duty, and his sole business is to keep vagrants out of the town. He is paid by a voluntary subscription. There is no night-watch.

Administration of Justice.—To a considerable extent paralysed for want of a prison.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Peterhead.

Condition of the People.—Gradually improving, and now generally comfortable. The wealth of the town has been considerably increased of late years, owing to the increase of the export trade in grain and cattle, and to the establishment of the herring-fishing, which took place about eight years ago, and which has been so successful, that there are now but few places at which a greater number of herrings are caught than at Peterhead. Last year the number of barrels taken was about 40,000, worth, when cured and packed, about 40,000*l.*; and this year the number will probably be greater, as there are many more boats employed. There is a savings' bank at Peterhead, but not under the provisions of the new Act. The rate of interest is 2½ per annum, which is the same as at most of the Scottish savings' banks, established before the advantages of the English savings' banks were extended to Scotland. The amount of the deposits is about 2,200*l.*, being an increase of about 500*l.* in the last two years. The number of the depositors is nearly 300.

Education.—In a tolerable good state as regards elementary instruction; but the means of obtaining a superior kind of education are much wanted, and even in elementary education the provision has not kept pace with the increase in the size of the town. It appears by a recent examination from house to house, that there are about 100 children between the ages of 6 and 15 who are not going to school. It is believed that almost all the adult inhabitants can read easily, and, in point of fact, there is a good deal of reading among them, particularly of newspapers, and other cheap periodicals (especially Chambers' Edinburgh Journal) and religious tracts. Several of the chapels of the town have libraries connected with them. A society has lately been formed, having similar objects to those of a mechanics' institution, and it is at present going on successfully.

FRASERBURGH, ABERDEENSHIRE.

(Visited 5th August, 1836.)

Fraserburgh.

|---|---|
| Population, generally about | 2,500 |
| But in the herring season, about | 5,000 |

Fraserburgh is in a similar situation to Peterhead with respect to a prison. There is, indeed, a room which is used as a lock-up house for vagrants, and for others who are not likely to make much effort to escape; but in all other cases the usual plan is to hire a room at one of the inns of the town, and for an officer to remain with the prisoner until he is sent to Aberdeen, which is even farther from Fraserburgh than from Peterhead, the distance being 42 miles.

The room which is used as a lock-up house is 26 feet long, 12 feet broad, and 11½ feet high. It is dry and moderately well ventilated. There is an open fire-place, which is sometimes used in winter; and the door, bedstead, and ceiling, being made of wood it must be in the power of a prisoner to set fire to the place. I found the room in rather a dirty state. There was no one, however, in confinement.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of Lord Saltoun, the superior of the burgh.

State of Fraserburgh as respects Crime.—There has been a very considerable decrease of crime, even without regard to the increase of population. The offences now committed consist for the most part of petty thefts. Most of the offenders are young, their age being generally from 12 to 16. Very few of them know a trade, or have any regular occupation, and most of them are strangers to the town. Their parents, when known, are generally found to be of bad character, or at least to have neglected their children.

Causes affecting Crime at Fraserburgh, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—The town does not appear to be distinguished either for drunkenness or sobriety. As at most other fishing stations there is a great deal of dram-drinking; but, except during the herring season, there is not much positive drunkenness, there not being more than three or four persons in the town who, except on rare occasions, are ever seen in a state of intoxication. There is a Temperance Society, but it does not flourish much.

State of the Police.—Very inefficient. Mr. Chalmers, the baron-bailie, and only acting magistrate, is of opinion that there should be two men on constant duty; whereas, except occasionally during the herring season, the only provision for a police is such little service as can be obtained from three men by paying them each about one pound a year.

Condition of the People.—The place has a poverty-stricken and comfortless appearance; but I was told that I saw it at a disadvantage, owing to the presence of so many herring-fishermen and their families. There is no doubt that the condition of the people is improving. The town has been greatly benefited by the construction of a good harbour, which has assisted in increasing the export trade, and has rendered the port an asylum, even for ships of great burden. There is a savings' bank in the town, and it succeeds well.

Education.—Good, as regards elementary instruction. Every inhabitant, I was informed, has an opportunity of getting his children taught; bequests having been made for the purpose of paying the school-fees of the children of indigent parents. The town appears, too, to be fortunate in its parish-schoolmaster. It is believed that almost all the adult inhabitants can read easily, though it does not seem that they are much given to reading. There is a parish-library open, I believe, to all, but it is supported by subscriptions from the richer classes only.

BANFF.

Visited August 8th and 9th, 1837. (Second inspection.)

It would not be wise to attempt to do much by way of improvement in the prison of Banff, its general construction being very bad; but I found every disposition in the magistrates to make such alterations, both in the building and the system of management, as, under all circumstances, I could recommend. By a letter, dated 10th January, 1837, from Mr. Cameron, the provost, I find that the following alterations have been completed and have been in operation for some time:—

1st. A communication with the street has been cut off, and hopper-blinds have been put up before the windows.

2d. The prisoners are supplied with suitable privy accommodation.

3d. The prisoners are encouraged to work.

4th. Visits are restricted to once a week to untried prisoners (excepting the legal adviser), and to once a month to convicted prisoners.

5th. Separation is enforced as far as possible.

6th. Personal cleanliness is enforced.

TURRIFF, ABERDEENSHIRE.

Population about 2,700.

(Visited 8th August, 1836.)

Turriff.

This small prison was built about three years ago, and consists of two cells, each 9 feet long, 6 feet broad, and 6 feet 9 inches high; the cubical content of each being about 360 feet. The windows look into a narrow passage, accessible to the public; but in other respects the place is tolerably well suited to the purpose to which it is applied, viz., detention for very short periods, no one ever remaining in it more than a day and night. Though seldom required, the prison has been found very useful, especially at the time of the markets or fairs which are held here eight times a year, and which are attended by people from the whole surrounding district. Except at these periods the place is not made use of more than twice or thrice a year. The prison is situated in the principal street of Turriff, and was made out of part of a cabinet-maker's shop, the remaining part being still used as a work-shop. It is under the jurisdiction of the trustees of the late Earl of Fife.

I found the prison clean, except as regards the bed-clothes. The place is dry and tolerably well ventilated. There is no provision for warming it, but little or no evil can result therefrom, the period of detention being always so short. The bedding consists of a mattress (containing chaff), two blankets, sheets, and a counterpane.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit.

State of Crime at Turriff.—There is very little crime here. During the last 30 years there has been only one instance of an inhabitant of Turriff appearing before the justiciary court, and this person had not lived there long. This would be saying little, had the state of the police and the administration of justice been lax, but such does not appear to have been the case. Violent assaults were formerly very common here, but they have now quite disappeared. At that time the general occupation of the inhabitants was shoemaking, and "the sutors of Turriff" were known through the country as a fighting, quarrelsome set of people. How far a change of occupation (their pursuits are now chiefly connected with agriculture) has led to an improved state of morals, I know not; but certain it is that since the people gave up the wax, crime has been in the wane.

Usual state of Criminals and other Offenders.—They are more drunken than others, and they seldom know a trade or have any regular occupation. Most of them are either tinkers or hawkers, and in each case the employment is generally a pretext, petty thefts being the real means of getting a livelihood. Very few, indeed, of the offenders are inhabitants of Turriff.

Causes affecting Crime at Turriff, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is much less drunkenness among the farmers and others of the richer classes than formerly, and certainly no increase of drunkenness among the poorer classes. As yet there is no Temperance Society at Turriff.

State of the Police.—Tolerable efficient, Here, as at many other places, there is an officer constantly on duty to look after vagrants, and who is paid by voluntary subscription. This custom arose at the time of the cholera, and was found to be so useful in preserving the public peace and preventing depredations and thefts, that it has been generally kept up.

Administration of Justice.—Efficient.

Condition of the People.—Generally tolerably good. There are commonly about sixty families receiving relief to some extent; the whole sum thus dispensed being about 150*l.* year, including 30*l.*, the proceeds of bequests to the poor. No difficulty is found in raising the other 120*l.* by voluntary donations, principally at the church-door. Any person receiving relief is also allowed to have a badge, authorizing him to beg through the streets, but only three persons make use of this privilege. There is a savings' bank in the town, attended with the most beneficial effects. There are about 180 depositors, and they have together about 2,000*l.* A man in the service of the minister of the parish has alone accumulated no less a sum than 200*l.*, and this has enabled him to apply for a farm at a rent of 100*l.* a year. The savings' bank is at present on the old system, and the rate of interest consequently low; but the parish-minister, who has effected great good at this place by the benevolent and active interest he takes in the welfare of the inhabitants, is about to make arrangements for adopting the provisions of the late Act of Parliament.

The general appearance at Turriff shows that the people are in a comfortable state. The houses are neatly built and most of the streets wide and clean; and I observed very few ragged or dirty children.

Education.—In a good state, especially as regards the rising generation. Nearly all the adult inhabitants too can read easily, and can write, and they are represented as being generally shrewd and well-informed. A library has lately been opened, and several of the labouring classes have become subscribers to it, some at the rate of two shillings, and others at the rate of four shillings a year, according to a varying scale of privileges. This library contains many standard works of literature, and Mr. Cruickshank (the parish-minister) pointed out to me a young man (driving a cart) who is passing his evenings at this time in the perusal of Robertson's History of Charles V. The chief reading, however, in addition to the Bible, consists of the Aberdeen newspaper, Chambers' Edinburgh Journal, and the Scottish Christian Herald.

PORTSOY, BANFFSHIRE.

Population about 3,000.

(Visited 11th August, 1836.)

Portsoy.

This prison consists of a vaulted room on the ground-floor of a warehouse near the harbour, with a rising behind. I was unable to examine the inside for want of the key, which no one could find, and which was believed to be in the possession of a man who acted as a police officer at the time of the cholera, and who lives 10 miles off. The prison, I was informed, had not been used since that time; not, however, from the circumstance of no offences having been committed. I learnt that the place is very damp in winter, and I could see that it must be very ill ventilated. There are no means of warming it. The room, I was told, is about 18 feet long, 12 feet broad, and 6 feet in average height; the cubical content consequently must be about 1,300 feet. It is tolerably secure. The prison is under the jurisdiction of Colonel Grant, the superior of the burgh.

---

State of Portsoy and the neighbourhood, as respects Crime.—The amount of crime is moderate and less than formerly. The usual offences at the present time are petty thefts, such as stealing poultry, and linen left out to dry. Few of the offenders know a trade or have any regular occupation. They consist principally of tinkers, hawkers, and other vagrants.

Causes affecting Crime at Portsoy, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Less than formerly, and now not at all general. There is a Temperance Society, but only thirty persons have joined it.

State of the Police.—Very inefficient. Three persons are said to hold the office of constable, but the appointment appears to be merely nominal. The man who is considered the head constable, and whom I sent for to question about the key of the prison, did not appear to have a clear conception whether he was in fact a constable at all. The person who acted as police officer at the time of the cholera (chiefly to look after vagrants) was active and efficient; but after the fear of the distemper had died away, the subscription by which he was paid fell off, and he was consequently discharged. Since then, there has been but little security for public order beyond the general disposition of the people.

Administration of Justice.—A vigilant resident magistrate is much wanted. The only gentleman in the neighbourhood who acts as a magistrate lives at a distance of two miles from Portsoy; and his numerous engagements withdraw him a great deal from home.

Condition of the People.—There is an appearance of poverty in the place, which is enhanced by the dirty state of the streets, and a general air of neglect. I was informed that there are many poor, but that a good deal is done towards their relief. Here (as I suppose at most other sea-ports), there is a considerable number of widows, owing to the frequent loss of life among the sailors. The condition of the people, though not satisfactory, is not considered to be worse than formerly. The usual wages for a man are from 7*s.* to 9*s.* a week. As most of the work is connected with the business of the port, there is but little occupation for females. There is no savings' bank at Portsoy.

Education.—Improved (owing, to a considerable extent, to the exertions of the parish-minister), and now in a tolerably good state. Most of the inhabitants are believed to be able to read easily. There is a library for the working classes, which was formed at first, principally, by contributions of books from the richer inhabitants, but which is now maintained from its own resources. The subscription is a penny a week, and there are from 50 to 60 subscribers. The library contains about 300 volumes.

KEITH,
AND THE ADJOINING VILLAGE OF FIFE KEITH, BANFFSHIRE.

Joint Population about 2,600.

(Visited 11th August, 1836.)

Keith.

The prison at Keith (which serves for the two places) consists of a vaulted room, 19 feet long, 9 feet broad, and 8 feet in average height. It is on the ground-floor of the town-house, which is situated in the middle of the town, with a large open area in front. The place is tolerably secure, but it is in other respects ill-suited to its purposes. There is an aperture at one end (serving as a window) which communicates with a butcher's shamble; and the place is dark and ill-ventilated. It is, however, dry; and though there is no fire-place, it is probably seldom very cold.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of Colonel Grant, the superior of the burgh.

There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit, and I was told that the place is seldom used; indeed, that it was not used once during the last year. This, however, does not proceed from any extraordinary virtue in the town and neighbourhood, but arises partly from the bad state of the prison itself, and partly from the want of an efficient administration of justice and an active police. It is in contemplation, I was told, to appoint a sheriff-substitute for Keith and the neighbourhood.

Loose straw, without a bedstead, is the only bedding allowed.

---

State of Keith, and the neighbourhood, as respects Crime.—There is a good deal of crime at Keith, consisting principally of thefts. Last year, however, a gang of thieves was broken up (some having been transported), and since that time the town has been comparatively free from crime. Most of the offenders are young, being generally from 12 to 20 years of age. In many cases their parents are known to have neglected them. Many of them are inhabitants of the place, but many also are strangers.

Causes affecting Crime at Keith, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Less than formerly, and now not very common. There is a Temperance Society, but it is not in a flourishing state.

State of the Police.—Very inefficient. There is, in fact, scarcely anything deserving the name of a police.

Administration of Justice.—There is no municipal authority; but there is a gentleman who, being in the commission, acts as a justice of the peace. He told me, however, that he found the duties burdensome; for, owing to old age and other circumstances, none of the other justices act. He stated, moreover, that for want of a prison (the present one has never been legalised), he cannot confine a person even for a single day; and has no alternative, except allowing an offender to go away, with a mere admonition, or sending him to Banff, a distance of about 20 miles.

Condition of the People.—Not good. There is much poverty in the place. Formerly an extensive manufacture of linen was carried on here, but it has died away. At present, the occupations of the inhabitants are almost entirely connected, directly or indirectly, with agriculture. The average wages during the present year (an advance upon preceding years) are from 7*s.* to 9*s.* a week. There is a savings' bank, containing about 1,000*l.*

Education.—Greatly improved of late, and now general; but the kind of education given is still meagre. Most of the inhabitants are believed to be able to read easily, although they do not at present appear to be much given to reading. There are two retail tradesmen in the town, who sell books, among other goods; but I trust that their other business is on a more extensive and lucrative scale than the book department appears to be in. There is a library for the poorer classes, but it does not contains many books.

DUFFTOUN, BANFFSHIRE.

Population (including the whole parish) nearly 800.

(Visited 12th August, 1836.)

Dufftoun.

This small prison is in an open and airy situation in the middle of the village, and stands apart from other buildings. It was built by voluntary subscription, at the time of the cholera, the immediate object being to frighten vagrants away, in which it is said to have been successful. Since that time it has been legalised as a regular gaol, but it is not well-suited for such a purpose, as communication can be kept up between prisoners and people on the outside. The cost of the building was about 85*l.*, exclusive of the land, which is held as a feu under Lord Fife. There are two rooms or cells, the dimensions being as follows:—

| Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. | Cubical Content. Feet. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 8 | 7 | 9 | about 500 |
| 15 | 5 | 8½ | „ 640 |

The place is not very secure, as the apertures which serve for windows open into the street, and the cells are upon the ground-floor. The prison is considered to be under the jurisdiction of Lord Fife, as superior or proprietor in chief of the land on which it stands.

Dufftoun.

Present state of the Prison.—I found the prison dry, and it appears to be always so; it was tolerably clean also, and it appears to be sufficiently ventilated. There is no provision for warming the cells; and as the apertures which serve for windows are not glazed, the place must sometimes be cold, notwithstanding the thickness of the walls, which is considerable. It must be remarked, however, that no one is ever confined in it more than 24 hours together.

A quantity of loose straw is the only allowance for bedding.

There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit, and I was informed that the prison is not used more than ten or a dozen times a year.

Notwithstanding its many defects this little prison is believed to be of good service in keeping away vagrants, and in preventing tumults at the markets which are held seven times a year.

---

State of Crime, &c. in the Parish of Dufftoun.—Crime has decreased considerably, and there is now very little. The most common offences are petty thefts, quarrels in the streets, and petty assaults. The improvement is attributed chiefly to the suppression of smuggling, the erection of the prison, and the appointment of a police officer.

The offenders are of various ages. Few of them are inhabitants, many of them being tinkers. It has not been observed how they compare with others in the same rank of life in education and intelligence. Many of the offences are committed under the excitement of whisky.

Causes affecting Crime at Dufftoun, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not distinguished from other places. Drunkenness has decreased since smuggling and private distillation were put a stop to; which is partly explained by the circumstance, that when the people made their own whisky they constantly had it at hand, and in sight, and were, therefore, always under temptation to drink.

Police.—In a good state. There is always one man in readiness to act, and at the time of the markets there are three.

Condition of the People.—Rather low. There are many poor, considering the amount of population, the number receiving regular relief to some extent being no fewer than 60, besides 12 who have occasional relief. There are, moreover, a good many beggars. A member of the kirk-session (a working carpenter) told me that at the present time, and generally at this season of the year, four or five beggars come to his house every day. There are not many, however, in winter; and but few of the beggars belong to the parish. It appears to be a general custom in this district, and probably elsewhere also, for a person given to begging to leave his home in summer and to wander about where he is not known. He is supposed to be sometimes urged to this by pride, but more frequently by the reflection that his difficulties are owing to his own idleness, or dishonesty, and that he could get little or nothing from people who know him.

The chief occupation of the people in this parish is connected with agriculture. A man's wages average about sixteen-pence a day, throughout the year. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Improved, and now very general. It is believed that none of the children are growing up without some kind of education, and that most of the adults are able to read easily, and many to write. The extent of reading appears to have increased a good deal within the last few years, owing partly to the kindness of the parish-minister, in establishing, at his own expense, a small library for gratuitous circulation, and to the spirited conduct of a retail tradesman, in opening a circulating library, containing a considerable collection of useful, amusing, and attractive works, including some of the periodicals. The average number of subscribers to this library is about 120, the yearly payment being 5*s.* by some, and 8*s.* by others, according to the privileges enjoyed. The library belonging to the parish-minister contains about 120 volumes, most of them, but not all, on religious subjects. On an average, about 100 of these volumes are at all times in use.

Popular Amusements.—The people do not join much in games, and there is no public provision to promote them.

ELGIN.

Visited 12th August, 1836. (Second inspection.)

Elgin.

The prison of Elgin is so old, and on so bad a construction, that it would be a waste of money to try to improve it. Indeed, an Act was obtained some time ago, to raise money for building a new prison at Elgin, and another at Forres, and a portion of the money has been collected; but owing to the general subject of prisons and prison discipline having been taken up by Government, the project has been wisely deferred for the present.

At my second visit to Elgin, I proposed such improvements (chiefly in the system of management) as I thought practicable, and by a letter from the provost, dated 23d September, 1836, I learn that the following among them, have been carried into effect:—

1st. The prison has been lime-washed, and the lime-washing is to be repeated once every two months.

2d. Personal cleanliness is enforced.

Elgin.

3d. Luxuries and improper amusements are prohibited.

4th. Visits to prisoners are much restricted.

5th. A person has been engaged to give instruction to the prisoners in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the clergyman of the town have been invited to give them religious instruction.

I also strongly recommended, that the money-allowance for food should be abolished, and that work should be procured for such of the prisoners as wished for employment; but a difficulty having arisen in effecting these matters, the recommendation has not been acted upon.

FORRES.

Visited 13th August, 1836. (Second inspection.)

Forres.

The wretched place in use when I was last at Forres, and described in my first Report, has been abandoned, and I had the pleasure of seeing workmen employed in pulling it down. In place of this, a small house belonging to the burgh, and which was built as a cholera hospital, has been converted (at a small expense) into a temporary prison; and for which it will serve very well. It is outside the town, apart from other buildings, and has an inclosure in front, which separates it from the road. The rooms which serve as a prison, form the first floor, the ground-floor being used as the keeper's house. There are three of these rooms, two of a large size, and one that is small; and they are perfectly clean, dry, and well ventilated. There are so few prisoners, that it will seldom, if ever, be necessary to put more than one in the same room. The only prisoner at the time of my visit was a debtor; and this man can at any time obtain his liberation, on consenting to give up property which he has in his possession.

NAIRN.

(Visited in November, 1835, and again 13th August, 1836.)

|---|---|
| Population about . . . . . | 2,000 |
| Remaining part of the county, about . . | 7,500 |
| | 9,500 |

Nairn.

This prison forms part of the town-house, and is the middle of the town. Although of recent erection (it was built in the year 1818) it is very ill contrived, and in every respect very badly suited to its purposes. It originally consisted of two cells only, both of them close and damp, and without any provision for warming. A large room, however, designed for a magistrate's court, and until lately used as such, has been given up for the use of the prisoners; as has also another room, of considerable size. The two cells, therefore, are seldom used, except for drunken persons put in for a single night, and for refractory prisoners.

The two rooms which have been converted into prisons, although free, or nearly so, from the objections belonging to the two cells, are still very ill-suited to the purposes to which they are applied. The windows overlook the street, the prisoners confined in them cannot be inspected, and they are not very secure. The dimensions of the several rooms and cells are as follow:—

| Rooms and Cells. | Length. | | Breadth. | | Height. | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Feet. | Inches. | Feet. | Inches. | Feet. | Feet. |
| 1 | 20 | 0 | 19 | 0 | about 16 | about 6,000 |
| 1 | 16 | 0 | 10 | 4 | „ 16 | „ 2,700 |
| 1 | 19 | 4 | 9 | 3 | „ 6 | „ 1,000 |
| 1 | 13 | 6 | 9 | 3 | „ 6 | „ 750 |

There is no airing-yard.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the provost and bailies.

Present state of the Prison and Prisoners.—I found the prison clean, and in other respects in tolerably good order. There were two prisoners, which is about the usual number. One of them, a lad 16 or 17 years old, was in one of the lower cells on account of refractory conduct. He was still unsubdued, and the state of the cell showed the violent attempts he had made to get out. He had broken his bedstead, and using one of the boards as a lever, had forced up part of the pavement and loosened many of the stones near the door. Both prisoners were tolerably clean in their person.

Health.—Generally tolerably good. According to the report of the surgeon, the prisoners, taken as a body, are generally about as well as they would probably be if out of prison. The usual complaint is derangement of the bowels. Illness sometimes arises from the close, damp, and cold state of the lower cells. There has not been any epidemic in the prison for many years, or any death. In some instances, however, debtors and Excise prisoners have been released on account of illness. No sick-list has been kept; but it appears that, on an average, a prisoner is ill about a week in the year. There is no infirmary, or other special provision for the sick.

Food.—The allowance for food is paid in money, and is sixpence a day. Additional supplies from without are permitted.

Nairn.

Bedding.—Loose straw and two double blankets.—Clothing is not provided.

Discipline.—None exists; there being no labour or instruction, and frequently but little separation: for example, when I was last here I found four prisoners in the same room, some debtors and some criminals.

There is not any regular chaplain, but two clergymen of the town kindly attend on alternate Sundays to perform divine service. Some of the prisoners are provided with Bibles, but not all; and no other books are supplied.

Offences and Punishments.—The conduct of the prisoners appears to be generally tolerably good. The usual punishment is confinement in one of the lower cells; sometimes, too, hand-cuffs are employed. There is not any corporal punishment.

Treatment of the Prisoners.—This appears to be kind. I did not receive any complaint.

Female Prisoners.—Treated like the others. No female superintendence is provided.

Debtors.—The average number is now less than one. The usual allowance for aliment varies from six-pence to ten-pence a day. Additional supplies of food from without are permitted. Visits are freely allowed at breakfast and dinner-time. The debtors attend public worship.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between untried and convicted prisoners. Intercourse with friends and associates goes on to a very objectionable extent. Visits are allowed twice a-day, and letters generally pass without restriction or inspection. Smoking is allowed. There is not any insane prisoner.

Officers.—There is only one, the keeper, and he does not reside in the prison. He appears to be an intelligent, well-conducted man, and qualified, under good arrangements, to fill his office satisfactorily.

There is a surgeon who, has the medical care of all the prisoners, whether criminals or debtors. He attends when required.

Fees, &c.—The jailor receives a shilling, on the admission of every debtor, from the imprisoning creditor. There are no other fees or emoluments in addition to the salaries. At the time of my last visit fees were exacted on the liberation of a debtor; but they have been abolished with the free consent of all parties.

Accounts.—The town-clerk keeps a register of imprisonments, containing the name, age, offence, &c. of each prisoner, and an account of disbursements.

General Observations.—Very little good effect can be produced by the gaol, under its present regulations, either on the prisoners or on the criminal population of the neighbourhood. There is scarcely a possibility of any one being improved during his confinement, and he is generally so well off—in food at least—that he is probably an object of envy rather than commiseration to many out of prison.

---

State of Crime, &c. in Nairnshire.—There does not appear to be much crime, and I was informed that the amount had decreased, particularly within the last eighteen months. Petty assaults and other breaches of the peace (almost all arising from drunkenness) are the most common offences. The chief apparent causes of the improvement that has taken place are the increased civilization of the people and the rise of a feeling of self-respect among them, a greater decision in enforcing the laws, and the suppression of smuggling. It would tend much to the peace and comfort of the county if a few persons who are constantly committing some offence, and who make themselves a nuisance to society, could be withdrawn altogether. The offenders are of various ages; many of them are habitual drunkards; and most of the offences are committed under at least the temporary excitement of liquor. Few of the offenders have a knowledge of a trade or any regular occupation. They are much below the generality of others in the same rank of life in education and intelligence. The character of their parents is not known. Many of them are hawkers and jobbers. They are, to a considerable extent, inhabitants of the district.

Causes affecting Crime in Nairnshire, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Diminished. There are still some habitual drunkards, but they are few in number. There is a Temperance Society, but it has greatly fallen off.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There are only two good officers in the county, and these are partly engaged in civil business.

Administration of Justice.—The provisions of the Police Act not having been adopted the proceedings in the Bailie Court are long and tedious, in trials even for the slightest offences. The consequence is an obstruction to the administration of justice, so far at least as the burgh is concerned.

Condition of the People.—Depressed. There is much poverty. In the parish of Nairn, with a population of about 3,000 only, there are no fewer than 200 on the poor-roll. The sheriff-substitute, the surgeon attending the gaol, and a member of the kirk-session, all of whom I consulted as to the condition of the lower classes, stated that there is much suffering amongst them from poverty; but they agreed that the condition of the able-bodied labourer had improved lately. There is no savings' bank at Nairn, but there is one in the neighbourhood.

Scotland.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Nairn.

Education.—I was informed that most of the adult population can read easily, and that most of the men can write also. The people do not, however, appear to be much given to reading. Many of the children of the fishermen are not able to read.

SHETLAND.

Population about 30,000.

(County Gaol, Lerwick. Visited several times between the 17th and 31st of August, 1836.)

Shetland.

With the exception of a small lock-up house, which is also at Lerwick, this is the only prison in the Shetland Isles. Lerwick, however, is by far the largest town, its population being about 3,000; and it is so situated as to be accessible from all other parts of Shetland. And if, in addition to a good prison at Lerwick (with a provision for sending prisoners confined for long periods to a penitentiary in Scotland), there were a lock-up house at Scalloway (a port and fishing-station about eight miles from Lerwick) there would be sufficient prison accommodation for all the islands.

The present prison at Lerwick is a very bad one, but I trust that long before this report is presented to Parliament it will have been altogether abandoned, permission having been granted by the Board of Ordnance to convert a military fort near Lerwick into a temporary prison; and the commissioners of supply for the Shetland Isles having readily consented to raise the necessary funds for this purpose *.

The prison now in use forms the basement and second story of the town-house, which stands on the harbour-side of the long street, of which the town of Lerwick chiefly consists. The lower cells are almost close to the water's edge, and being also partly below ground, are very damp. The construction of the prison is as bad as its site, and in no one respect is the place suitable, or capable of being rendered suitable, for the purpose to which it is applied. It was built about 70 years ago, and it serves as a specimen of the ignorance of the times on the subject of prison discipline. There are four cells, two on the basement-floor, and two in the second story; and their dimensions are as follow:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. | | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Feet. | Feet. | Feet. | Inches. | Feet. |
| Basement, 2 cells each, | 10 | 8 | 6 | 6 | 520 |
| Upper floor 2 rooms each, | 14 | 9 | 8 | 6 | 1,070 |

The prison is very insecure, particularly the upper rooms, which are the only rooms that can be looked upon as at all habitable. About twelve years ago six prisoners made their escape at one time; and one escape has taken place within the last two or three years; and there is no doubt that, although there have been but few prisoners, there would have been many more escapes had the inmates of the prison been very desirous of leaving it; but such has been the laxity of the gaoler in the performance of his duty, that the prison must frequently have been looked upon rather as a lodging-house with free board, and a constant power of egress and ingress, than a place of strict confinement and stern discipline. Communication, too, can readily be carried on with persons outside; and prisoners have been seen hauling up packages from their friends below. There are no means of inspection or employment, and none of separation beyond the use of four rooms, two of which are so damp as to have been regarded as unfit for any prisoners except those convicted of serious offences, and they are in point of fact unfit for a human being, be his crime what it may. During the last twelve months two prisoners (a man and a woman) have been placed in these dungeons, and kept there many weeks.

Present State of the Prison.—The gaoler acknowledged that he had cleaned the prison some time ago in expectation of my visit. Had he kept his own counsel I never should have suspected the fact, as there was nothing in the appearance of the cells that marked the recent use of the mop or broom. The two upper cells are dry, but all of them are ill-ventilated, and the two lower ones are as cold as they are damp. There is indeed no means of warming these lower cells.

State of the Prisoners.—During the first part of my stay at Lerwick there were two prisoners, a criminal and a debtor. Before I left there was only one, namely, the criminal. The usual average of prisoners is less than two. The criminal prisoner was rather dirty in his person, and appeared to be out of health.

Health.—The medical gentleman who generally attends the prison (gratuitously) states that the health of the prisoners is usually tolerably good, notwithstanding the circumstances mentioned. He says, however, that their health certainly falls off during confinement; that they generally lose flesh and strength, and become pale. The number of prisoners is so small that he finds it difficult to specify any diseases as particularly prevalent among them, except perhaps rheumatism and diarrhœa, which are brought on in part by the state of the prison. There has been no death in the prison for several years, and no epidemic disease. It needs scarcely be stated that there is no infirmary, or other provision for the sick.

* The alterations have taken more time than was anticipated; and they are not yet completed (January 1837), although they are in a forward state. When they are finished, one of the best, instead of one of the worst, small prisons in the country will be in Zetland.

Food.—The gaoler receives four-pence a day for each criminal prisoner; and for that sum he undertakes to supply them with food; but the quantity and quality depend on himself. I did not, however, receive any complaint about the food, nor did the surgeon recollect hearing any. Supplies from without are allowed.

Clothing and Bedding.—Clothing is sometimes allowed in cases of destitution, but not at other times. For bedding each prisoner has a pair of blankets and coverlet (those I saw were very dirty), and a quantity of loose straw or shavings.

Discipline.—None exists. The prisoners get up and go to bed when they like. They are not required to do any labour; they receive no instruction; and they never appear to be punished for misconduct.

I have already spoken generally of the lax observance, even of the nominal regulations of the prison, feeble and insufficient as these are. The following examples of subversion of everything approaching the name of discipline almost stagger belief. I have no doubt, however, of their truth. I received most of the information from the chief magistrate of the town; and much of it was confirmed, while none of it was contradicted, by others. About a year ago this gentleman proposed to a fellow-magistrate and some other friends to go and visit the prison, that they might have an opportunity of judging of the accuracy of his statements as to what was going on; and before setting out he told them that in all probability they should meet some of the prisoners before reaching the gaol; for that he and others had often met a particular prisoner, whom he mentioned, and who had lately been under sentence of imprisonment for horse-stealing. No prisoner, however, appeared until they reached the stairs (which are open to the street) when they met a woman who was under sentence of imprisonment for child-murder; and on asking her what she did there, she said that some of the neighbours were in her cell washing clothes! They then asked her where the other prisoner, a debtor, was; and she replied by unbolting the door of his cell and showing them in. Another time the magistrate who gave me this information met a boy on the prison-stairs carrying away a basket of empty bottles; and this circumstance leading to a little inquiry, he found that one of the prisoners, a debtor, was in the habit of buying a quantity of ale, and retailing it out to a set of worthies who came to play at cards and make merry in his cell; and the boy, who was laden with bottles, was going to the wholesale dealer for a fresh supply. I heard of an occurrence of a worse description even than this, but as the evidence respecting it is not perfectly clear I shall not record it, although I have very little doubt that it really took place.

Untried Prisoners.—No difference is made between these and convicted prisoners.

Female Prisoners.—They are separated, nominally at least, from males, but they are not under the charge of a female officer, or distinguished in any other way.

Debtors.—It is seldom that there is a debtor-prisoner. The allowance usually granted for aliment is nine-pence a day. This is paid to the gaoler who supplies the debtors with food in the same way as he does the criminals, giving the former, however, food of a better quality. The debtors usually provide their own clothing and bedding.

Officers.—The only officer is the keeper; and after what has been mentioned it is needless to say that he is quite unfit for his situation. It ought, however, to be remarked that the salary is exceedingly low, being only five guineas a year, exclusive of fees, and these do not yield much. The gaoler, indeed, is considered as having a claim to a Scotch merk (1*s.* 1⅓*d.* sterling) on the admission of every prisoner, whether debtor or criminal; and half a merk for every day the prisoner remains in confinement; but as he has no sufficient means of enforcing payment he seldom gets more than a small part of the full claim, and often nothing at all. It appears, in fact, that a bargain is generally struck between the gaoler and prisoner; each trying to make the best terms. The gaoler indeed assured me that, during the last 12 months, he had not received anything from any criminal prisoner, but I found out a case, which happened in March last, in which he received 5*s.* Whether the misstatement of the gaoler arose from a wish to deceive or from bad memory (he is more than 80 years old) I cannot say.

Accounts.—An account of disbursements is kept by the collector of cess, and the register of imprisonments partly by the sheriff's clerk (for the gaoler) and partly by the town-clerk. In this register, however, I found some omissions. No other accounts are kept.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 30th April 1836—about an average year:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of Criminals | 9 | 9 | 6 |
| Furniture | 0 | 2 | 10 |
| Fuel | 1 | 7 | 6 |
| Repairs | 0 | 14 | 4 |
| Keeper's salary | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of Debtors and Revenue Prisoners | 16 | 19 | 2 |

Average number of prisoners during the year, 1⅔.
Average yearly cost of each Prisoner, about 10*l.* Average daily cost about 6½*d.*

Lock-up House.—The room used for this purpose is on the basement-floor of a building erected by private subscription for a news-room, assembly-rooms, &c.; and the town pays a small rent to the proprietors. The room is about 18 feet long, 12 feet broad, and 10 feet high. It is damp and rather insecure. I found the place in a dirty state, and unprovided with bed or bedstead.

As soon as the fort is prepared as a prison this lock-up house will be given up.

Both the gaol and the lock-up house are under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates.

State of Crime, &c. in the Shetland Isles.—Many offences are committed in Shetland, though fewer than formerly. At Lerwick assaults are common, and petty thefts very common; and the crime of child-murder is of rather frequent occurrence throughout the islands. In the country districts there are very few robberies of the usual kind, as is shown by its being the custom in many places to leave the doors unfastened all night; but the old practice of seizing on shipwrecked property, which, were the moral standard higher in Shetland would be looked upon as stealing, has by no means gone out of use.

A bad spirit has manifested itself at Lerwick during the last two or three winters. Many of the inhabitants have had their windows destroyed by crackers, as they are called. These are of formidable construction, each consisting of a considerable quantity of gunpowder, tightly bound up in the form of a ball, with a long match running into the centre. The cracker is generally placed on the ledge of the window, and the match being lighted, the person firing it disappears, and he can get to a considerable distance before it explodes. The concussion is often so violent as to break not only the glass of the window near which the cracker is placed, but the glass in all the windows of the house. A widow-lady had all the glass in her windows broken in this way three separate times last winter; and she became so alarmed that she endeavoured to sell her property in order to quit the place. She appears to have done nothing of a positive kind to excite this hostility; and the only reason given for it was, that she refused to contribute to a fund for the purchase of fireworks, &c., and that she is somewhat penurious in general character. The procurator fiscal, who exerted himself a good deal to detect the offenders (though without success) became marked for their attack, and his windows were broken several times.

Another act may be mentioned, which, though perhaps more of the nature of an idle frolic than of a deliberate attempt to do an injury, still shows a strange state of things in the town. A number of fellows one night built a low wall across the main street, and then going to the town-house, began to ring the bell violently, in expectation that the inhabitants, alarmed by such a noise in the middle of the night, would come hurrying along to the town-house, and stumble over the wall; and this actually occurred.

Bad, however, as these things are, they are trifling compared with the tumults that used to happen in the time of the war. At that time the crews of the whalers touching at Lerwick sometimes proceeded to such lengths as to throw the whole town into consternation, and overawe the inhabitants; and it was not until a garrison had been sent to Fort Charlotte that there was anything like public security. The men employed in the whale-fishery of late years, however, have been much more sober and respectable. (About 1,000 of them are inhabitants of Shetland.) To the alarms produced by the crews of the whalers were added those caused by the press-gangs; and these latter, though not so formidable to the richer inhabitants, were yet more terrible to the poor sailors and fishermen, who used to fly to the hills and undergo the greatest privations of hunger and cold, rather than remain exposed to be torn away from their families and home.

One cause of contention and disturbance, and, one indeed, which appears to require the interference of the Legislature, is the division of whales that are driven ashore. A few days after my arrival in Shetland some fishermen succeeded in driving a shoal of about 80 small whales up one of the voes or bays, and these whales being left in shallow water, on the ebb of the tide, the people in the neighbourhood succeeded with their knives, pitchforks, &c. in killing most of them. There being in this instance a great many whales to divide, each man, in helping himself, got so large a quantity of blubber that he was under but little temptation to quarrel with his neighbour; but the probability is, that had the spoil been much less there would have been a serious disturbance.

Most of the offences in Shetland are committed by persons between 20 and 30 years of age. It has not been remarked that the offenders are distinguished for habits of drunkenness, or for deficiency in intelligence and education. Almost all of them are resident inhabitants.

Causes affecting Crime in the Shetland Isles, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Whisky-drinking, to a certain extent, appears to be the common practice, but it is not often carried to intoxication; and those occasions on which people of all classes used formerly to indulge in deep drinking now seldom occur. Till within the last few years, for example, it was the invariable practice for a funeral, in whatever grade of society, to end in a general scene of inebriety; but this custom is now fast disappearing. There is a Temperance Society in Lerwick, containing about 140 members. A practice which is general at other stations of the herring-fishery has been discontinued here, with great advantage. I allude to the custom among the curers of allowing a certain quantity of whisky to the men in each boat, in addition to the money-payment for the herrings. Messrs. Hay and Ogilvy, however, the principal herring-curers at Lerwick, aware of the pernicious effects of this practice, have abolished it, and have made a corresponding increase in the payment in money; and it is found, that now that the fishermen are left to their own choice, most of them have left off taking spirits out with them, and that they provide themselves with some other refreshment—frequently coffee. It is to be hoped that the excellent example set by Messrs. Hay and Ogilvy will be followed by others.

Shetland.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There is no officer on constant duty. The people, however, are found to be willing to act as special constables, and of those who are enrolled at Lerwick one-third always hold themselves in readiness to be called out. The assistance thus obtained is generally found sufficient to suppress any great disorder, but is not available in the prevention or detection of petty offences, nor, as we have seen, of some offences which cannot be considered petty.

Condition of the People.—Gradually improving; and now generally tolerably good. In the country districts, indeed, the people appear generally to enjoy an unusual degree of comfort, though they are occasionally exposed to severe hardships. There was a good deal of suffering, for example, last winter, owing to the failure of the crops last year, and what is far more important in Shetland, the failure of the fishing; and it is feared that similar causes will produce a like effect next winter. Upon the whole, however, the condition of the people, as I have already stated, appears to have improved.

Unfortunately the habit of saving has not yet been formed to any considerable extent, the people having increased their expenditure almost as fast as their means. Besides eating much more animal food than formerly, they lay out a great deal more in dress; and there is one luxury—tea—in which many of them appear to indulge excessively. The islands have been much benefited by the establishment of the herring fishing, which has been introduced within the last few years; and great advantage has also accrued from the relaxation that has taken place during the last twenty years in the old feudal system on which the land was held. When the change that is going on in this latter particular shall be completed, and the plan of letting the land on leases generally introduced, the people will probably lose much of that indolence which at present characterises them, and which is to be attributed, probably, in a great measure, to the circumstance of their not having formerly enjoyed many of the fruits of their own industry. As an example of the rate of wages, I will give that of female domestic servants. Even in Lerwick these generally receive only £3 a year, and in the country not more than from 30*s*. to 40*s*. They do so little work, however, that it is probable that the services of an English servant are really quite as cheap as those of a Zetlander.

There is a savings' bank at Lerwick, but it is not in a flourishing state, especially when it is considered that it is the bank for all the islands. The present amount of deposits is between £200 and £300 only. There is, however, a trade society at Lewick (a kind of friendly society), the funds of which amount to between £1,200 and £1,300, and in which there are between 300 and 400 members. There is a society also among the fishermen of Lerwick, but it is not in a flourishing state.

Education.—Until lately education has been in a very backward state, especially as regards the cultivation of the intellect. In some of the schools, however, abler masters have now been engaged, and better instruction is afforded; and it is expected that the rising generation will imbibe a taste for reading and a desire for improvement, which are not to be found among the older inhabitants. Very few children, if any, are growing up without some kind of education; and, among other improvements, the opening of an infant-school at Lerwick may be mentioned. This school contains about 100 scholars, and among them are to be found children from almost every grade of rank in the town.

The Zetlanders appear to be naturally shrewd and intelligent, and there is no doubt, that, with proper education, they will be found equal to the people in any part of the kingdom. Parochial libraries are forming in several districts, the usual subscription being a shilling a year. In the parish of Cunningsburg, where the population is about 1,000, the number of subscribers to the library is between 30 and 40, and the number of volumes between 200 and 300. In addition to the regular subscriptions to this library, a gentleman in the neighbourhood gives £1 a year; but the whole income is not more than £3 a year.

Amusements of the People.—The people of all classes visit each other a good deal in the winter, and about Christmas foot-ball is played at; but generally speaking the Zetlanders do not appear to be fond of active games.

ORKNEY.

Population about 30,000.

(Gaol at Kirkwall. Visited several times between the 1st and 8th of September, 1836.)

Orkney.

The circumstances of Orkney are in many respects similar to those of Shetland, already described. Besides the geographical resemblance between the two places, their population is about equal, and their chief towns—Kirkwall and Lerwick—are similarly situated, and are about equal in size, each containing about 3,000 inhabitants. In each cluster of Isles, too, there is but one gaol; and of these gaols it is difficult to say which is the worst.

The gaol of Kirkwall, like that of Lerwick, forms the basement and second story of the town-house, which stands in a corner of an open area in the middle of the town, and at the foot of a hill. The building is about 80 years old. The part which is at present used as a prison consists of three cells on the basement-floor, and a large room (formerly a mason's lodge) in the second story; the court-room, &c., forming the intervening or first story. The upper room is generally reserved for debtors; but occasionally, on an order from the surgeon, a criminal prisoner is removed into it. This room is very insecure. The gaoler declared that any one could get out it in half an hour, and he showed how this could be done. In wet weather the rain comes in, in considerable quantities, through the ceiling, and so frail is the tenement generally, that during one of the nights of my stay at Kirkwall, one of the sashes was blown into the room, although the wind was not unusually high.

Bad, however, as is the state of this room, the place is a region of comfort compared with the under cells. These are cold and damp, even at the present time, when summer has scarcely closed: but it is shocking to think that people should ever be immured in them in winter. At that season the floors are often covered with water; and the gaoler told me that during one stormy night, feeling sure that a great quantity of rain must have come in, he got up and went to the prison (he does not reside in it) and found the water a foot deep! He immediately, on his own responsibility, took the prisoners who were in confinement out of the lower cells, and put them into the debtors' room; and in the morning applied to the magistrates for authority to keep them there for a short time; which they, under the circumstances of the case, of course readily granted. On one side of the gaol the ground rises three or four feet above the floor of the lower cells, which, of course, is partly the cause of their dampness; but on all sides the floor is somewhat below the level of the ground. Until within the last few years, these lower cells were, like the upper one, very insecure, owing to the public having easy access to the prison-windows; and about six years ago a man charged with forgery made his escape by means of tools which were handed in to him. A wall has lately been built round that part of the prison in which the windows are placed; and the intercourse from without has, thereby, been much checked. As this wall, however, is only about six feet high, it can be easily got over; and, in point of fact, communication still goes on, though to a much less extent than formerly.

I found the prison tolerably clean, but ill ventilated. It is under the jurisdiction of the burgh magistrates.

State of the Prisoners.—The only prisoner at the time of my visit was a young woman of drunken habits and bad character, who had been in two or three times before. She is confined in one of the lower cells. The place is so insufficiently lighted that I could not see her very distinctly; but I observed that she had a dirty and forlorn appearance. I asked her when she washed herself last, and her answer was "last week." The surgeon told me that he generally found the prisoners dirty.

The number of prisoners is generally very small, being seldom more than two or three. Indeed the prison is often quite empty, and the average number last year was less than one. At the time of the Kirkwall annual fair, however, there are sometimes 8 or 10 prisoners.

Health.—Frequently bad, and much below the average enjoyed by people in the same class of life out of prison. The confinement commonly brings on a general debility. The most prevailing diseases are catarrh and acute rheumatism, caused in a great measure by the dampness of the prison. About 12 years ago a woman, charged with poisoning her husband, strangled herself in prison, and about five years ago another woman, who had been put in prison as a maniac, died within a couple of days after admission. These are the only two deaths which have occurred for several years; but this is readily accounted for, by the circumstance of the number of prisoners being so small, and by the fact that on the certificate of the surgeon a prisoner is sometimes liberated or removed on account of illness. The magistrates are in a dilemma at the present moment, in consequence of a charge of stealing a watch having been brought against a woman who is at the present time ill, and who, the surgeon says, will certainly die, if she is put in the prison.

The medical gentleman, who kindly attends the prison as surgeon, does so gratuitously.

Food.—The allowance to criminals varies from 4*d.* to 6*d.* a day, according to the order of the sheriff. It is generally placed in the prisoner's hands in the form of money. Out of it he has to provide food and fuel. The debtors generally receive about 10*d.* a day. Additional supplies of food are allowed from without, both to criminals and debtors.

Bedding.—Two blankets and some loose straw—an insufficient allowance. Clothing is not supplied.

Discipline.—None exists. The prisoners get up and go to bed when they choose. They are entirely without occupation, and when there are several of them they are generally put together, except that males are kept apart from females, and, when possible, debtors from criminals.

Instruction, &c.—There is no provision for instructing the prisoners; but the gaoler sometimes, of his own accord, teaches them a little reading and writing himself. The prison is seldom visited by a clergyman, and the prisoners are not supplied with bibles or books of any kind, except what are occasionally lent by the gaoler.

Offences and Punishments.—The conduct of such of the prisoners as belong to the islands is generally tolerably good; but the tinkers and the other vagrants are often turbulent. The keeper has been several times knocked down by them. He sometimes punishes according to the lex talionis; but generally offences go unnoticed.

Female Prisoners.—They are not under the charge of a female officer, and no difference is made between them and male prisoners.

Debtors.—There was no debtor in prison whilst I was at Kirkwall, and there seldom is one. Debtors supply their own bedding and clothing as usual; and, as usual, visits from their friends are freely allowed.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits from friends and acquaintances are generally permitted. Letters are submitted to the inspection of the sheriff, when the gaoler has any reason to suspect that their contents are improper.

SCOTLAND.

Smoking tobacco is allowed. There is no insane prisoner at present; but a woman who is subject to periodic attacks of madness is allowed the constant use of one of the rooms.

Officers.—The gaoler is the only officer. I am told that he is kind-hearted, but that he wants firmness and energy.

Fees.—No fees are exacted of criminals, but the gaoler makes a claim of 2*d.* a night from debtors. This fee, however, is but seldom paid. The gaoler's regular salary is only 5*l.* a year, in addition to 3*l.* which he receives as town-officer.

Accounts.—The only accounts kept are a register of imprisonments and an account of disbursements; both under the charge of the town-clerk. The following is the expenditure for the year ending 15th October, 1835:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of Criminals | 7 | 13 | 8 |
| Repairs | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Gaoler's salary | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors | 12 | 16 | 2 |

Average number of prisoners, during the year, ¾, including a debtor during one-sixteenth part of the year.

Yearly cost of a criminal prisoner at Kirkwall about 10*l.*—Daily cost about 6½*d.*

---

It is not observed, that the offenders are generally of any particular age; but it is remarked that they are more given to drunkenness than others in the same rank of life, and that they are much less intelligent and less informed. Some of their parents are known to be of bad character, and many of them to be neglectful; and many of the offenders have not been brought up to any regular occupation. To show how much crime sometimes runs in the same family it may be mentioned that there is a family in these islands, in which the father, mother, and two sons, have all been convicted of stealing, and an aunt hanged for murder. It is estimated that more than one half of the offences are committed by strangers, consisting chiefly of tinkers and other vagrants. Many petty thefts, however, are committed by the children of some of the poorest resident inhabitants.

A small prison is much wanted at Stromness, the principal port of Orkney. There is a considerable resident population there; but the prison is chiefly required for the crews of the whalers and other vessels which touch at Stromness, and for vagrants (not inhabitants of Orkney) passing through the place. There are sometimes as many as 50 vessels in the port at once, and then 200 or 300 strangers will be seen walking about Stromness at once. Having nothing to do till the wind changes, many of these indulge freely in drinking, and this leads to quarrels and assaults; and as there is no place of confinement the magistrates are compelled either to pass by an offence or to send those concerned to Kirkwall, a distance of 14 miles. There is no town property at Stromness with which to build a prison, nor is there any power to assess the inhabitants; and indeed it would be unreasonable to expect that they should be at the expense of building a prison, seeing that it is wanted almost entirely for strangers who visit their port without paying any dues.

I have spoken of the annoyance to which the inhabitants of Stromness are subject from the number of vagrants who at some seasons of the year infest the neighbourhood. A few days before my visit a sturdy beggar of this kind was parading the streets armed with a club, and asking alms in a way that was almost equivalent to levying contributions. Copper would not content him, and several persons—chiefly females I believe—being frightened, gave him silver.

There is a great want of a lunatic asylum in Orkney. The only place in which lunatics are ever confined at present is the prison at Kirkwall; which, as I have already shown, is quite unsuitable for any such purpose. The number of lunatics and idiots in Orkney is extraordinarily great, considering the amount of population. The reverend Mr. Barry, minister of Shapinsha, who is trying to raise subscriptions for building a lunatic asylum, has obtained returns of the number of lunatics and idiots in the different islands, by which it appears that there are altogether no fewer than 90. Many of these are at present wandering about without any provision, and depending on charity. A few years ago, an idiot woman in Kirkwall had a bastard child, and a mad woman at Strona had two bastard children. When the hereditary nature of madness is taken into consideration, such occurrences as these are most lamentable. In the island of South Ronaldsa (the population of which does not exceed 1,000) there have been six cases of suicide committed by lunatics during the last 17 years.

Causes affecting Crime in Orkney independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There are a great many spirit-shops at Kirkwall, and the habit of dram-drinking is very common through the islands; as in Shetland, however, drinking is seldom carried far enough to produce intoxication; and upon the whole the habit appears to be on the decline. Here, as in Shetland, the practice of drinking to excess at funerals has almost died away. There is no temperance society at Kirkwall, but there is a small one at Stromness.

Police.—Inefficient. An active police officer on constant duty is much wanted. There are, at present, no fewer than seven officers, but they have other occupations also.

Condition of the People.—There are a great many poor people in the islands, but abject poverty is by no means common. Upon the whole the condition of the people appears to have gradually improved, and to be now generally tolerably good. Here, as in Shetland, a motive to industry among the farmers has been wanting, owing to the cumberous and bad system on which the land has been generally let. The tenure, however, has been much simplified, and leases are coming into use, though slowly. The chief occupation of the people is fishing and farming—the same as in Shetland. A labouring man usually receives from 1*s*. to 1*s*. 6*d*. a day, and a farm-servant from 4*l*. to 6*l*. a year, with board and leave to attend the herring-fishing. Female domestic servants get from 3*l*. to 4*l*. a year. There is no savings' bank in Orkney.

Education.—Improved, and now in a tolerably good state. Most of the people can read easily, and in fact there is a good deal of reading among them. In the country the reading is chiefly confined to religious books, although small libraries containing works of general literature have lately been opened in a few parishes. In Kirkwall, besides a library for the richer classes, there is one for those in the humbler walk of life, containing between 400 and 500 volumes. The subscription is one shilling a year, and there are about 300 members. There are also two libraries connected with the public schools and one belonging to a Sunday school. There is a good deal of reading of newspapers, too, and other cheap periodicals, and, upon the whole, the habit of reading may be said to be common at Kirkwall, and more so than in most other places of the same size. At the present time most of the children, even of the poorer classes in Orkney, learn reading, writing, and arithmetic; and many also learn the elements of navigation. It is believed, that very few indeed are growing up without some kind of education.

Amusements of the People.—The Orcadians, like the Zetlanders, are not much given to active games. Foot-ball used to be common in winter, but it has fallen off very much of late.

---

A meeting of the heritors and commissioners of supply was called when I was at Kirkwall, to hear my report on the prison, and to consider some recommendations which I made for providing a temporary prison immediately, engaging a good keeper, and introducing a good system of discipline. It was resolved to adopt these recommendations, and for this purpose a negotiation was opened with the Lords of the Treasury for obtaining possession of an old manse constructed out of part of the bishop's palace, and now uninhabited. Various delays have arisen, but there now appears to be a good prospect of the matter being brought to a close, and of the resolutions being carried into effect. In the mean time such improvements have been made in the regulation of the old prison as the place will admit of. The allowance in money for example has been abolished.

THURSO, CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

Population about 3,500.

(Visited 9th September, 1836.)

Thurso.

The only place of confinement in this town is a small room used as a lock-up house, and which forms part of a building hired by the county for general purposes. This room is about 14 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 9 feet high. It is but ill-suited to the purpose to which it is applied; for it is so insecure that when any one is placed in it charged with a serious offence it is judged necessary to have a guard all night. The ground towards which the window looks is separated from the street by a low wall merely, which any one can easily get over; and, as the room is on the ground-floor, communication can readily be carried on with a person in confinement. The iron-bars and frame work of the window too, are not strong; and some time ago the town-officer, who has the charge of the place, happening to look towards the window saw that the prisoner within had just forced the window-frame and bars out of their place; and it was only by giving an instant alarm that the man was prevented from making his escape. About five years ago a woman who had been put in, in a state of raving madness, actually succeeded in forcing out the window and getting away.

The room is dry and tolerably well-ventilated; but I found it in a dirty state, and half filled with lumber. The walls, too, were almost covered with writing and rude drawings. There is an open fire-place which I believe is sometimes used; but when it is there must be a danger of the room catching fire. A heap of loose straw is the only provision for bedding.

There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit, and I was informed that the place is not in general used more than about 10 times a year.

This lock-up house is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates.

---

State of Crime, &c. at Thurso and in the immediate neighbourhood.—There has been a great decrease of crime in the last 50 years, particularly in aggravated cases of assault.

Thurso.

Minor assaults, are still the most common offences, and, next to these, petty thefts. whole number of offences, however, is now but small, and they are committed by a few persons.

The offenders are of various ages, except that there are a few boys from 12 to 15 years old. There are also 5 or 6 habitual tipplers in the town who commit petty thefts. Few of those who steal have been brought up to any regular occupation; and, as a class, they are below others in the same rank of life in education and intelligence. Their parents are often of bad or at least negligent character.

Not more than half the offenders are resident inhabitants, many of them being vagrants, with whom the town is much infested.

Causes affecting Crime at Thurso independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—The people are much improved in this respect. Twenty years ago the day of the weekly market was one of general drunkenness; but this is no longer the case. There is a Temperance Society, which is considered to be in a flourishing state; it contains about 60 members.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There is in fact nothing deserving the name.

Administration of Justice.—A resident magistrate, with power to try in a summary way, is much wanted. It would also be a great advantage if the sheriff substitute could hold his court here as well as at Wick.

Condition of the People.—Much improved and still improving; and now tolerably good. There are in all about 30 paupers in Thurso; that is, 30 in a population of 3,500. The people live in better houses than formerly, dress better, and eat more nutritious food. Their chief pursuits are connected with agriculture; though there is a good deal of fishing going forward also.

Wages.—Masons and carpenters earn from 14*s.* to 20*s.* a week: their work, however, being liable to interruption, they cannot count on these wages all the year round. A blacksmith, who can work at any season, gets about 14*s.* a week. Female servants have from 3*l.* to 4*l.* a year. Farm-labourers in this neighbourhood receive most of their wages in kind, including a small house. The total value of a regular farm-servant's earnings varies from 16*l.* to 25*l.* a year. In addition to this, however, he has the advantage of being able to go out in his boat in the evening and catch fish for his family.

There is not any savings' bank at Thurso.

Education.—Improved, and now very general It is believed that very few children are growing up without some kind of education, and that most of them, both boys and girls, are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is believed too that most of the adult population (except the very old) can read easily. There is a library for the working classes, supported chiefly by their own subscriptions; the annual payment is 4*s.*, and the number of members about 50. The library contains about 200 volumes, of various kinds of literature, excepting novels, which by an order of the committee are wholly excluded.

Amusements of the People.—None of the men appear to join in athletic games.

WICK, CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

Population of the Town, between 5,000 and 6,000; of the whole Parish, about 10,000.

(Burgh Gaol. Visited several times between the 8th and 14th of September, 1836.)

Wick.

This prison was built about 8 years ago, at the joint expense of the burgh and county; the burgh, however, paying much the greater share in proportion to its population, &c. It cost about 1,200*l.* It stands at the back of the county buildings (erected at the same time), but it is quite separate from them. It is within the town, but there is not much other building near it at present. The site appears to be healthy. The prison consists of two separate buildings; one for criminals and the other for debtors. These buildings are of the same size, and built on the same plan, each of them containing 2 rather large rooms, and 4 small rooms or cells. The dimensions are as follow:—

| Debtors' Rooms or Cells. | Criminals' Rooms or Cells. | Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. | Cubical Content. Feet. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 1 | 15½ | 10 | 10 | 1550 |
| 1 | 1 | 15½ | 10 | 9 | 1400 |
| 2 | 2 | 10½ | 7 | 10 | 730 |
| 2 | 2 | 10½ | 7 | 9 | 660 |

Each of the two buildings has a separate airing-ground, about 55 feet long, and 30 feet broad.

The prison is built entirely of stone, and in a substantial manner; the ceilings being all arched, and the floors laid with large flags. The number of cells, however, is too small to admit of the principle of separation being always carried into effect; and there is no cell for refractory prisoners. Had the two buildings been united, and some other alterations made in the plan, it is probable that at a small additional expense a sufficient number of cells might have been provided. Greater facilities for the inspection of the prisoners, too, could have been obtained. If, however, the plan of large district penitentiaries should be adopted, the present accommodations of this prison will be sufficient (with some slight alterations) for the purposes for which they will be wanted.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the provost and bailies of the burgh.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Wick.

Present State of the Prison and Prisoners.—Some of the debtors' rooms are rather dirty; the others are tolerably clean. The prison is dry and moderately well ventilated. Eight of the rooms are warmed by open fires; the other four are not heated artificially, but they can seldom be very cold, owing to the thickness of the walls.

The prison is unusally crowded at present, there being 22 prisoners; whereas the average number is not more than about 10. Of these 22, 9 are in for debt, 3 for offences against the Excise laws, 3 for resisting the Custom-House officers, 6 for theft, and 1 on a charge of forgery. Most of the prisoners are tolerably clean, but it depends principally on themselves whether they be so or not. I asked one of them who was dirty (a boy) when he last washed himself? He said, "On Sunday" (it was on Tuesday that I put the question); and on my inquiring when he washed himself the time before, he replied, "Last Friday:" the latter answer, however, was given with much hesitation; and, from the dark colour of his skin, I should doubt the truth of either statement.

Health.—As there is no regularly-appointed and responsible surgeon, I have some doubt of the accuracy of the information I obtained under this head. The health of the prisoners, however, is said to be generally tolerably good, but upon the whole to fall off somewhat. Slight fever is said to be the prevailing complaint. There has been no death in the prison for several years; but there have been several instances of liberation of debtors and revenue prisoners on account of severe illness. Most of the illness that takes place is said to be among the debtors, who are stated to be more careless than the criminal prisoners about keeping their cells clean, and to be in the habit of lying longer in bed, and of taking less exercise in the open air.

Food.—The allowance for food is 4*d.* a-day, paid in money: out of this sum, however, the prisoner has to pay for fuel, and occasionally some little for washing. The allowance to debtors is generally 8*d.* or 9*d.* a-day, also paid in money. Revenue prisoners get the usual allowance of 4½*d.* a-day from the Board of Excise or Customs. All the prisoners are allowed to receive additional supplies of food from without.

Bedding.—A double blanket, coverlet, and straw mattress. The blanket and coverlet are washed only once a-year; nor is the straw in the mattresses changed more frequently. No clothing is supplied.

Discipline.—None exists. The prisoners pass their time in each other's company, and in idleness.

Female Prisoners.—The females are of course separated from the males, but they are not placed under female superintendence.

Debtors.—The debtors as usual provide their own bedding and clothing. Many irregularities have arisen from the daily visits which are permitted from the friends and acquaintances of the debtors; particularly in the supply of whisky, which has sometimes been smuggled in mixed with milk. About 18 months ago the debtors got a supply of files and other instruments for escape; but they were discovered in time to prevent their being used. The magistrates have been very desirous of restricting the intercourse that goes on between the debtors and people outside the prison; but they have hitherto taken no steps in the matter, being fearful of exceeding their authority.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between untried and convicted prisoners. Visits and letters from friends and acquaintances outside the prison are allowed, with but few restrictions. Smoking tobacco, &c., is permitted.

Officers.—There are two officers, a gaoler and a turnkey, who both reside in the prison. Each of them, however, being a town-officer, has additional duties to perform. They appear to be desirous of doing their duty, and to be as well qualified as can reasonably be expected, considering the amount of their salaries.

There are no fees of any kind.

Accounts.—The only accounts hitherto kept are a register of imprisonments (containing a few particulars only) and an account of disbursements. In future, however, the register of imprisonments will be much more comprehensive; and there will be a register of prison offences and punishments, a journal, and a sick-list.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 15th October 1835, which is below that of an average year by about a quarter:—

| | | | | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminals | | | | 25 | 10 | 6 |
| Washing | | | | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Repairs | | | | 1 | 15 | 7 |
| Whitewashing and sweeping chimneys | | | | 1 | 12 | 0 |
| Salaries—Gaoler | 20 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| Turnkey | 10 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| Woman to clean the prison | 5 | 17 | 0 | | | |

Average number of criminal prisoners during the year, 4.

Average number of prisoners of all kinds, 8.

Average cost of each criminal prisoner during the year, about 11*l.*; daily average about 7½*d.*

General Observations.—This prison, managed as it has hitherto been, can have had but little effect in checking crime, and none in reforming the offender. With the exception of the restraint on their liberty, many of the prisoners must be more at their ease in gaol than at home; for they are well lodged, well fed, not required to do any work, and have always a number of companions with whom to gossip and idle away their time.

At a meeting of the magistrates and council, convened whilst I was at Wick, I proposed several alterations in the management of the prison, and some in the building. These were readily agreed to; and the following extracts from a letter of the town-clerk, dated 18th January 1837, show how far they have been carried into effect:—

"I beg to inform you that the system of feeding the prisoners in the criminal gaol here, recommended by you, has been in practice ever since your inspection, and I am happy to state that the result shows a great improvement in the discipline and economy of the gaol expenditure.

"The plan of separation of the prisoners has likewise been carried into full effect: and the bedsteads in use when you visited the gaol have been removed, and hammocks provided, agreeably to your suggestion.

"Hitherto, owing to the want of skill on the part of tradesmen, the other improvements have not been carried into effect; but the heritors of the county having, at their last general meeting, agreed to contribute 25*l.*, (being the one-half of the estimated expense of completing the whole,) I doubt not that it will soon be in my power to report to you that the work has been fully performed, and the whole of your suggestions duly attended to."

State of Crime, &c., at Wick.—There is but little deliberate crime; but there are many assaults of rather a serious kind, and there are some petty thefts. At the time of the herring season, also, there is a great deal of female prostitution, though principally, it is believed, among strangers.

Assaults, which form the bulk of the offences, are generally committed by young men between the ages of 16 and 30, and almost invariably take place under the excitement of whisky. The procurator-fiscal said he "never knew a sober assault." Serious thefts are mostly committed by vagrants unacquainted with any regular occupation; and petty thefts are committed by the same class, and by boys belonging to the town, who also have not been trained to any honest calling. Many of the parents of these boys are of dissipated character.

Causes affecting Crime at Wick, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is a good deal of drunkenness among the poorer classes, but not much among the other classes. The habit of morning dram-drinking, among the latter, has almost disappeared. There was a temperance society, but it has been dissolved.

State of the Police.—The sheriff-officers, who act only when directed, form the only police. An active and intelligent police-officer, to be on constant duty at Wick and in the neighbourhood, is much wanted.

Administration of Justice.—Uniform and efficient; being left almost entirely in the hands of the able sheriff-substitute of the county.

Condition of the People.—On the whole, much improved. The people, however, are exposed to a good deal of suffering, owing to occasional failures in the herring-fishing; the great abundance of one year not compensating (especially while there is so little general providence) for the deficiency of another. Thus, though the last herring-fishing was tolerably successful, the people do not appear to be prepared for the present bad one. It must be remarked, too, that there is a great want of productive labour out of the fishing season, and a want for females at all times. There is no savings' bank at Wick.

Education.—Much improved. It is believed that very few, if any, are now growing up without receiving some kind of education; and the quality of that education is improving. The British Society for the Encouragement of the Fisheries, which has done much in various ways for the town of Wick, is now building a public academy, intended for the reception of about 600 pupils, in which an enlarged education will be given at very small charges. Almost all the adult population are believed to be able to read easily, and most of the males to write also. The taste for reading, however, though spreading, does not appear to be yet very general. There is a library for the working classes, containing about 1,000 volumes, consisting for the most part of religious works and books of voyages and travels. The subscription is four shillings a-year, and there are 180 members.

Amusements of the People.—There are very few at present. The sheriff-substitute and procurator-fiscal think that much good would result from their introduction.

CAITHNESS.

Population about 37,000.

Caithness.

Prisons existing at present.—A prison at Wick and a small lock-up house at Thurso.—(See the separate Reports.)

Prisons wanted.—A small one is wanted at Lybster, a port and fishing station, 13 miles south of Wick. (The population, seven or eight miles round this village, is between 6,000 and 7,000.) A good small prison is wanted at Thurso also, instead of the present one.

State of Crime in Caithness.—There is but little crime in Caithness, especially in the rural districts. The most common offences are assaults, petty thefts, and petty acts of mischief. In the island of Stroma, however (which forms part of Caithness), and in some of the Highland districts, there is still a good deal of smuggling and private distillation; indeed, these offences are believed to have increased rather than diminished during the last three or four years, which is partly attributed to a frequent change of the Revenue-officers, who, by the time they have obtained the necessary local knowledge, are, it is said, removed, probably from an apprehension of their forming connexions with the inhabitants. Forging small bills of exchange, too, is becoming rather a common offence.

The assaults are generally of rather a serious kind, and sometimes very formidable: one occurred a short time ago, attended with the loss of a life; but such an event is now very rare; and, upon the whole, the people are much less addicted to fighting and quarreling than formerly. Forty years ago the old feeling of clanship existed in such force that a fair or market seldom passed over without a battle and severe bodily injury. The people at that time, indeed, appear to have been in much the same state as the Irish, in some districts, are described to be at the present day, with this aggravation, that the lairds often considered themselves bound in honour to take part with their tenants, without any regard to the question of justice. Though much subdued, and gradually dying away, this feeling of clanship still exists; and, when a tumult does arise at a fair, the Sinclairs will still range themselves against the Gunns, as in times of old. These outbreaks, however, are becoming less and less frequent, and are much more easily subdued than formerly by the civil power; they are, too, no longer countenanced to the slightest extent by the landed proprietors; nor do the people ever engage in them according to a preconcerted plan, or continue them from market to market, as formerly. Such affrays almost always now spring from the impulse of the moment, and from the excitement of whisky. That love of contest which used to display itself in broken heads is now chiefly manifested in the more peaceful form of lawsuits, which, it is to be hoped, is the last stage of its existence. During the year 1835 there were upwards of 3,000 cases decided in the Small Debt Court, arising principally, it is believed, from a pugnacious disposition. Comparing the number of cases with the population, it appears that, during the last year alone, on an average, rather more than one person in every three families in the county must have come into court either as plaintiff or defendant.

There is a much more willing obedience to the laws than formerly. A general feeling of security, in the rural districts, is shown by the custom of leaving the doors unlocked at night.

Almost all serious thefts in this county are committed by tinkers, hawkers, and other vagrants, not belonging to the district.

Causes affecting Crime in Caithness, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is still a good deal of drunkenness, particularly at fairs, sales, funerals, and other meetings. There is less, however, than formerly.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There is no officer on constant duty. It is thought that three good officers and a good superintendent would be sufficient for the whole county; one of these officers to be stationed at Wick, another at Thurso, and another at Lybster; each to have the care of his particular town and the surrounding district; and the superintendent to move about from place to place, and be responsible for the whole county. The want of an efficient police is particularly felt during the herring season, when great numbers of strangers come to the different stations.

Administration of Justice.—Very much more efficient than it was 50 years ago, and considerably improved even within the last few years. Seven years ago the procurator-fiscal for the county never took a precognition unless he had previously obtained the consent of two freeholders. The administration of justice has been much promoted, here as elsewhere, by the operation of Sir William Rae's Act (passed in 1828), giving the sheriff summary power of trial to the extent of six months' imprisonment; a power which might now probably be enlarged with advantage. A resident magistrate is wanted at Thurso; and it would be a great advantage if the sheriff-substitute could hold a court there periodically.

Condition of the People.—Much improved, and still improving, especially as regards those engaged in agriculture. The people live in better houses than formerly, and are less dirty in their habits; they dress better, and eat better food. Fifty years ago the labourers and tenants of this county were little better than serfs, performing all the laird's menial offices by turn, and constantly at the command of the grieve or bailiff to till the laird's ground and gather in his crops, &c., sometimes to the injury or even loss of their own crops. This system of forced labour, however, is now entirely at an end; and the servile demeanour and habits of deception which it fostered have also in a great measure disappeared. With increased motives to industry, and with a better system of agriculture, the people have rendered the land much more productive than formerly, and have brought a great deal of waste land into cultivation.

The chief occupations of the men are farming and fishing; in the former of which the women also take a part; and, indeed, in the latter also, so far as relates to the curing of the herrings. Productive labour, however, is still wanted for the women, and, at the end of the fishing season, for many of the men also. An attempt is now making to establish the straw-plait manufacture at Wick, which, it is hoped, will be successful: if so, it will afford occupation for females; while the working of the excellent flag-stone quarries which abound in this county, and the preparation of the stone for use, (employments which can be carried on at all seasons of the year,) are already finding occupation for a considerable number of men. And, as the demand for the stone is increasing, and is at present beyond the supply, it is hoped that this source alone will, after a time, give employment to all who desire it, and afford a counterbalance to the fluctuations of the herring-fishing, which, during the last three or four years, have been great.

Wages.—The farm servants generally receive the greater part of their wages in kind, and are furnished with a house. Their total income, including 7*l.* or 8*l.* in money, varies from about 16*l.* to 25*l.* a-year; and they have the opportunity of going out in the evening to fish. Their condition appears to be very comfortable. Female domestic servants receive from 3*l.* to 4*l.* a-year; of course, in addition to their board.

There is no savings' bank in Caithness; but, in one instance which came to my knowledge, a landed proprietor has himself established a kind of savings' bank among his tenantry and workpeople. Regular savings' banks however are much wanted.

Education.—Much improved, and now very general. At the present time, indeed, it is looked upon as a disgrace to allow a child to grow up without education. A better kind of education is given, too, than formerly; most of the children, girls as well as boys, now learning reading, writing, and the elements of arithmetic. Most of the adult population are said to be able to read, and the males to write also; but the taste for reading, though increasing, is not yet widely spread. Most of the reading consists of religious works and newspapers. There is a library, however, for the working classes at Wick, and another at Thurso; supported, in both instances, by the members themselves.

Amusements of the People.—The young have their usual games, but their elders have but few out-door amusements.

I am indebted for much of my information on the state of Caithness in former times, and on the improvements that have taken place, to Mr. Traill, of Castle-hill, near Thurso, (for a long time Member of Parliament for Orkney,) who, for 50 years, held the office of Sheriff of Caithness; and who, in that capacity, as in all others, has obtained the respect and esteem of all classes in the county.

DORNOCH.

Population about 500. (The population of the whole parish is about 3,000.)

(Visited 16th and 17th September 1836.)

Dornoch.

The prison of Dornoch was constructed about 20 years ago out of part of the ruins of the old bishop's palace. It consists of a tower with four stories, of which the lower one, however, is used as a court-house. Each of the three stories which form the prison is divided into a day-room and two small sleeping-rooms. One of the stories has been but lately prepared for the reception of prisoners, and has not yet been brought into use, nor can it be so with safety until the windows are made more secure. The tower stands in the middle of the town, but the situation is open and apparently healthy. Until lately the place was far from secure; and even now there must be some danger of escape. The last successful attempt at escape happened about two years ago, and was effected by means of tools with which the prisoner had been supplied through the window. An attempt, which nearly proved successful, was made about 12 months ago. Four men were concerned, and they did, in fact, force their way out of the prison, but they were recaptured just as they crossed the threshold. During the last few months the doors of the prison have been strengthened.

The means of separation are very limited, the rooms on each story being divided from each other by wooden partitions only, and the sleeping-cells being too small to allow of their being used during the day, even if they were well insulated. At the time of my visit I found a man, a woman, and a boy (all the prisoners at the time), in the same day-room, using the same privy, (the door opening into the day-room,) and separated only by a thin wooden partition at night. As no keeper resides in the gaol, of course no superintendence can be kept up.

Besides the rooms enumerated there are two below ground, which were formerly in common use, but which are now seldom employed. These cells are rather cold and damp.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is a burgh gaol, and is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates.

Present State of the Prison and Prisoners.—I found the prison clean and dry, and tolerably well ventilated. I was informed, however, that, when the wind is in a certain quarter, there is a stench from the privy. The prison is warmed by open fires; and, as the floors and partitions are of wood, and there is no resident keeper, there must be a danger of the building taking fire, the consequences of which might be terrible. Though the floors, &c., are clean, some of the rooms want whitewashing.

The present number of prisoners (three) is smaller than usual. All the prisoners appeared clean, and in moderately good health.

Health.—I was unable to obtain a report from the surgeon, as he lives at a considerable distance; but I learned from other persons that the health of the prisoners is generally good, except during the first few weeks of their confinement, when they are often troubled with constipation of the bowels, owing, probably, to the change of diet and the loss of exercise. No diseases can be specified as prevalent. The last appearance of an epidemic was in the spring of 1835, when three prisoners out of nine were attacked with the small-pox. None of the cases, however, were fatal; indeed, there has been no death for several years. As a sick-list has not been kept, it is impossible to speak of the average amount of illness with any degree of certainty.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Dornoch.

Food.—The allowance for food is 4½*d.* per day, paid in money; the prisoners paying for their own fuel and washing, as is almost always the case when there is a money allowance. Additional supplies of food from without are permitted; another usual accompaniment of a money allowance. The allowance to Excise prisoners and smugglers is 4½*d.* a-day, the same as to other prisoners; but a delay of several weeks often takes place before an order arrives from the Board, during which time the prisoners are dependent on charity. The allowance generally awarded to debtors varies from 6*d.* to 1*s.* a-day, and is paid in money.

Bedding.—Two double blankets and a straw mattress. The blankets are washed and the straw changed twice a-year.—Clothing is not supplied.

Discipline.—None. The prisoners pass their time in each other's company, and in idleness, and without instruction of any kind.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and the female prisoners are treated in every way like the males.

Debtors.—Very few debtors are sent to this prison. I found only one; and the average is much less than one. As usual, debtors provide their own clothing and bedding, and are freely allowed to receive visits from their friends, and supplies of food from without.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between untried prisoners and convicts. Visits from friends and acquaintances are freely allowed; and the gaoler does not remain in the cell while a stranger is there. Letters, however, are inspected. Smoking tobacco and the use of snuff are allowed. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—There are two gaolers, of equal authority: they appear to perform their present duties tolerably well, but I cannot say how far they are qualified to carry a good system into effect. I received no complaint against them from the prisoners.

There is no chaplain; and the prison is seldom visited by a clergyman. The surgeon attends when sent for, and generally inquires also once a-week into the state of health.

Fees.—A claim is made by the gaolers of 4½*d.* a-night from every debtor, but the money is seldom obtained, no compulsory means being ever resorted to to enforce payment. There are no other fees.

Accounts.—The town-clerk keeps a register of imprisonments, according to the form prescribed by Act of Parliament, except that the age of the prisoners has not been entered till lately. The town treasurer and the clerk of supply keep an account of the expenditure. There are no other records.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 30th September, 1835:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminal prisoners | 26 | 18 | 7½ |
| Repairs and whitewashing | 3 | 12 | 2 |
| Alterations | 18 | 0 | 0 |
| Salaries.—Two gaolers | 35 | 0 | 0 |
| | 83 | 10 | 9½ |
| Deduct cost of alterations | 18 | 0 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors and Revenue prisoners | £65 | 10 | 9½ |

Average number of prisoners during the year:—Criminals, 3¾; Revenue prisoners, 1¾; Debtors, ¼;—Total 5¾.

Average yearly cost of each criminal prisoner, about £14.—Average daily cost, about 9*d.*

General Observation.—The system in use can do nothing towards reforming the prisoners, but it is believed that the fear of the disgrace of imprisonment has an effect among the surrounding population.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE.

Population about 27,000.

Sutherlandshire.

Prisons existing at present.—The only one in this large county is the prison at Dornoch, which is at the south-eastern extremity of the county. (See the foregoing Report).

Prisons wanted.—A small prison is wanted at Tongue, a fishing station on the northern side of the county; and another at Scourie, a fishing station, and the centre of a populous district on the western side.

State of Crime, &c., in Sutherland.

There appears to be but very little crime in this county, and less than formerly. Almost the only offences now committed are assaults, and petty offences against the Excise laws, consisting almost entirely of illicit malt-making in small quantities. Smuggling and private distillation are quite at an end in the greater part of the county; and the offence of stealing is looked upon as so disgraceful, that a thief, it is said, is shunned by every one, and is glad to withdraw from the neighbourhood. Except in the towns and villages, it is stated to be the general practice to leave the doors unlocked at night; and even in the most populous places I was informed that linen left out to dry is never stolen. Robbing gardens, however, is carried to some extent at these places.

In Mr. Loch's interesting account of the improvements on the estate of Sutherland, a table is given of the number of sheep lost and stolen (as was believed) during several years, beginning with 1810. It appears by this table that the offence of sheep-stealing was very common at that time, although the number of thefts rapidly decreased in the following years, occasioned, apparently, by the removal of more and more of the cotters from the glens among the sheep farms to the neighbourhood of the sea-coast. The following is extracted from a letter from Mr. Sellar, the distinguished farmer of Sutherlandshire, to Mr. Loch; and which appears in the appendix to the work just referred to. Mr. Sellar is describing the state of things when he first came to the county, and is speaking of two other farmers (Messrs. Atkinson and Marshall), who were the first to begin the improved system:—" Under any other proprietors than the Marquis and Marchioness of Stafford, and but for the prompt attention afforded by them, I am convinced that, rent free, the concern had proved a very ruinous one. In truth, the thefts committed on their property, and the damage done by the disturbance of their flocks and by vermin of every description, exceeded the highest rent paid in Britain. But these days are past,—their effects beginning to be forgotten." In another place Mr. Sellar, speaking of the objects of an association of the farmers in Sutherlandshire, mentions, as one of them, " the prevention and suppression of theft, which went on in the first years of sheep-farming to an extent almost incredible. In Sutherland this sort of theft must, if it had not been checked by the discreet measures of the proprietors, have soon proved quite ruinous to those whose whole capital was embarked in sheep."

Smuggling and poaching were stopped chiefly by its being made a stipulation, in all leases of land granted by the Duke of Sutherland, that the lease should be cancelled if the tenant was convicted of either of these offences; and, as this estate (now held by the Duchess of Sutherland) includes the greatest part of the county, such an ejectment is equivalent to banishment. The same power of removal is exercised over the tenants-at-will for gross misconduct of any kind.

Causes affecting Crime in Sutherland, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Very little, and much less than formerly. It is thought, indeed, that there is as much whisky consumed as ever; but that it is now taken in small quantities, though more frequently. A person is very seldom seen in a state of intoxication. There is no temperance society in Sutherland.

State of the Police.—Good. An active and intelligent officer, named Stewart, has charge of the whole county; and, extensive as is his district, he appears to be competent to the performance of his duties. It should, however, be remarked, that the factors and ground-officers of the Duchess of Sutherland keep up a constant superintendence over the people, and aid very much in checking and suppressing crime.

Condition of the People.—There is a considerable difference of opinion on this point, and my opportunities of inquiry were not sufficiently extensive to enable me to form a decided judgment. From the best evidence I could collect, however, I am inclined to believe that the condition of the people has greatly improved during the last 30 years; that they live in better houses, are better clad, and live on better food; that they have become much better workmen, and that they obtain a higher remuneration for their labour; and, lastly, that the demand for labour is become more steady. In some of the western parts of the county, however, where the people are dependent almost solely on the fisheries, a good deal of suffering still occurs sometimes.

The " Account of the Improvements on the Estate of Sutherland," already referred to, speaks of a great amelioration in the condition of the labouring classes. It may be objected that this statement proceeds from one who took an active part in effecting the changes, and whose mind is likely, therefore, to be biased. This is certainly true; but a similar objection lies against the statements of the opposite side: while Mr. Loch's high public character, and the clear and detailed nature of the account which he gives, afford a title to confidence which, so far as I know, is not possessed by the adverse party.

The improvements which are manifest to the eye are striking. I am informed that thirty years ago there was literally no road in the whole county, paths being merely marked by a few stones placed along their side. At the present time the county is intersected in every direction by excellent roads, measuring in the whole about 600 miles, and made, to a considerable extent, at the expense of the late Duke and of the present Duchess of Sutherland. By an enlightened liberality these roads have been thrown open to the free use of the public, there not being a single toll-bar in the whole county. Much land, formerly lying waste, has been brought into excellent cultivation, and presents a smiling appearance; the fishing too is now carried on on a scale and with an industry far beyond everything that could be boasted of in past times.

The people are chiefly occupied in tending sheep, in agriculture, and in fishing. A day-labourer gets from 1*s*. to 1*s*. 6*d*. a-day, except in the herring season and harvest time, when he gets more. A mason, carpenter, wheelwright, &c., earn from 2*s*. to 2*s*. 6*d*. Female domestic servants receive about 4*l*. a-year. There is a savings' bank, with branches over the whole of the Duchess's estate, and the depositors are allowed four per cent. interest. It was established about two years ago. The general account not having been made up lately, I could not learn the amount of deposits or the number of depositors.

Education.—Considerably improved on the eastern side of the county, which is the most populous. In this district education appears now to be in a tolerably good state, very few of the children growing up without learning reading and writing at least; and the reading is taught upon the improved system, by which the child is made to understand what he repeats. In some parts of the county, however, education is still in a backward state. It is said that some of the parochial schoolmasters are very inefficient. Most of the old inhabitants in the county are unable to read, and there are at present no libraries for the poorer classes.

Tain.

TAIN.

Population about 2,000. (The population of the whole parish about 3,000.)

(Visited 19th September 1836 and the two following days.)

The prison of Tain is a very old one, having been built about 200 years ago. It is in the form of a square tower, and stands in the middle of the town. There is no objection to the site, however, on the ground of health. There are only four rooms, with a dungeon below ground, which is now never used. Each room forms a story of the tower, and is 15 feet square (one corner being taken off for the staircase); two of them are between six and seven feet high, the other is 12 feet high. Each room contains only one small window, and they are all oppressively close.

About 11 years ago an additional prison and a new court-house were built by the side of the old prison, at an expense of about 1,500*l.* The ceilings and floors, however, in this new prison were made of wood; and about three years ago the whole building, including the court-house, was burnt down. The fire took place in the night, and three persons (one of them the wife of a prisoner who had come from a distance to see him) were burnt alive. The keeper lives at some distance from the prison, and when an alarm was given, and some one ran to him to come and unlock the doors, he supposed the summons to be a mere trick to procure the release of the prisoners. This produced some delay, and when at length he arrived on the spot he was so much agitated and confused that it was some time before he could find the right key. In the meanwhile the fire had got to such a head that it was no longer possible to rescue the prisoners, and the poor creatures were seen at the windows calling for help till the whole building became a mass of fire and fell in.

It is to be hoped that, after this frightful accident, no new prison will be built with combustible materials, or without accommodation for a resident keeper.

From some expressions that were heard to drop from one of the prisoners, who was in a state of nervous excitement bordering on madness, it is supposed that he wilfully set fire to the gaol; if he did so, he paid dearly for the act, for he was one of the sufferers.

In the old gaol (the only one now in use) the ceilings are made of wood, but the floors are laid over with stone; still a person bent on setting fire to the place might certainly effect his purpose. This is an additional reason, were such wanted, for abandoning this prison as soon as possible. Among its many defects must be mentioned its insecurity. About eight years ago a man escaped by making a rope with his blankets, and letting himself down from the top of the tower, the door to which had been left open through the negligence of the person who then held the office of gaoler, and who was dismissed in consequence. About five years ago three men escaped by making an opening in the wall at the back of the chimney. The wall is now made more secure, but it is very possible that some other plan of escape may be devised, notwithstanding that, in its general construction, the prison is very strong and solid; the greater part of the outer wall being nearly four feet thick. The experience of Tain, like that of many other places, shows that the only real securities against escape are the separation of the prisoners, their employment, and the existence of means for overlooking them at all hours without their knowledge. At present there can be neither separation nor inspection; and, hitherto, the prisoners have passed their time in unbroken idleness. Conversation, too, can be kept up, not only among those in the same cells, but among all who are in the gaol; and two untried prisoners, charged with the same offence, were lately overheard communicating with each other respecting the plea to set up at their trial. The prisoners can talk also to persons in the street; and such conversation frequently takes place.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is a burgh gaol, and is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates.

Present State of the Prison and Prisoners.—The floors and bedding are tolerably clean, but the walls are very dirty. The place is dry and warm, but it is wretchedly ventilated.

There are, at present, 11 prisoners, which is about the average number. Of these, five are in prison for assaults, two for poaching, three for offences against the Excise, and one for debt. Some of the prisoners looked tolerably clean, but others were dirty; and the question of cleanliness is evidently left with them. On inquiring respecting two boys who were dirty, I found that the other prisoners sometimes take them in hand, and force them to wash themselves. Altogether, the prisoners had a miserable appearance; one of them, particularly, who had been in the gaol six months, looked very ill; and, on my asking the surgeon about him, he told me that there was little doubt that his illness was brought on by the extreme closeness of the prison, and that he greatly feared that he would die unless liberated in a short time, and without waiting for the expiration of his term of imprisonment, which would not be out till next April.* One of the Excise prisoners had a large tumour on his foot, and another had a contraction of some of his fingers; and the surgeon was of opinion that both these men ought to be sent to some place where they could undergo an operation. One of the poachers also looked ill.

Since the new prison was burnt the old one has often been very much crowded; for, owing to the bad state of the prison of Dingwall, an order was made (in the year 1830) to send all prisoners, from the western as well as from the eastern division of Ross-shire, to Tain; and this order continued in force even after the new prison was burnt down; and, though lately annulled as respects criminal prisoners, continues in operation at the present moment as regards debtors and prisoners under the Revenue laws. The consequence is that there have been sometimes more than 20 prisoners in confinement, at one time, in this wretched gaol; and, if there happened to be a female, who of course required a separate room, the other rooms were crowded almost to suffocation. All attempt at classification even, to say nothing of separation, was vain under these circumstances; and about two years ago there were, in the same room, a woman who had been found guilty of child-murder, and a young girl charged with an offence against the Excise, but who, as it at length turned out, was entirely innocent. Alarmed at the sight of a number of Revenue officers, who had appeared near her father's cottage, this poor girl had taken flight; and this circumstance being construed into evidence of guilt, she was pursued and captured; and, being taken before a justice of the peace, a warrant was obtained for her committal to prison, and she was carried 80 miles from her home, and placed in the gaol of Tain. When the real facts came to light, she was of course set at liberty; but I was informed that she had nearly lost her intellect before her liberation took place. The foregoing statement is on the authority of Mr. Ross, the provost of Tain.

Even those who enter the gaol in a sound state of health, in a few weeks generally lose their strength, and grow pale and emaciated. The most prevailing diseases are affections of the chest (tending to consumption) and rheumatism. No death has occurred for some time; but many of the Excise prisoners have been liberated on account of illness. No sick-list has hitherto been kept.

Food.—The allowance for food is paid in the form of money, and is 6*d.* a-day to criminal prisoners (excepting boys, who get 4*d.*), and generally 1*s.* a-day to debtors. Excise prisoners receive 4½*d.* a-day after an order has been obtained from the Board in London; but this is often attended with a delay of several weeks, during which time the prisoners, if unable to support themselves, which is generally the case, are dependent on charity. Sometimes their fellow-prisoners share their food with them; sometimes the gaoler helps them, though he is but a poor man; and sometimes a collection is made for them from door to door. At the time of my visit there were two Excise prisoners who had been in confinement more than a month, but who had received no regular aliment until the previous Saturday. There were also two men in prison for poaching, who were not receiving any allowance; these men, however, had a small supply of money with them when they came.

Bedding.—A double blanket and some loose straw.—The prisoners are not supplied with clothing.

Discipline.—None. There is neither separation, employment, nor instruction. The conduct of the prisoners, however, is said to be generally tolerably good. Punishment is seldom awarded; when it is, it consists generally of chaining the prisoner to the floor by one of his legs.—I received no complaint of unkind treatment.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female superintendent, and the female prisoners are treated in every way like the males. It is not often, however, that there is a female prisoner.

Debtors.—There are seldom more than one. Debtors supply their own bedding and clothing, as usual.

Miscellaneous.—Tried and untried prisoners are treated alike. Intercourse with friends and associates is freely allowed to all. Letters are allowed to pass without inspection; but, as few of the prisoners can read or write, this does not lead to much abuse. Smoking tobacco and taking snuff are allowed. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—There are two gaolers, who also act as town-officers. Neither of them resides in the prison. They appear to be better qualified than could be expected from their salary, which is only 10*l.* a-year each.

There is a surgeon, who attends when required; but there is no chaplain, though the prison is visited by a clergyman about once a-month.

Fees.—The town-clerk receives a fee of 2*s.* for each debtor on his admittance, and 3*s.* from him when his petition for aliment is presented. The gaolers also claim 4*d.* a-night from the debtor for the time he is in prison; but this claim has not been enforced for several years. There are no other fees.

Accounts.—The accounts are kept by the town-clerk, and they consist of a register of imprisonments (according to the form prescribed in the Act of 9 Geo. IV. cap 29), and an account of disbursements.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 15th of October 1835:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminal prisoners | 42 | 11 | 3 |
| Straw | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Sundries | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| Salaries:— | | | |
| Two gaolers, each 10*l. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| A man for cleaning | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| A woman for carrying water, &c. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Surgeon | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors and Revenue prisoners | £71 | 14 | 9 |

Average number of prisoners during the year:—Criminals, 4¾; Excise prisoners, 5¼; debtors, ¾;—Total, 10¾.

Average cost of each criminal prisoner, during the year, about 12*l.*—Daily cost, about 8*d.*

* Once a year the gaolers go round the town and make a collection; by which they probably add about £1 each to their salaries.

Tain.

Usual State of the Prisoners at their Entrance.—The criminals are generally from 20 to 30 years of age; the others are of various ages. Most of the assaults (the prevailing offence) are committed under the excitement of whisky. Those who commit thefts have seldom any regular occupation, being chiefly vagrants, calling themselves tinkers, hawkers, &c. The prisoners, as a class, are below others in the same rank of life in education and intelligence. Little is known respecting the character of their parents. Those imprisoned for assaults are chiefly villagers. Very few farm servants or fishermen are sent to prison. Most of the assaults and offences against the Excise laws are committed by the inhabitants of the county; but the thefts are chiefly by vagrants, by whom the county is much annoyed.

CROMARTY.

Population about 2,600.

(Visited the 22nd September 1836.)

Cromarty.

The prison of Cromarty consists of the ground-floor of the town-house, (built about 50 years ago,) which stands in the middle of the town, and at the foot of a hill. The ground, on one side, is higher than the floor of the prison by three or four feet; and, as the soil abuts against the wall, the rooms are damp. The place is also very insecure, and the accommodation quite insufficient. The windows open, on one side, upon an area to which the public have easy access. The ceilings are of wood; and a prisoner could, without much difficulty, make an opening into the court-room above, the windows of which are without bars or guard of any kind. Whenever, therefore, there is a prisoner in the gaol who is likely to try to escape, a constant watch is kept in the court-room. The last successful attempt at escape happened about 20 years ago.

There are only three rooms; and although, generally speaking, the number of prisoners is very small, the gaoler is sometimes compelled to put prisoners in the same room who ought by no means to be associated. Last April it was found necessary to hire a room at a public-house for a criminal prisoner, owing to the crowded state of the gaol, and to the circumstance that a debtor prisoner threatened to bring his action against the magistrates if they put any criminal into the same room with him.

The dimensions of the three rooms are as follows:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. |
|---|---|---|---|
| One debtors' room, andOne criminals' room } each . . . . . | 19ft. | 13ft. 10in. | 7ft. 10in. |
| One cell, used chiefly for drunken men, &c. . . . . . . | 11ft. 4in. | 8ft. | 7ft. 10in. |

There is no airing-ground.

A woman who was lately in the gaol, charged with the reset of theft (receiving stolen goods), is believed to have escaped conviction owing to the witnesses having the means of communicating with her through the prison-windows, and of settling what they should say when called into court.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is a burgh gaol, and is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates. The expenses, however, are defrayed by the county at large.

Present State of the Prison and Prisoners.—I found the prison damp, rather dirty, and not well ventilated. Two of the rooms can be warmed in winter by open fires, but there are no means of warming the third. There is no security against the building taking fire.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit. The average number of prisoners is about two. I found, on inquiry, that there is no regulation for compelling the prisoners to wash themselves, and that they are often dirty.

Health.—The usual state of health among the prisoners appears to be tolerably good, although it falls off during their confinement. No diseases can be specified as particularly prevalent. There has been no epidemic in the prison for a long time; and no death has occurred lately.

Food.—The allowance to criminal prisoners is 4½*d.* a-day, paid in money; to debtors, from 8*d.* to 1*s.* a-day, also paid in money. Additional supplies from without are permitted.

Bedding.—Loose straw only.—No clothing is supplied.

Discipline.—None. There is neither labour, separation, nor instruction. The conduct of the prisoners is stated to be generally good. There are no punishments.

Female Prisoners.—No female superintendence is provided; and no difference is made between females and males. The two classes, however, are kept separate.

Debtors.—They provide their own clothing and bedding; as, indeed, all the prisoners in this gaol are expected to do. Visits are freely allowed.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits from friends and associates are allowed at the discretion of the gaoler; but, as has already been mentioned, communication through the windows can never be prevented. It would also be impossible to prevent smoking; and it would therefore be useless to forbid it.

Officers.—The gaoler is the only officer, and he is not qualified for his situation, as he is old and evidently in the habit of drinking freely. No clergyman is engaged to attend the prison, and there is no regular surgeon, but one is sent for when required.

Cromarty.

Fees.—The greater part of the gaoler's salary consists of fees, paid, however, for the most part, by the county. His regular salary is only 3*l.* a-year; but he is allowed 1*s.* on the admission of every prisoner, and 4*d.* for every night of his stay. If the prisoner be a criminal, or offender under the Excise laws, this fee is paid by the county; but, if a debtor, then the prisoner himself is expected to pay it; though I was informed that, in point of fact, debtors seldom pay anything. The town-clerk receives 2*s.* 6*d.* from the imprisoning creditor, and 3*s.* from the debtor, if the latter petitions for aliment.

Accounts.—No other account has hitherto been kept than a record of disbursements; the original warrants of imprisonment, however, have been preserved.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 30th April 1835:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Keeper's salary, 3*l.*; fees, 10*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* | 13 | 1 | 4 |
| Repairs | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of Revenue prisoners (the only prisoners this year) | 13 | 6 | 4 |

Average number of prisoners during the year:—Criminals, 0; Revenue prisoners, 1½; debtors, 0; —Total, 1½.

General Observation.—This prison can have but very little good effect, either on the prisoners or the population generally.

---

State of Crime, &c., at Cromarty.—There are but few serious crimes; but there are many petty thefts. On the whole, however, there has been a decrease of crimes and offences, although there are more petty thefts than formerly. There are fewer assaults; family feuds, which were once common, being now at an end.

Most of the offenders are from 25 to 45 years old. They are more frequently of drunken habits than the generality of people in the same rank of life; though they are about equal to others in education and intelligence. Little is known respecting the character of their parents. Most of them are inhabitants of the town; and most of the petty thefts are said to be committed by sailors' wives, after they have spent the allowances which their husbands (out at sea at the time) had made them before leaving.

Causes affecting Crime at Cromarty, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is much drunkenness among the seafaring part of the population. Upon the whole, however, there appears to be less drunkenness than formerly. There is not any temperance society.

State of the Police.—There cannot be said to be any regular police at Cromarty. An efficient officer is much wanted; and, at the last meeting of the heritors of the county, it was determined to engage one; but, as yet, no appointment has taken place.

Condition of the People.—Tolerably good. The bulk of the people appear to be much better off than formerly; but the shopkeepers are less thriving, owing to Cromarty having been superseded, to a considerable extent, by Invergordon, as a port and market for Easter Ross. A large hemp manufactory has been established at Cromarty, and is believed to have done much towards bettering the condition of the people. The chief occupation of the people is fishing and curing pork. Masons, carpenters, and workmen in the hemp manufactory, earn from 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* a-day; day-labourers, about 1*s.* 6*d.* There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Very much improved of late, and now in a comparatively good state. There are still some children growing up without any education, particularly among the families of the fishermen; but the number is not large. It is believed that most of the adults are able to read easily, the reading consisting for the most part of religious works, and newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There is not any library for the working classes.

There are very few popular amusements.

FORTROSE (ROSS-SHIRE).

Population, including the neighbouring village of Rosemarkie, about 900.

(Visited 23rd September 1836.)

Fortrose.

The Fortrose prison is a wretched place, quite unfit for use. The authorities of the town have applied several times to have it condemned, but in vain, and prisoners still continue to be put into it, not only from Fortrose and Rosemarkie, but from part of the county also. The prison consists of a single room, formed out of part of the ruin of an old cathedral: it is damp, cold, dirty, and insecure; and, moreover, is infested with rats. Till within the last two years another room above this was also used as a prison; but, a debtor having escaped from it, it was abandoned; and since that time every prisoner, whether debtor or criminal, has been confined in the lower room, which, though very insecure, is less so than the upper one appears to have been. The last instance of escape from the lower room took place about three years ago, when the same man twice got out within a short period, assisted by some one outside, who supplied him with a saw and other tools through the window. Since that time the door has been strengthened somewhat, but communication from without remains as open as ever. The room is about 17½ feet long, 11 feet broad, and 9 feet high; it has an open fire-place, but the walls and floor are so damp that I should think it would be impossible ever to warm it thoroughly, even supposing the prisoners could afford to have a large fire. The building stands in the middle of the town, on one side of a public green.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is a burgh gaol, and under the jurisdiction of the magistrates.

State of the Prisoners.—There are fortunately but few prisoners, the average number being about two. At the time of my visit there was only one,—a man, who had a dirty and comfortless appearance.

Mr. Grant, the sheriff-clerk of Inverness-shire, told me that, happening to be at Fortrose one morning, in the summer of last year, and passing near the prison, he looked in through the window, and saw four men, all of them completely naked, some walking about and some lying on the bed. In answer to his inquiry why they had no clothes on, they said that they had thrown them off to get rid of the vermin. All these men were in prison for offences against the Excise, and they complained to Mr. Grant that they were not allowed any aliment, and were depending on the charity of the inhabitants of Fortrose—chiefly of Dr. Tulloch, the provost—for their subsistence; and, on inquiry, Mr. Grant found this statement to be correct. So that, had not private charity stepped in, these poor fellows were doomed not only to confinement in a damp, filthy gaol, but to actual starvation.

Health.—There is no surgeon; and a prisoner is sometimes ill without receiving medical attendance. From the gaoler I learned that the prisoners generally become pale and thin, and that they suffer from long-continued constipation of the bowels, and from affections of the chest. There has been no death in the prison for many years, but prisoners have sometimes been liberated on account of illness.

Food.—Criminals, whether before or after trial, receive 6*d.* a-day in money; debtors from 6*d.* to 1*s.* a-day. Additional supplies from without are allowed; indeed, they could not be prevented. Prisoners under the Revenue laws have the usual allowance of 4½*d.* a-day, but here, as at many other places, there is often a delay of several weeks before an order for aliment arrives from the Board. An instance of the consequences of this delay has just been given.

Bedding.—All the prisoners are expected to provide their own bedding. In cases of complete destitution, however, the town hires bedding (if the prisoner be a criminal) at the rate of 2*d.* a-night.

Discipline.—None. There is neither labour, instruction, nor separation. I was told that the prisoners generally behave well, but that when they are unruly they are threatened with handcuffs.

Female Prisoners.—It need scarcely be stated that there is no female officer. Female prisoners, however, are never put into the cell when there is a male prisoner.

Debtors.—The average number is about one. Visits from their friends are freely allowed.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between untried and convicted prisoners. Intercourse with friends and associates is freely allowed; it would, indeed, be idle to forbid it, as the window of the prison is as public as that of a retail shop.

Officers.—The only officer is the gaoler, and as he receives only 3*l.* a-year, he can of course give but little time to the management of the prison. I have already stated that there is no surgeon; and the prison is seldom, if ever, visited by a clergyman.

Fees.—The only fees paid are on an application of a debtor for aliment; these, however, amount to no less a sum than half-a-guinea, if the imprisoning creditor do not happen to reside in the immediate neighbourhood. As the allowance usually awarded to a debtor is from 6*d.* to 1*s.* a-day, these fees must generally eat up the whole sum granted for a fortnight's aliment.

Accounts.—The only record hitherto kept is an account of disbursements; and here, as at Cromarty, in order to find out how many prisoners there had been, and what were the circumstances of their committal and the length of their imprisonment, it was necessary to examine the original warrants; and some of these having been lost, owing to the town-clerk having been changed, I found it impossible to make up the account.

The following is an account of the expenditure for the year ending 15th October 1835:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminals | 5 | 18 | 0 |
| Gaoler's salary | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Sundries | 0 | 4 | 6 |
| | £9 | 2 | 6 |

General Observations.—It would not be right to cast blame on the magistrates and inhabitants of Fortrose for the miserable state of their prison. It is the general system which is in fault, in throwing a burden, borne for the public good, on a small class of the community, without regard to justice, or even to the pecuniary ability of those who are selected. Any property that might once have belonged to the burgh of Fortrose had been alienated before those now holding office came into power, and the general poverty of the town makes the inhabitants ill able to raise money, even for objects strictly confined to their own use. I have mentioned an instance of the escape of a debtor, which happened about two years ago; the amount of the debt for which he was imprisoned was 35*l.*, and this sum the magistrates had to raise and to pay to the creditor. A similar instance of escape, followed by similar consequences, took place some time before; and, although debtors are now confined in the cell for criminals, which is less insecure than that which they formerly occupied, it would still be no bad speculation (and for aught I know such a scheme has already been devised and acted upon) for two swindlers to get up a fictitious case of debt, and one of them to agree to go into the prison of Fortrose, in the expectation of making his escape, and thereby of compelling the magistrates to pay the amount of the debt to his accomplice.

---

State of Crime, &c., at Fortrose and Rosemarkie.—Notwithstanding many unfavourable circumstances acting at these places, there appears to be but little crime, and less than formerly. The only particular change that was mentioned is the disappearance of brutal assaults.

Causes affecting Crime, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not much.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There are three town officers who act when directed, but there is no one whose duty it is to keep constantly on the alert.

Condition of the People.—This appears upon the whole to have fallen off somewhat. There is certainly a great deal of poverty at the present time. There used to be a busy linen-trade, and a good deal of shoemaking, at Fortrose, but these branches of industry have both declined; and the people are now dependent, to a considerable extent, on the herring-fishing, which is precarious, and which during the last three years has not been successful. Their chief occupation is fishing, and making brogues (a coarse kind of shoe or small boot). A labouring man gets 1*s.* 3*d.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day, but he cannot obtain nearly constant employment. Female domestic servants receive from 2*l.* 2*s.* to 3*l.* a-year. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—In a very poor state. This is the first place I have visited in Scotland in which there is not a parochial school; there is, indeed, a public school, called the Academy, but the fees are too high for the poorer classes. I am informed that there was once a burgh school, supported out of the town funds, but that it fell into decay some years ago, and has not been re-established; indeed, as has already been mentioned, the town no longer possesses funds for any purpose. A Sunday school has been opened, but that is on a limited scale. It is believed that three-fourths of the children in this neighbourhood are growing up without any education. There are many of the adult population who can read easily, but there are also many who cannot. There is no library for the working classes.

The people are not much given to amusements.

INVERNESS.

Population about 12,000; or, including a district five miles round, about 15,000.

(Visited for the first time on the 22nd of November 1835, and again from the 23rd to the 30th of September 1836.)

Inverness.

The prison of Inverness stands in the middle of the town, on one side of a street sloping down towards the river: it was built about 40 years ago, at a cost (deducting for the court-room) of about 1,300*l.* At that time it was probably looked upon as an admirable erection, and a first-rate prison, for there is a marble tablet in the court-room, recording the names of those who held office on that memorable occasion, and setting forth, and probably with truth, that the new building was put up with the view of "softening the rigour of confinement to the unfortunate prisoner." If, from this inscription and an examination of the present gaol, we are to form an idea of what formerly existed, the "rigour of confinement," before it was thus mitigated, must have been severe indeed, and those subjected to it must have been truly "unfortunate." And yet even the last prison was a great improvement on that which preceded it, and which was in use not more than 100 years ago. This latter dungeon consisted of a small vault, formed between two arches of a stone bridge over the river Ness, and into which the prisoners were let down by means of a trap-door. The bridge and vault are still standing, and the iron grating, which served as a window, can still be seen by any one who wishes to form a correct idea of a prison in the olden times. After the place had been condemned as a receptacle for criminals, it occurred to the humanity of the age that it would do very well for those who had been unfortunate enough to lose the command of their mind, and therefore, on being vacated as a prison, it was turned into a mad-house. The state of this den of misery may be conceived from the following entries in the town treasurer's books:—

In the present prison at Inverness there are altogether five rooms and seven cells, forming four stories. Those on the ground floor consist, first, of a cell for refractory prisoners, about 10 feet long, 8½ feet broad, and 8½ feet high; it is damp and wholly without the means of warmth, light, or ventilation. The other two cells on the ground floor are of larger dimensions, and are furnished with windows, which open, however, into a passage, and not into the fresh air; these cells, like the one described, are damp, and without any means of warmth; they are used as police cells. On the first floor there are four cells for male criminal prisoners, and a room for female prisoners; the cells are each 9 feet long, and 7 feet high, their breadth varying from 6 feet 9 inches to 9 feet. The average cubical content is about 520 feet. An aperture of about a foot square into a narrow passage affords the only means of light or ventilation to these wretched places, in any one of which it is no uncommon thing to put three or four prisoners at the same time. I went into them during the night and early in the morning, and found them very offensive and oppressively close. Indeed, when it is remembered that a human being vitiates a gallon of pure air in a minute, and that one of these cells does not contain more than from 3,500 to 4,000 gallons, it is evident that, even if the air were completely changed every day, four persons remaining in it 16 or 18 hours out of the 24, which is the case, would be more than sufficient to render the air offensive and unwholesome; but, when the want of the means of ventilation is taken into account, and it is borne in mind that at certain periods of the year six prisoners, or even more, are shut up in one of these cells, it will at once be seen that the air must sometimes be in a state almost sufficient to breed a plague. It should be stated, however, that during the greater part of the day the prisoners are allowed to walk up and down the passage, which, though narrow and far from being well ventilated, affords great relief after confinement in the cells.

The room for the female prisoners is about 11 feet square and 9 feet high, and, though often very much crowded (I found nine in it together, two of whom, however, slept in another room), it is much more tolerable than the cells for the male criminals, as it is furnished with a window and fire-place; it must be remarked, however, that this window looks down into a yard, not belonging to the prison, on one side of which there is a public-house. The door of the room opens into a passage, like that which runs by the cells of the male criminals. The second and third floors are appropriated to debtors, and to prisoners under the Revenue laws. The second floor contains two rooms; one of them 17 feet, and the other 20 feet long, and both of them 9 feet broad, and rather more than 9 feet high. Each of these rooms has a window and fire-place; the windows, both on this floor and the floor above, and indeed throughout the prison, looking out either on the public street before the prison, or towards the yard already mentioned; and from this yard prisoners on these floors have been seen hauling up bottles of whisky, probably obtained from the public-house. The highest floor also contains two rooms, one of them 21, and the other nearly 17 feet long, and both of them about 16 feet broad, and 8½ feet high; these rooms also have windows and fire-places.

Many of the floors and ceilings are of wood, and there is no doubt that, if a prisoner were bent upon it, he might set fire to the whole building; indeed there must be some danger of this happening without any malicious design, owing to some of the rooms being warmed by open fires, and to there being no resident officer. It must be remarked, however, that a fire could not originate in that part of the prison in which the male criminals are confined.

The prison is now moderately secure. The last instance of escape was about three years ago. Three prisoners got out on that occasion during the night, by taking up the stones near two of the doors, and burrowing under them; since that time, however, large stones, bolted together, have been laid in the floors of the passages. I found some of the cells in a dirty state. There are no means for observing the prisoners.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of the Prisoners.—I arrived at Inverness during the time of the circuit court, and when, consequently, the prison was unusually full, prisoners being sent here from the gaols of four other counties to take their trial. In the present instance the number so sent was smaller than usual, being only six. The total number of prisoners was 42, viz., 32 criminals, eight Excise prisoners, and two debtors. Of these prisoners no fewer than 23 (the male criminals) were confined in the four small close cells and passage already described. At the autumn circuit of last year there were no fewer than 54 prisoners; with such a number the place must have been literally crammed, and the wonder is that even the few days of the circuit could have been got over without some fatal epidemic breaking out. The average number of prisoners, throughout the year, is about 30.

Some of the prisoners were clean, but many were dirty, and it depends on themselves how often they wash. All that is done towards separation is to put the males apart from the females, and to divide the former into two classes—criminals and Revenue prisoners. As to the females, they are all crowded together in the same room, whatever be the cause of their detention; so that young and old, innocent and guilty, modest and immodest, those charged with heinous crimes, and those who are accused only of evading the imposition of a tax, are all mixed in one common herd. In the short notice of this prison which I gave in my last report I mentioned an instance that occurred a few weeks before I arrived at Inverness, in which a woman was delivered of a child amidst this heterogeneous assembly.

Among the male prisoners there is a young man, about 18 years old, who has been condemned to death at the present circuit for murder, and who is now lying for execution. The cell in which he is confined is one of the ordinary cells for male criminals, which, as already mentioned, all open into a common passage, and he is thus constantly exposed to the conversation and noise of the other prisoners. This young man's case affords a striking example of the corruption that goes on in an ill-constructed and ill-regulated prison. The first time he entered the prison of Inverness was when he was quite young, a little boy only; and the procurator-fiscal, who remembers his first appearance, says he had at that time a prepossessing countenance. As might be expected, his first offence was of trifling magnitude—some petty theft. Having once, however, entered a school of crime,—the Inverness prison,—his progress was rapid; and so numerous have been his offences during the last three or four years, that he has been quite a pest to the town. A gentleman, who, till lately, took a very active part in the police business, says he has no doubt that he has had this lad before him at least 100 times; and the boy has also been several times before the sheriff. Sometimes he was confined in the police cells for a short time, and sometimes he was put into the regular prison. This time last year he was in gaol for a considerable period, in company with a man named Adam, a hardened criminal, then awaiting his trial for the murder of his wife, of which he was convicted; and it is exceedingly probable that the brutalizing effect of this man's society led, in part, to the commission of the crime for which he himself has been now condemned to die.* The procurator-fiscal says that the different expression of the boy's countenance at the various stages of his ruin was sufficient to indicate the corruption that was going forward.

Health.—There is a great deal of sickness among the criminal prisoners; but the debtors and Revenue prisoners, whose rooms are comparatively airy, do not suffer so much. Such prisoners suffer most as have been most accustomed to fresh air and exercise; those who come from the close parts of the town are not so much affected; but, on the whole, there are few who do not leave the prison in worse health than they entered it. Whilst I was at Inverness one of the prisoners was seized with a fit of illness during the night, which, for a short time, made him almost mad. The prison had been locked up, and the gaoler and turnkey had left; and, from the tumult that was raised, the people in the street were at first afraid that the place was on fire. On the arrival of the gaoler the surgeon was sent for, who immediately took a large quantity of blood from the invalid, which greatly relieved him. I learned from the surgeon that the man was not well when he entered the prison; but the surgeon had no doubt that this violent attack had been brought on, in a great measure, by the closeness of the cell, which tends to produce determination of blood to the head. The most prevailing diseases are affections of the chest, constipation, catarrh, and dyspepsia. One way in which illness is produced is by the prisoners leaving their hot close cells in the morning, often in a state of perspiration, and going into the open passage. Of the bad effect of the closeness and vitiated air I can speak from experience, having myself been thereby affected with head-ache and loss of appetite. The only death that occurred during the past year was that of a prisoner who had been sent from Tain to be tried at the circuit court on a charge of murder. He was an idiot, who, whilst at play with another idiot, (with whom he had always appeared to be on the most friendly footing,) on some sudden impulse had thrown a stone at his companion and killed him. The death of the prisoner himself is believed to have been brought on, in some measure, by an excessive awe and fear of the judges and court during the time of trial.

There is no room set apart for the sick; which, under the circumstances of this prison, is a grievous evil.†

Food.—The allowance to criminal prisoners is 6*d.* a-day, paid in money,‡ the prisoners, as usual, when there is a money-allowance, paying for their own washing; but this seldom causes any considerable deduction, for the generality of prisoners have but little taste for cleanliness, and are seldom prepared to stint the belly for the sake of the skin. Those, however, who are willing to make sacrifices of this kind generally have their shirt and stockings washed once a-week, the same shirt serving both by day and night. The charge for washing a shirt is generally 2*d.*, and the goodnatured laundress seldom insists on making an additional charge for the stockings, so that 2*d.* is generally the sum total of a prisoner's weekly washing-bill. The criminal prisoners have not the opportunity, even if they desired it, of expending any of their allowance in fuel, as there are no fire-places in their cells; indeed, they generally suffer rather from excessive heat than from cold. The allowance to debtors is generally 8*d.* or 9*d.* a-day; and, as usual, is paid in money. Excise prisoners, &c., get 4½*d.* a-day, when they can obtain an order from the Board; but this is often a very slow business. There is, at the present time, a man in the prison charged with illicit distillation, who has been in confinement nearly two months, and for whose support no order has yet arrived; the consequence is that he is living, in part at least, on the charity of his fellow-prisoners. Additional supplies of food from without are allowed to all the prisoners.

Bedding.—Two double blankets, a coverlet, and a straw mattress. The bed-clothes are washed and the straw changed once in two or three months.—No clothing is supplied except in cases of destitution.

Discipline.—None. There is no labour, separation, or instruction; and all that the prisoners are expected to do, or indeed have an opportunity of doing, is to loll on their beds, or idle away their time in the passages. One morning I heard the ringing of halfpence as they struck the floor; and, on inquiry, I found that the prisoners were indulging in their gambling propensities by a game at pitch-and-toss. The time which the prisoners usually pass in their night-cells, and which, indeed, they are compelled to pass there, is excessive, beyond anything I have yet met with. This arises, in a great measure, from the non-residence of the gaolers. Even in summer the criminal prisoners are doomed to pass 16 hours out of the 24 in their night-cells, close as these cells are; and in winter they remain in them 18 hours. But there is one day in every week which ought to be associated with the most pleasing ideas, but which, to the minds of criminals in the Inverness gaol, must present a dismal picture of dullness, darkness, and cramped limbs; for, on the Sunday, the poor fellows are locked up 21 hours, having only three hours out of the 24 to snatch a little fresh air, or rather less putrid air, and to take a little exercise in the passage. Either some minister of the town, or some gentleman who on the particular occasion acts as such, generally comes once a-week to preach to the prisoners, and pray with them; but this is on the Friday evening, so that no religious service is performed on the Sunday.

The usual prison offences are fighting, calling to people in the street, using obscene and blasphemous language, gambling, and stealing from each other. The ordinary punishment is confinement in a night cell, but when there the offender can talk with his companions as readily as at other times.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female superintendence, and no difference is made between the treatment of the females and males, except that the former are accommodated with a better room, as already mentioned.

Debtors.—The debtors, as usual, provide their own clothing and bedding, and are freely allowed to receive visits from their friends. When public worship is performed, they attend with the other prisoners.

Miscellaneous.—Untried prisoners necessarily associate with convicted prisoners; and no difference is made between the two classes. Intercourse with friends and associates goes on at the discretion of the gaolers, and is freely allowed. Smoking tobacco, &c., is generally permitted. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their places of abode when their period of confinement has expired.

Officers.—There are two, an upper and under gaoler; neither of whom resides in the prison. The upper gaoler is rather old, and is somewhat deaf and dull, but I believe he is quite trustworthy: the under gaoler is young, active, and intelligent, and would, I think, perform his duties very well under a good system; he, like the upper gaoler, is considered quite trustworthy. There is no chaplain; and, until within the last year, there was no regularly-appointed surgeon. About 12 months ago, however, a medical gentleman of the town, at the request of the town-council, accepted a regular appointment, though not accompanied with any remuneration. This gentleman attends whenever he is sent for, and frequently at other times.

Fees.—The only fees paid are on the admission of a debtor, when the imprisoning creditor pays 2*s.* 6*d.* to the town-clerk, and 2*s.* 6*d.* to the two gaolers jointly.

Accounts.—The only accounts hitherto kept are a register of prisoners and a record of disbursements. That part of the register which relates to criminals contains all the particulars required by the 10th Geo. IV. c. 29, but not in a tabular form, as directed.*

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 15th October 1835:—

General Observations.—The bad state of the gaol of Inverness has long been felt and acknowledged by all persons connected with it, and a strong desire has existed to remedy its evils; but, owing to the unfortunate division of interests between the county and the burgh, to which the present state of the law gives rise, every attempt has hitherto been fruitless. When the Municipal Corporation Commissioners were at Inverness, a report was drawn up by direction of the magistrates, containing a detailed statement of the condition of the gaol at Inverness, and a review of the general question of the difficulties and hardships arising from the peculiar liability of burghs in Scotland. This document is drawn up in an able manner, doing much credit to the gentleman who prepared it. I have made use of some parts of it in the foregoing report.

The effects of the prison, in its present state, must necessarily be bad on all confined within its walls, and can have but little deterring influence on the criminal population of the neighbourhood; for, wretched as is the accommodation afforded, and calculated as the place is to undermine the health of its inmates, the evils presented are not of that kind which are formidable in the eyes of most evil-doers; while the money-allowance for food, the constant association with persons of similar habits and feelings, the ease of communication with people outside the gaol, and the complete exemption from labour, present charms to which they are fully sensible, and which do much more, probably, than counterbalance the moral and physical evils I have pointed out. No record having hitherto been kept of recommitments, it is difficult to apply this test of the effect produced by the imprisonment. It appears, however, that most of the prisoners who are committed for assaults or Revenue offences do not return, but that most of the thieves come again and again. The case of John Macintosh, already stated, is a sad and striking instance of this.

* The register of imprisonments is now kept in a proper form, and contains not only all that is required by the Act, but much information relating to the offender's previous habits, the character of his parents, &c.

Inverness.

State of Crime at Inverness.—There are few heinous offences, but there is a great deal of pilfering; and, on the whole, there appears to be an increase of crime, after allowing for the increase of population. One of the police-officers, an intelligent man, who has been several years in the police service, and who was recommended to me as best able to give information in matters of this kind, says that, with few exceptions, the thefts are committed by about 60 persons, of whom 30 are regular prostitutes, and from 15 to 20, boys and girls. It appears also that, of this number, about five are tinkers, pretended hawkers, or other vagrants; indeed, at the quarterly markets or fairs, there are generally as many as 30 or 40 of these thievish strangers. My informant has passed all his life at Inverness, and says that he knows every house in the town, and all the inhabitants, that he is quite certain that the great bulk of the people are honest, and that, if 50 or 60 persons could be withdrawn, and the vagrants kept away, there would be very few offences. He says that he has the same set of offenders over and over again through his hands; and he particularly mentioned one woman who has been 18 years on the street as a prostitute, and who, he feels sure, has been a prisoner in the police cell at least 1000 times, chiefly for acts of violence, such as breaking windows, &c., committed when drunk, but in no instance merely for being a prostitute. It was on the 28th of September that I was questioning him on these matters, and this woman had already been in prison 17 times in that month. It appears that the town has twice attempted to get rid of her by paying her passage to a distant place, and that the good citizens of London and Glasgow have, in turns, been honoured with the company of this hopeful emigrant; but, after a time, she has always returned to her old quarters.

Causes affecting Crime at Inverness, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is a great deal of drunkenness. I am informed that of late years there has been an increase among the poorer classes, but a decrease among the middle and upper classes. Drunkenness, including the desire to obtain whisky, is the immediate cause of most of the crimes committed. There is a temperance society at Inverness, but it is not much supported.

State of the Police.—Tolerably efficient.

Condition of the People.—This appears, on the whole, to have improved considerably of late years, but it is still very low. There are generally from 1,200 to 1,500 on the poor-roll, which is about 1 in 10 of the whole population. This large amount of pauperism appears to be owing, in a great measure, to the want of a provision for disposing (by emigration, or otherwise) of the cotters, who are displaced by the creation of great sheep-farms, a practice which is become general in this county, as well as in those of Ross and Sutherland; and, as most of the land is best suited to this use, the system must be abstractedly the best, and therefore likely to go forward; although it is, of course, most desirable that steps should always be taken to afford, at least, temporary assistance to those who are displaced. When compelled to leave their former abodes, the cotters resort to the towns, few of which, in this part of the country, present many means of profitable labour, there being scarcely such a thing as a manufactory. All that the new comers can do, therefore, is to pick up a scanty and precarious livelihood, partly by jobbing, partly by begging, and partly often by pilfering. It is generally thought that, if some manufacture could be successfully established at Inverness, it would be a great benefit to the poorer classes.—Male labourers generally receive from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day, females from 6*d.* to 1*s.*, and female domestic servants from 3*l.* to 6*l.* a-year.—There is not any savings' bank.

Education.—Much improved during the last 25 years. It is believed that there is no one at Inverness, at the present time, who has not an opportunity of getting his children educated, and that the great bulk of the children are, in fact, receiving education to a certain extent. An infant-school has lately been opened, and it is said to have had a marked effect in improving the appearance of the children as respects neatness and cleanliness. There is no library for the working classes at Inverness, but there appears to be a good deal of reading of religious works, newspapers, and other cheap periodicals; and the taste for reading is said to be on the increase. There is a mechanics' institution, which had fallen off somewhat, but which is now reviving.

Popular Amusements.—Few. They are much wanted. Some pleasure-grounds formed in a beautiful island in the river were thrown open to the public for a time, but so much mischief was done that they were closed again. It is possible that they may be re-opened under the care of a keeper, in the hope that, when the people become trained to the enjoyment of the privilege, they will lose all desire to commit injuries.

INVERNESS-SHIRE.

Population about 95,000.

Inverness-shire.

Prisons existing at present.—There are altogether four prisons, namely, one at Inverness, one at Portree, one at Grantown, and one at Kingussie. Excepting the prison at Inverness, all are very small; and, without any exception, all are very bad.—The population of the different towns in which the prisons are situated (including their immediate neighbourhood) is about as follows:—Inverness, 15,000; Grantown, 5,000; Kingussie, 2,500. The population of Portree is not considerable, but the prison there serves for the whole island of Skye, and is necessary also on account of the great distance from any other prison.

Inverness-shire.

Prisons wanted.—Three more small prisons are wanted, namely, one at Fort William, one at Fort Augustus, and one in the island of North Ouist. The population of Fort William and its immediate neighbourhood is about 3,000, and that of Fort Augustus about 1,500. This county is well situated for a district penitentiary for the north of Scotland.

General state of Inverness-shire as respects Crime.

Upon the whole there appears to be but little crime in this county, and much less than formerly, notwithstanding a considerable increase in population. It must, however, be admitted, I believe, as regards not only Inverness-shire but the whole of the north of Scotland, that there is still a good deal of cunning and cheating among the lower classes. The prevailing offence entailing punishment is assault, as is the case in the rest of northern Scotland, but this offence is now less common than formerly. An offence of a heinous character, which has happily become much rarer than formerly, is child-murder. The sheriff-substitute and the procurator-fiscal for the county are both of opinion that this crime was often caused by the severity of the church discipline to which a female was, till lately, subjected, when known to have given birth to an illegitimate child; the fear of the public disgrace urging her to remove the evidence of her guilt, and thereby to commit a new and far greater crime. Both these gentlemen state that the offence of child-murder was most common in those parishes in which the church-discipline was most severe. I received similar opinions of the cause of the diminished prevalence of child-murder in Shetland and elsewhere.

In Inverness-shire, as well as in almost all the maritime counties I have visited, the suppression of smuggling is believed to have had a most beneficial effect in lessening crime.

The following extract from Anderson's Guide to the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, a work of research and authority, and greatly superior to the ordinary run of guide-books, presents a picture of the state of Inverness-shire, as regards crime 70 or 80 years ago:

"Receding from the valley of the Findhorn, the road proceeds southward through the deep and dangerous pass, called Slochmuchk, which signifies the boar's den, or hollow. This spot was a favourite haunt of banditti, some of whom, even for years after the suppression of the rebellion of 1745, continued to infest the different routes across the Grampians to the low country: now it is the dread of travellers only as the place where the greatest quantity of snow is usually to be met in winter; for wreaths of it sometimes block up the ravine to the depth of 10 or 12 feet.

"The pass just described is particularly noted as having been the occasional resort (about the middle of last century) of Macintosh of Borlum, a man of education and respectable family, of insinuating manners, but of a character not unlike that of his contemporary, Simon, Lord Lovat. He had a good deal of the old mercenary soldier about him, with an air of French politeness, which was common to the Highland gentlemen of the period; and, though secretly leagued with a gang of desperadoes, he continued for a long time to deceive the public, and lull the suspicions of his friends. His history is well known; and his last exploit, which compelled him to flee from the country, was an attempt to rob Sir Hector Monro, of Novar, on his journey northwards, after his return from India, in the year 1770. Three of his accomplices, one of whom was his own natural brother, were seized and hanged at Inverness. Macintosh is said to have gone to America, and served under General Washington; and a report prevails, that he revisited his native country some years ago. Another celebrated freebooter was John Gun; a personage in whom were combined the rude habits of the bandit with the more generous sentiments of chivalry. His ordinary abode was among the wild recesses of Strathspey, in the neighbourhood of Cairngorm and Aviemore. At the same period the vicinity of Shian, of Invergarry, and the confines of Lochaber, were tenanted by a savage tribe of Kennerys, who levied tribute over an extended range of country. David Scrymgeour, of Birkhill, and Alexander Campbell, of Delnies, successively sheriffs-depute of Inverness-shire, after the suppression of the insurrection in 1746, failed, though repeated were their endeavours, to extirpate these marauders; and when Simon Fraser, Esq., of Farraline, was appointed successor to Mr. Campbell, in May 1781, he found the state of the police totally inefficient, and property incapable of protection on any other ground than by the voluntary payment to the heads of the robber troops of either money or cattle; black mail, as in the remotest ages, being in fact thus demanded and agreed to. Mr. Fraser, who had quitted a military life to embrace that of the gown, at the desire of his chief, General Fraser, of Lovat, set himself earnestly to work to effect the total suppression of such an alarming evil. With the assistance of a stout and courageous Highlander, Mr. John Mackay, sheriff-officer at Fort Augustus, as his aide-de-camp, and by unremitted perseverance, he finally effected his purpose; traversing, with his faithful adherent, the most inaccessible districts, repeatedly incurring personal danger in many shapes, and having been more than once fired upon in his hazardous journeys. So imminent was the risk he ran, that he rarely moved from home without a brace of pistols on his person. Acting on the old adage, 'set a thief to catch a thief,' he nominated Donald Mhor, ocg Cameron, in Blairroy of Lochaber, himself a notorious cateran, as one of the constables of the county, and engaged his good offices on the side of order."

Age and Character of Offenders at the present Time.—The thieves are generally very young at their first commitment to prison; but persons convicted of assaults are of various ages. Both kinds of offenders are decidedly more addicted to drunkenness than others in the same rank of life. Comparatively few of the thieves have a knowledge of a trade, or have any regular occupations. The offenders are equal in intelligence to others in the same rank of life, but much below them in education and knowledge. Few of them can sign their names. The parents of the thieves are often known to have been negligent of their children, and not unfrequently to be of bad character. Most of the thieves belong to the poorest class, and most of them are inhabitants of the county.

Causes affecting Crime in Inverness-shire independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Still a great deal, although less than formerly, at least among the middle and upper classes, among whom the habit of morning dram drinking, particularly, has almost disappeared. There appears, too, to be less positive drunkenness among the poorer classes; but it is stated that the habit of drinking within certain bounds is more general than formerly. There is only one temperance society in the county, which is at Inverness. Drunkenness, and the desire to get the means of indulging in drinking, are stated to be the immediate causes of most of the offences committed in Inverness-shire.

State of the Police.—It has been already observed, that the police at Inverness is tolerably efficient. There is also a very good officer for the Inverness district of the county; but in the other parts of the county there is a want of efficient officers. It is estimated that seven good officers would be sufficient for the whole county, excepting the town of Inverness.

Administration of Justice.—Greatly improved in efficiency of late years, although there is still much room for improvement in some of the remote districts.

Condition of the People.—Improved; but there is a good deal of distress when the fishing fails, since the coast population, which is by far the greatest, is much dependent upon it. Speaking of the whole county, the chief occupations of the people are fishing, cultivating their small farms or crofts, and tending sheep and cattle. Regular farm-servants (those employed in cultivating farms of considerable size)—a well-conducted and respectable class of men—are paid (according to the general usage of Scotland) chiefly in kind; their whole income being estimated at from 16*l.* to 20*l.* a-year, in addition to what the wife and children may earn. The farm-servants are believed to be very comfortable in their circumstances.

There is not any savings' bank in the county.

Education.—Very much advanced in the last 25 years, and now very generally diffused, either by means of parochial schools or of schools established under the auspices of different societies. Sometimes the school is itinerating, the master living in one cottage after another, and making each in turn his school-house. In Inverness-shire, however, as in many other places, complaints are made of the inefficiency of many of the parish schoolmasters; which is attributed in part to the salary being so small, that few look to the occupation as other than temporary, and a means of maintaining themselves and continuing their studies until they shall get a living in the church. There is too an evil of an opposite kind, which sometimes acts powerfully; namely, the difficulty of compelling a schoolmaster to vacate his post, however ill qualified he may prove to be, or may become, when once he has been appointed.

In the Gaelic districts there are few persons upwards of 40 years old who are able to read; but the younger members of the families can most of them read both Gaelic and English; and in the English districts the bulk of the people, whether children or adults, are believed to be able to read easily. There are, at present, but few libraries for the poorer classes. The instruction now generally given to the children includes reading, writing, and arithmetic, for boys, and reading for girls; the latter, however, are often taught knitting and needle-work in addition. Few children, except in the thinly-peopled districts, are now growing up without some kind of education.

Popular Amusements.—Few: rational amusements are much wanted.

DINGWALL, ROSS-SHIRE.

Population about 2,000.

(Visited from 5th to 10th October 1836.)

Dingwall.

The prison of Dingwall is an old building, part of it having been erected about 100 years ago, and part of it even prior to that time. It had fallen so much out of repair, and had become so very insecure, that, about six years ago, it was condemned as a place of confinement. Within the last twelve months, however, it has been re-opened; certain repairs and alterations having been made in it. Although the prison is now much more secure than formerly, it is not yet considered sufficiently safe for the reception of debtors, seeing that their escape would entail serious pecuniary consequences on the town. When, therefore, an application was made to the Court of Justiciary to legalize the prison again for the reception of criminals, no similar application was made to the Court of Session regarding debtors; and debtors are not, in point of fact, admitted; and neither are revenue prisoners; it being the general opinion that such prisoners are classed by law with civil debtors, and not with criminals, and that it is, therefore, illegal to confine them in a prison which has not been sanctioned for the reception of debtors. Before the prison was condemned escapes were of common occurrence; and for two cases of escape of debtors (one real and one held to be equal to an escape in the eye of the law) the town of Dingwall had to pay nearly 800*l.*, namely, the amount of the debts for which the prisoners were confined. In the latter case the debtor had not left the gaol, and had not even attempted to do so, but the gaoler had allowed him to attend a public meeting, which was held in the court-room adjoining his cell; and this fact coming to the knowledge of the creditor, the magistrates were immediately threatened with an action for the amount of the debt, and they were obliged to pay the money, although the prisoner was in safe custody, and although the creditor would not have suffered even if he had escaped, as there did not appear to be the remotest chance of the prisoner ever being able to pay the debt.

Dingwall.

The prison forms part of the town-house, and stands in the middle of the town. There are three rather large rooms for ordinary use, and there is a small one in which lunatics are sometimes confined when in an ungovernable state. It has already been mentioned that the prison is not secure. The windows communicate with the open street; and, two of the rooms being on the ground floor, and the other on the first floor, communication from without frequently takes place; and, as there is no resident keeper, an escape could be effected during the night by means of tools handed in at the window.* There must also be a danger of the building catching fire, for it is warmed by open fires, and there is a good deal of wood about. The place is dry, of moderate temperature, and tolerably well ventilated; but I found one of the rooms in a slovenly and rather dirty state.

State of the Prisoners.—There are, at present, eight prisoners; namely, five men and three women. One of the latter, however, is a lunatic, who is in confinement, not because she has committed any offence, but because it would be dangerous for her to be at large: in fact, she is in a state of raving madness. When the means have been found of raising the necessary funds to pay for her board, &c., it is intended to send her to the lunatic asylum at Aberdeen. The five male criminals are placed in one room, the two female criminals in another, and the female lunatic in the third; the accommodations of the prison not admitting of any further separation. The present is the greatest number of prisoners in confinement at any one time since the gaol was re-opened. Formerly, however, when debtors and smugglers were received, there were often more than 20 at a time; and that when the accommodation was less even than at present.

The prisoners were all tolerably clean, and the surgeon told me that he generally found them so; but it depends entirely on themselves how often they wash. †

Health.—Since the re-opening of the prison the health of the prisoners has been very good. No diseases can be mentioned as being at all prevalent; but there has not yet been time enough for coming to any safe conclusion on this point.

Food.—The prisoners are allowed 6*d.* a-day each, and this is paid in money. Out of it they have, as usual, to pay for their fuel and washing; but, as shown elsewhere, disbursements for these purposes, especially the latter, are generally of small amount. Additional supplies of food and money from without are allowed, as I have always found to be the case when money is paid to the prisoners in lieu of food.‡

Bedding.—Two double blankets, a coverlet, and some loose straw. The bedsteads are of iron, and, when complete, have each a wooden frame for the straw to lie on; but one of these frames was burnt a short time ago by a female prisoner, who used it as fuel. The straw is changed about once a month.—There is no supply of clothing.

Discipline.—None. There is neither work, separation, nor instruction. The conduct of the prisoners, however, is described as generally orderly; but many things are done here which, in a well-constructed and well-regulated prison, would be regarded as offences, if, indeed, they could happen at all. A well-thumbed pack of cards, for example, which I found in one of the rooms, showed that gaming is probably a common amusement among the prisoners.

Strange stories are told of the state of discipline in this prison before the late alterations. A case has already been mentioned in which a prisoner was allowed to attend a public meeting. But this was a trifling irregularity compared with what is said to have often occurred; for it is stated that prisoners were sometimes allowed to go to supper parties! and this with the key of the prison in their pockets, in order that they might return without disturbing the gaoler! A gentleman whom I met, some time after leaving Dingwall, told me, that, happening to be at that town once on the market-day, and standing at the window of the inn opposite the gaol, he was amazed to see a large fish apparently running up the wall of the prison. The fish having reached one of the upper windows disappeared, and it then occurred to the astonished spectator that the fish owed its ascent to the assistance of the inmates of the prison, and to no climbing power of its own; and in this view he was confirmed by the sight of a cord, with a hook at the end, which he soon saw descending from the prison window. A boy, who was stationed below, took hold of the hook, when it got within reach, and, watching his opportunity, when a fish-woman was looking another way, fastened it in the gills of one of her fish, which instantly rose into the air.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made between females and males. The two classes, however, are always kept separate.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners, and it is seldom the case that there is room to keep them separate. Smoking tobacco, and the receipt of letters, visits, &c., could not under present circumstances be prevented.

Officers.—Two; namely, two gaolers, of equal authority; both of whom act as town officers also. They are considered trustworthy, but they are dull, and not qualified for the efficient management of a gaol, however small. The remuneration, however (5*l.* a-year each), is quite insufficient to make it reasonable to demand good services. There is no regular surgeon; but a medical gentleman of the town is kind enough to act as surgeon gratuitously. He always attends when sent for. There is no chaplain. There are no fees.

Accounts.—The only accounts hitherto kept are, a register of prisoners, according to the prescribed form (and kept in a very neat state), and an account of disbursements. The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the last year:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment | 11 | 13 | 6 |
| Bedding | 4 | 13 | 9 |
| Straw | 0 | 6 | 0 |

| Alterations | 130 | 7 | 3 |
| Salaries:—Two gaolers, 5*l.* each | 10 | 0 | 0 |

Of this sum, 130*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.* (the cost of the alterations), and 2*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* (the allowance to prisoners before trial), was paid by the county; the remainder, 29*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*, by the burgh.

Average number of prisoners during the year, 1½.

Average yearly cost of each prisoner, about 15*l.* Daily cost, about 10*d.*

COUNTIES OF ROSS AND CROMARTY.

Population about 80,000.

Ross and Cromarty.

Prisons existing at present.—Four; namely, one each at Tain, Dingwall, Fortrose, and Cromarty. They are all bad ones.

Additional Prisons wanted.—Four small ones; namely, one each at Stornoway (population upwards of 4,000, exclusive of the other part of the island of Lewis), Ullapool (population, including the neighbourhood, about 3,500), Jeantown (population about 2,000, and situated in the midst of a populous district), and Invergordon (population, including that of the neighbourhood, above 5,000.)

General State of Ross and Cromarty, as respects Crime.—There has been a considerable decrease of crime within the last 70 or 80 years, and the amount is now small. For some years after the rebellion of 1745, highway robbery was common in the north of Scotland; and cattle-stealing, by open force, once the constant practice of the country, was still of frequent occurrence. These offences, however, have now entirely disappeared. Violent assaults, too, which were common till within a much later period (especially those on Excise officers), and child-murder, have become much more rare; though there are still many assaults of a less savage kind, and a considerable number of petty thefts. Sheep-stealing goes on, too, in some parts of the county, and often without leading to detection and punishment. The assaults that are committed almost invariably take place under the excitement of whiskey. The principal causes assigned for the diminution of crime are the improved condition of the people, the spread of education, and greater efficiency in the administration of justice.

Usual State of Criminals and other Offenders in these Counties.—Many, especially those charged with assault, are from 20 to 30 years of age. They are more given to drinking than others in the same class of life. Many of those who steal have been brought up to no regular occupation. When the character of the parents of offenders is known, it is generally found that they have led the same kind of life which their children are pursuing. More of the offenders than a proportionate fraction of the population belong to the poorest class of the people; and they are found to be below others in the same rank of life in intelligence, education, and knowledge. Many of the thefts, and the greatest part of the most serious offences of all kinds, are committed by tinkers, hawkers, and other vagrants. Adam, for example, the man who was hanged for murder last year, was a stranger to the county, although the act was committed within it.

Causes affecting Crime in Ross-shire and Cromarty, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not a great deal, it is believed, compared with what is usually found in towns. There has been a considerable decrease of late years among the higher classes, in all parts of the county, and in many parts among the lower classes also; but it is believed that, in other districts, drunkenness has increased among the lower classes. There is not any temperance society in these counties.

State of the Police.—Still inefficient, although the officers, as a body, are more intelligent and respectable than formerly. Here, as in many other counties, there is a considerable corps of officers of different kinds, some being sheriff-officers, and others messengers-at-arms; but they appear to be appointed with but little regard to their fitness; any person of tolerably respectable character, who applies, being generally admitted into the office, provided he is able to write, and can give the requisite securities. None of these officers, however, are fully employed; and none of them consider it their duty to keep constantly on the alert, and to take measures for apprehending offenders, without waiting for instructions from others. According to the information I have received, I think that 11 good officers, on constant duty, and two good superintendents, (the latter to act also as officers,) together with a provision for additional assistance when called for, would be sufficient for the whole county, including the towns. Two of the officers to have the care of the island of Lewis, one being stationed at Stornoway; five more officers to be distributed in the remaining part of Wester Ross, under one of the superintendents; and the other four officers, and the other superintendent, to be stationed in Easter Ross and Cromarty.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Ross and Cromarty.

Administration of Justice.—Very much more efficient than in former years.

Condition of the People.—Much improved, although the people are still subject to occasional dearths. They live in better houses, are better clad, and eat better food than formerly. They are also much less dirty in their habits. An important remark, too, and one which appears to be applicable to the whole Highland district, is, that fewer, in proportion to the population, belong to the lowest class than formerly. Notwithstanding this general improvement, however, the people are still exposed to occasional severe want, although periods of such distress appear to be of rarer and rarer occurrence. It must be admitted, too, that there is still a good deal of pauperism and mendicity. At Tain (population about 3,000), there are about 150 persons on the poor-roll, and about 30 beggars who go round the town every week to collect alms. A gentleman named Ross, a native of Tain, residing, some time ago, in London, gave orders for the sum of 100 guineas to be distributed, every year, among such of the poor of Tain as bore his name. The news of this benevolent act was no sooner spread than there was instantly a great and unaccountable increase in the number of Rosses in the town; indeed, the increase was not confined to the town; for, from a great district round about, people came pouring in, all bearing the favoured name, although their claim to it had not hitherto been suspected. After a time, however, the donor died; and, although it would almost appear that he had carried a number of his relatives with him to the grave, still the poor town of Tain was saddled with many mourners. At Dingwall, also, there is a good deal of mendicity. Happening to be there on the Saturday (a busy day among beggars in Scotland), I saw a long procession, consisting chiefly of old women, who were making their morning round.

The people are occupied chiefly in agriculture, pastoral employments, and fishing. Farm-servants (here, as in the whole of the north of Scotland, a very respectable class of the community, and in the enjoyment of many comforts) receive, in various forms, from 20*l.* to 24*l.* a-year; most of their wages being paid in kind. The following is the usual scale of payment:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Six or seven bolls of meal (a boll is equal to about 6 bushels), worth about . . . . . . . . . . . . . . | 6 | 10 | 0 |
| Six or seven bolls of potatoes, about . . . . . . . . . | 3 | 5 | 0 |
| An English pint of milk, daily, during five or six months of the year . . . . . . . . . . . . . . | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| Six or seven barrels of coals, about . . . . . . . . | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| [The family of the farm-servant are also generally allowed to gather spare wood; and they have often an opportunity of cutting peat.] | | | |
| Rent of house, about . . . . . . . . . . . . . . | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Money, about . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . | 7 | 0 | 0 |
| Total . . . . | 21 | 0 | 0 |

The farm-servant is seldom engaged for a less period than a whole year; he often remains many years with the same employer.

Day-labourers, if engaged with an understanding that they shall have employment and the same wages in winter also, generally receive about 14*d.* a-day; if engaged without that understanding, about 18*d.* Carpenters and masons receive from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* Female domestic servants, about 3*l.* a-year in the country, and about 4*l.* a-year in a town.—There is not, at present, a single savings' bank in the counties of Ross and Cromarty; but steps are taking for their introduction.

Education.—Greatly extended and improved, although it is still in a very low state at some places, especially among the most thinly-peopled districts. The schools established during the last few years, by the General Assembly, are, in particular, reported as working well. In these schools the improved system of teaching, introduced among the poorer classes by Mr. Wood, of Edinburgh, is, it is said, generally adopted; so that the children, instead of being stuffed with a quantity of crude, indigestible matter, as heretofore, are now led to analyze and clearly understand all they are taught. Small libraries, too, are often appended to these schools. Tain appears to be distinguished for the increased attention paid to education. In addition to the regular parochial school, a public academy has been opened during the last few years, in which an education of a superior kind is given. This academy appears to be used for the children of people of almost all classes, the fees being very low. In it an education, including instruction in the mathematics and several languages, can be had for about 4*l.* a-year. The town-council of Tain contribute nearly 100*l.* a-year to the academy and parochial school, jointly, although the funds at their command are of very moderate amount.

A great many of the adult population are unable to read easily, or, indeed, to read in any way. On the western side of the county, it is difficult to find a single person forty years old (of course, excepting the richer classes) who is able to read. Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that there is, in fact, but little reading among the people at present, although the taste is on the increase. The only library for the labouring classes is a small one at Loch Alsh, supported partly by the subscriptions of the members, and partly by donations.

Popular Amusements.—Very few. Foot-ball and shinty, however, are played at a little in winter.

Dunkeld.

DUNKELD, PERTHSHIRE.

Population about 1,500.

(Visited 12th October 1836.)

The prison of Dunkeld is used as a lock-up house only; any prisoner who has to be detained more than a few hours being sent to Perth, which is 15 miles off, but with which there is easy communication. The prison is formed out of one of the dry arches of a bridge across the Tay, which was built about 25 years ago. The situation is certainly rather damp; but the room generally used (there are three altogether) is apparently tolerably dry. This room is about 15 feet long, about 10 feet wide, and about 10 feet high. It is not secure; but I believe there has been no instance of escape from it. In truth, however, the place is very seldom used or required. The room is lighted through an open iron grating; but there is no provision for warming it. In winter I fear it must be very cold; but it is not so at the present time. I found the place in a slovenly and rather dirty state.

There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit; and I was informed that there had been no one for about 12 months. On an average, the prison is used once or twice each year. There is a wooden bedstead in each of the rooms; and I was assured that, when there is a prisoner during the night, he is supplied with straw and some blankets.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the baron-baillie, who is appointed by the Duke of Athol.

State of Crime at Dunkeld.—There appears to be but little crime or disorderly conduct of any kind. At the time of the general markets or fairs there are sometimes slight cases of assault, and there are occasionally a few petty thefts; but it very rarely happens that there is anything of a serious kind. Last year, indeed, a dead child was found, which it is believed had been wilfully destroyed; but this and another instance of the kind are the only two cases, for many years, in which any inhabitant of Dunkeld is believed to have committed a serious offence. There was a murder in the neighbourhood about three years ago, but it was among a party of gipsies.

Smuggling, which used to be the daily practice of this district, has now almost entirely disappeared; as have also violent assaults, once the regular accompaniment of a market.

The time of forcible cattle-stealing is beyond the memory of the present inhabitants; but an anecdote came to my knowledge of a robbery of this kind, which was committed on a farmer, 70 or 80 years ago, who had all his cattle taken from him, and who was obliged himself to fly, lest he should be murdered. The reason of the anger of the robbers towards the farmer was that he had resisted the first party which was sent to drive off his cattle; this party consisting of a few men only. On the second occasion they came in overwhelming force.

Causes affecting Crime in Dunkeld, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Much less than formerly, and now very little. A drunken person is very seldom seen, except at the times of the principal markets, which are held twice a-year. There is a temperance society in the town; but, since the novelty has worn off, many members have withdrawn.

State of the Police.—A man who contracts to keep the streets clean also acts as constable; and several of the inhabitants are always ready to assist as special constables. Upon the whole, the provision for a police appears to be comparatively tolerably good.

Administration of Justice.—Thirty years ago there was no sufficient power to put down the tumults that used to arise at the markets; but such disorders would now be soon quelled. Happily, however, there appears no longer to be any disposition in the people to engage in tumults.

Condition of the People.—Good, though somewhat fallen off since the death of the late Duke of Athol, who carried on an extensive system of planting and road-making. The chief occupation of the people is ordinary country labour, shoemaking, and working the slate-quarries which exist in the neighbourhood. Labourers get from 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* a-day. One of the inspectors of roads declared, a short time ago, that he should be glad to engage 50 men at constant work at 2*s.* a-day; and added that he had great difficulty in finding labourers. Carpenters earn 2*s.* 6*d.* a-day. Female domestic servants receive about 6*l.* a-year; and their wages are on the increase, owing, it is believed, to the comparatively high remuneration now made for female labour by the manufacturers of Dundee, who send coarse linen-thread to be woven in the houses of the labouring classes in this neighbourhood; an employment by which some women, it is said, get as much as 2*s.* a-day. There is not any savings' bank at Dunkeld; but there are several well-managed friendly societies. There is not much mendicity among the inhabitants; but there are a great many wandering beggars.

Education.—In a good state. I was told that the parish school of Dunkeld has for a long time enjoyed a high reputation, and that parents of all classes send their children to it, the fees being low. The only difference in the rate of payment by the different classes is a voluntary one, and appears in the sums contributed at the Candlemas offering to the schoolmaster, which vary from 1*s.* to 10*s.* 6*d. Very few children in Dunkeld, if any, are growing up without some kind of education; and most of them are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. Almost all the adult population are found to be able to read easily; indeed, it is looked upon as a disgrace not to have the power. The only library established on sufficiently low terms

* This offering has been established in lieu of the barbarous system of cock-shooting, in use at some places even at the beginning of the present century. The custom was, I believe, for the master to furnish a cock, and for the boys to pay each a certain small sum for the privilege of shooting at it, he who killed it claiming the cock as his prize.

Dunkeld.

to admit the working classes is at present in its infancy; but many of them use a circulating library, the books of which are let out at the rate of 1*d.* per volume each week; and there are several instances of a number of persons clubbing together to take in a newspaper.

Popular Amusements.—Dancing is a favourite amusement here. The people have access also to several of the walks among the beautiful scenery in the neighbourhood.

BLAIRGOWRIE, PERTHSHIRE.

Population about 2,000.

(Visited October 18th, 1836.)

Blairgowrie.

The prison of Blairgowrie forms part of the town-house, which was built about four years ago, and which stands in the middle of the town. The site is apparently healthy. There are two rooms, each about 15 feet long, 10 feet wide, and about 9½ high; they are both upon the ground floor; the window of one of them opens into a public yard, that of the other into an open passage within the building; the latter window was so placed in order to prevent communication from without, and the cell to which it belongs is, in fact, the best of the two as a place of confinement. But the very cause of its superiority makes it impossible to obtain the authority of the Court of Justiciary to use it as a prison; for the Act of 1747, which regulates these matters, requires that all the windows shall open outwards, which was probably done to enable the public to see what was going on within, and thus to afford a check to ill-treatment of prisoners, and to cases of improper confinement. The care taken to improve to a certain extent the construction of the prison has put it out of the power of the sheriff to legalize it.

There has been no instance of escape from this prison, and the place appears to be secure. It is also dry and sufficiently ventilated. It must, however, be cold in winter, as there are no means of warming it. I found the place tolerably clean.

There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit, but during the last year there have been rather more than 100 persons in it; and I learnt that there are sometimes three or four in one cell. No one, however, is confined more than two whole days at a time; all prisoners for a longer period being sent to Perth. There is no stated quantity of food given to the prisoners, but from what I learned I believe that the allowance is always sufficient. Most of the prisoners, indeed, are put in for the night only, and do not therefore require any food. A quantity of loose straw lying on the floor is the only provision for bedding. There is no regulation for obliging prisoners to wash themselves.

In one respect this small prison is better than any prison of the same size I have yet seen; I allude to the circumstance of there being a resident keeper.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the baron-baillie (appointed by Mr. M'Pherson, the superior of the burgh) and the town-council.

State of Crime at Blairgowrie.—There are few serious offences, but there are a good many petty assaults, street brawls, and other breaches of the peace, arising almost entirely from drunkenness. It is stated that but few of the offences are committed by resident inhabitants, most of the offenders being vagrants, or persons engaged for short periods at the neighbouring flax-mills. The number of offences at Blairgowrie is increased, in consequence of great markets or fairs for the surrounding district being held at it, and in consequence of its being one of the chief polling-places at the county elections.

Causes affecting Crime at Blairgowrie, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, and said to be on the increase.

State of the Police.—There is only one paid officer, and he is the scavenger also. A number of inhabitants, however, act as special constables when called upon, and in turn keep watch during the night.

Condition of the People.—Tolerably good and improving. The chief occupation is weaving and flax-spinning; a man earns from 12*s.* to a guinea in the week; a woman or child from 3*s.* 6*d.* to 12*s.* There is no savings' bank, but there is a kind of friendly society, the members of which contribute 5*s.* a-month each, to be put out to interest.

Pauperism and Mendicity.—Many of the inhabitants are receiving parochial relief, but none of them are beggars. The town, however, is very much troubled with wandering beggars.

Education.—Improved, and now in a tolerably good state. It is believed that very few children are growing up without some kind of education, and that most of them are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. Most of the inhabitants are thought to be able to read easily, and there is, in fact, a good deal of reading of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There are two libraries in the town, the subscription to which varies from 12*s.* to 16*s.* a-year, and many among the working classes are subscribers.

Popular Amusements.—Quoits in summer, and curling in winter.

Cupar Angus.

The prison of this town, which is used as a lock-up house only, consists merely of a small dark cell in the lower part of a steeple, standing in the middle of the town. There is no window of any kind, and the only chance of getting a few rays of light is through a chimney which opens into the cell. The place, however, is used chiefly for vagrants and drunken people, who are put in for the night only, all persons arrested on charges of theft, &c., being immediately sent off either to Forfar or Perth, as the act is supposed to have been committed on one side of the bridge or the other. About eight years ago a stone wall was put up on one side of the cell, instead of a wooden partition which formerly separated the cell from the other part of the basement-floor of the steeple; and since this alteration the place appears to have been secure, for no escape has taken place. About five years ago, indeed, a prisoner, an Irishman, made use of the flint and steel, which he had for lighting his pipe, to set fire to the straw in the cell, in hopes of burning the door and getting out. Fortunately for him the fire was observed, otherwise there is little doubt that he would soon have been suffocated. I have met with several instances of this plan of escape being tried in small lock-up houses, but in no case with success. The cell is tolerably dry, but there are no means of warming it (it would not be safe to light a fire), and it is ill ventilated. I found it dirty also.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, but I was told that on an average the place is used about 50 times in the year. The only provision for a bed is an old door raised about a foot from the ground. Loose straw used to be supplied, but since the time of the fire it has been discontinued.

The prison is not under any regular jurisdiction; the steeple, of which it forms part, having been built by voluntary subscription.

State of Crime at Cupar Angus and the Neighbourhood.—There is a great deal of petty crime, consisting chiefly of pilfering and wanton mischief; and it is stated that the number of offences has much increased during the last few years. It is believed that most of the offences are committed by about 30 resident inhabitants, but many are committed by tinkers also. The offenders are distinguished for habits of drunkenness.

Causes affecting Crime at Cupar Angus, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, though apparently not on the increase.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police, and the voluntary assistance rendered by the inhabitants is found quite insufficient for the systematic enforcement of the laws.

Condition of the People.—Improved, and now tolerably good. The people live in better and cleaner houses than formerly, wear better clothes, and are able to obtain some amount of luxury in their diet. There are fewer resident beggars than heretofore, but there are more wandering beggars. The chief occupation of the people is hand-loom weaving, and a workman at present earns about 12*s.* a-week. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Improved, and now tolerably good. An inefficient parochial schoolmaster has lately been succeeded by an efficient one.

CULROSS (PERTHSHIRE).

Population 700 or 800; or, including the whole parish, 1,300 or 1,400.

(Visited November 22nd, 1836.)

Culross.

The prison of Culross is called a burgh prison, and as such is available either for convicted prisoners or for debtors, but it is seldom used otherwise than as a lock-up house, and seldom indeed in any way, for arrests appear to be rare occurrences at Culross. The prison consists of two rooms, which form part of the town-house, which is an old building. One of these rooms, and the only one which has been used for many years, is on the first floor, and is about 20 feet long, 15 feet broad, and 9½ feet high. It is warmed by an open fire, and is dry and sufficiently ventilated, and I found it tolerably clean; it is not, however, secure. The last escape took place about 10 years ago, when a woman succeeded in forcing her way through the stancheons of the window, to effect which, however, she was obliged to strip herself of most of her clothes. A year or two before this the father of a boy, who was in prison, got in himself, on pretence of visiting his son, and then overpowering the gaoler set his son at liberty.

The other room (in which every criminal used to be confined) is on the ground floor, and is damp, dark, and cold. It is about 22 feet long, 20 feet broad, and 7 feet high. There is no airing-yard.

There was no one in the prison at the time of my visit. The few who have been in during the last 8 or 10 years have found their own food and bedding, with the exception of a debtor who was in lately for about three months, and who had an allowance of 10*d.* a-day.

The keeper is dull and stupid. He was once a soldier, and it is said that his intellect was affected by a wound he received.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Culross as respects Crime.—There is some robbing of gardens, but there is no crime of a serious kind. The offences that are committed are chiefly by boys from 12 to 18 years old, most of them belonging to the town.

Causes affecting Crime in Culross independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not a great deal, and less than formerly.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police, but there are some town constables, who act willingly when called upon.

Culross.

Administration of Justice.—A summary power of trial for petty offences is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Tolerably good, and about the same as it has been for some years past. There are generally about 20 persons on the poor-roll, but there are no beggars. The chief occupation of the inhabitants is weaving. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Considerably extended, and now very general. It is believed that there is no child growing up without receiving some amount of instruction, and that almost all the children are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. Most of the adults are considered able to read easily, and it appears that, in point of fact, there is a good deal of reading among them; the matter read consisting chiefly of the Christian Herald, Chambers's Journal, newspapers, and books on various subjects from two libraries which exist for the poorer classes, and which are supported by donations.

KINCARDINE, PERTHSHIRE.

Population about 3,500.

(Visited 22d November 1836.)

Kincardine.

The prison of Kincardine is used as a lock-up house only. It was constructed a few years ago out of an old engine-house, and it stands about a quarter of a mile out of the town. There are two cells upon the ground floor, and each is about 11 feet long, 7 feet broad, and 10 feet high. The windows are grated and unglazed, but they are furnished with shutters. The cells have no fire-places, and they must often be very cold. They are, however, tolerably dry, and tolerably well ventilated, and I found them tolerably clean. The prison is also moderately secure, although the public have access to the grated windows. Above the cells there are rooms for a keeper, and for some time after the prison was built there was a keeper to occupy them; but, owing to a decrease in the number of prisoners, the salary has fallen off so much that no one will now accept the office. This diminution of salary, with a reduction in the number of prisoners, arises from the circumstance of the gaoler being paid entirely out of the fines levied for offences committed; Kincardine being part of a barony, and baronies not having any other fund for gaol purposes.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and I was informed that there had not been one for 10 months. The allowance for bedding is some loose straw, a blanket, and a horse-cloth.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the trustees of Lord Keith, the superior of the barony.

State of Crime at Kincardine.—There has been a decided decrease of crime, and none is now committed that is at all serious in its nature. Housebreaking, of which there used to be instances occasionally, is now never heard of. The most common offences at the present time are petty assaults and petty thefts, committed chiefly by boys and young men from 15 to 25 years old, who are generally under the excitement of whisky at the time. Most of the offenders are ship-carpenters, sailors, or rope-spinners; all in some way connected with the sea. There are about a dozen troublesome fellows who act as ringleaders.

Causes affecting Crime at Kincardine independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Much less than formerly, although there is still a great deal of drinking. There is no temperance society.

State of the Police.—There is no regular or efficient police. The only officers are those of the baron bailie.

Condition of the people.—Good, and better than formerly. The only persons on the poor-roll are 30 or 40 old and infirm people. There are about a dozen resident beggars; but there are many travelling beggars also. The chief occupation of the inhabitants is ship-building, rope-spinning, employment in the collieries, and agriculture. A ship-carpenter earns from 14*s.* to 16*s.* a-week, a labourer 9*s.* or 10*s.* There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Improved, and now considered to be in a good state. The public teachers are spoken highly of. It is believed that few or no children are growing up without some amount of instruction, and that most of them are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic; also that about one-third of the boys are learning navigation. I was assured that it is here looked upon as a disgrace in a parent not to give his children education. It is stated that there are not more than four or five grown up persons who are wholly unable to read; and it is believed that most of the inhabitants can read easily. It was also stated that there is, in fact, a good deal of reading among them, the subject-matter consisting chiefly of newspapers, and other cheap periodicals, and of books from libraries.

DUNBLANE, PERTHSHIRE.

Population about 2,000; and, including a district three miles round, about 3,500.

(Visited 30th November 1836.)

Dunblane.

Notwithstanding that Dunblane is the residence of the sheriff-substitute for the western division of Perthshire, the prison there is used for little more than a lock-up-house, and is not fit even for that purpose, being very old, very small, and very insecure. It forms part of the town-house, and stands in a public situation. There are only two cells at present in use, and one even of these is not a fit place to occupy in winter; for there are no means of warming it, and the window is unglazed: the other cell has a fire-place, and its window was once glazed, but all the panes are now broken. The following are the dimensions of the cells:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. | Cubical content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 12 feet. | 10½ feet | 10½ feet | 1250 |
| 1 | 10½ | 7½ | 10½ | 800 |

There is no airing-yard. The walls of the cells were dirty, but in other respects the place was moderately clean.

There was an instance of escape about three months ago. It was on the part of two men, both notorious criminals, against whom there were three separate charges of house-breaking. The whole population of Dunblane turned out in pursuit of them, but they got among the hills and evaded the chase. Three months before this there was another escape, though not of the same importance; for on that occasion only one man got away, and he was under a charge of assault. The usual mode of escape is to get through the ceiling into a kind of loft, out of which a person can easily force his way. Nothing has been done to render the place more secure since the last escape took place, or even to make good that part of the ceiling through which the prisoners forced their way; the very hole remaining, as if to invite others to follow their example. It has, however, been determined to keep guard through the night (so long as the prison remains in its present state) whenever any one is in confinement under a serious charge. This precaution indeed is rendered necessary, not only by the insecure condition of the gaol, but by the state of the keeper also, who is so infirm and unwieldy, partly from age and partly, I believe, from the free use of the bottle, that a prisoner need be under little apprehension of his ever coping with him in an attempt to force his way out, or of his ever catching him if he once got an inch beyond his grasp. The coating of dirt, too, in which the keeper appears to think it necessary to envelop himself, would be found no inconsiderable addition to his burden, and would give the prisoner an undue advantage in the race.

There were two prisoners at the time of my visit, both of them poachers. They had been in two days, and the sheriff expected that they would be released on bail in the course of that day or the next; if the bail were not given they would then be sent to Perth.

The allowance of food is a quartern loaf each day; or the prisoner may, if he choose, receive the value of the loaf in money. Additional supplies of food from without are permitted; indeed they could scarcely be prevented, for the window of the cell which is chiefly used opens upon the street. Debtors are not received into this prison.

Bedding.—Loose straw and as many blankets as the prisoner asks for.

Female Prisoners.—These are always kept separate from the males, but there is no female superintendent.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the sheriff.

PERTHSHIRE.

Population about 145,000.

Perthshire.

Prisons existing at present.—Eight; namely, two at Perth (including a very small house of correction), and one each at Blairgowrie, Dunblane, Crieff, Dunkeld, Kincardine, and Culross. Several of these are very small and very bad. (See the separate Reports.)

Additional Prisons wanted.—Seven; namely, a small prison at each of the following places:—

Aberfeldy.—Population about 2,000. There is but little crime at this place, but the prison is wanted for the large Highland district which is near it.

Alyth.—Population (including the immediate neighbourhood) about 2,000. There are but few thefts committed at Alyth, but there are many acts of wanton mischief, and many assaults, and other breaches of the peace. At present every offender, if punished at all, must be sent to Perth, 22 miles distant, at a cost of nearly 2*l.* The following are the items of the expense of removal:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Officer, a day and a half, at 7*s.* 6*d.* a-day | 0 | 11 | 3 |
| Assistant, ditto at 4*s.* a-day | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| Cart-hire, 9*d.* per mile | 0 | 16 | 6 |
| Horse-keep, &c. about | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| Tolls (free by a late Act of Parliament) | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| | £1 | 17 | 9 |

Auchterarder.—Population about 2,500, or, including a district of five miles round, 5,000. There is not much crime among the inhabitants, but many tinkers and other vagrants pass through and commit offences.

Callander.—Population about 1,000. This town, like Aberfeldy, is the chief place in a large Highland district; great cattle markets also are held at it.

Doune.—Population about 1,500, or, including a district of five miles round, 2,500. There is but little crime at Doune; but, like Callander, Doune is a place where great cattle markets are held, and it is also a polling station at the county elections. At present the parish school-room is used as a prison at the time of the markets, and there are sometimes 20 prisoners in it at once.

Errol.—Population about 2,000; and, including a district of five miles round, about 3,000.

Errol is about half-way between Dundee and Perth, and a great many vagrants and other strangers pass through it (especially Irish) on their way to Dundee to seek employment.

Pitlochrie.—The population of this town is not more than 600 or 700, but there are many villages round about; and, as it stands on the Highland road to Inverness, many vagrants pass through it.

State of Perthshire as respects Crime.

Upon the whole there does not appear to be much crime in this county, and, as regards most kinds of offences, there is less than formerly. Murder, highway robbery, cattle-stealing by force, and house-breaking have almost disappeared. On the other hand, the crime of incendiarism has sprung up within the last few years, and poaching, with its attendant offences, has increased, although to a less extent than smuggling, and illicit distillation have decreased. The chief kind of offence in this county at the present time is that of assault; and the number of cases appears to have increased within the last few years, owing, it is thought, to the strong political contention which has existed, but which is said to be now subsiding. The assaults, however, of the present day are by no means equal either in number or ferocity to the old clan-feuds even in the mitigated form in which they were carried on 70 or 80 years ago.

There is no place in the county at which a greater improvement has taken place than at the town of Perth itself. Thirty years ago it was not safe to be out alone after night-fall; but at the present day a person can walk singly through the streets at any hour of the night in perfect safety. Indeed, as respects public order and quiet, Perth would now compare advantageously with almost any town of equal size in the country; for after 11 o'clock at night the stillness that prevails is like that of a country village.

Assaults in Perthshire, as elsewhere, are generally committed by boys and young men between the ages of 15 and 25. Other offences are committed by people of various ages. The assaults are generally by resident inhabitants, but many of the thefts, particularly those of a serious kind, are committed by strangers. The assaults almost always take place under the excitement of whisky, and many of the thefts are to be traced to a desire to obtain this liquor. The thieves are considered, as a class, to be equal in intelligence to others in the same rank of life, but to be very inferior in education and knowledge. Many of the thieves are tinkers, and there is a considerable number of thimble-players among them. I have not been able to form an estimate of the whole number of criminals in Perthshire, but by means of information obtained from Capt. Boyle, the intelligent and efficient superintendent of police at Perth, I can state, with considerable minuteness, the number of offenders in that town, and its suburbs. In the first place there are about 60 prostitutes, about half of whom are drunken, disorderly, and in the occasional habit of stealing; 12 of them, indeed, are common thieves. There are also six or seven men (one of them an old man) and six or eight old women, all common thieves. (Some of these have returned from transportation.) Again, there is one girl (not included in the prostitutes) and there are six boys who are thieves. And, lastly, there are many thieves among the vagrants who pass through Perth.

Causes affecting Crime in Perthshire, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, and it is believed to have increased of late years. Within the eastern division of the county alone there have been no fewer than 12 deaths caused by drunkenness, which have come under judicial investigation during the last three years, although such investigations do not follow all sudden deaths, as a matter of course, as in England. There are three or four temperance societies in Perthshire, but they do not flourish.

State of the Police.—Very good at Perth, and tolerably good in most parts of the county. Considerable inconvenience however is felt at Perth, from the circumstance of one of the suburbs (near the barracks) not being included within the jurisdiction of the town police.

Administration of Justice.—Much more efficient than formerly. Sir William Rae's Act, giving a summary power of trial to the sheriffs in lieu of the tedious process formerly in use, has been attended by the best results. There is an arrangement respecting the procurators-fiscal in this county, which, as far as I know, is peculiar to it, and which appears to work very well. Instead of having a considerable number of procurators-fiscal, and consequently a divided responsibility, there are here only two, viz., one for each of the great divisions of the county, and each of these procurators has an agent in every place of considerable size in his division, who receives information on the spot, and who is expected to inquire into the circumstances of every offence committed within his district, and to report upon it to his principal; the parties who have been robbed, or otherwise injured, having, of course, the option of going, in the first instance, to the procurator-fiscal himself, and of communicating with him at any time if they are not satisfied with the proceedings of his agent.

Condition of the People.—Much improved, and now tolerably good. The people live in better houses than formerly, are better clad, and eat better food. There is still, however, a good deal of pauperism and mendicity in the town of Perth, and a great deal of mendicity generally through the county, but it is chiefly on the part of vagrants. The bulk of the inhabitants of this county are engaged, some in agriculture, some in pastoral occupations, and others in hand-loom weaving and flax-spinning.

Education.—Much improved, and now tolerably general in the rural districts, but still very deficient at Perth. Two additional schools, however, are now in the course of erection in this town; partly at the cost of Government. There is a good infant school at Perth, and another infant school is about to be opened. There are several libraries for the working classes at Perth (supported chiefly by the members themselves), and there are some in the rural districts; most of the latter being itinerating libraries, on the plan of Mr. Brown, of Haddington. There is a mechanics' institution, but it is at present in abeyance.

NEWBURGH, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 3,000, or, including a district three miles round, about 6,000.

(Visited 22d October 1836.)

This prison consists of two cells only. They are on the ground floor of the town-house, which stands in the main street, and was built about 30 years ago. Until within the last six years there were two additional rooms for debtors, but they have been converted into a little hall, which is used as a corn-market. On the other hand, a room, which was formerly a library, has lately been changed into a cell, and is one of the two which now form the prison. The dimensions of the cells are about as follows:—

| Cells. | Length. Ft. | Breadth. Ft. | Height. Ft. | Cubical Content. Ft. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 9 | 9 | 10 | 800 |
| 1 | 10 | 6 | 10 | 600 |

One of the cells is tolerably dry, but the other is damp: the latter cell, however, has a fire-place, and glazed windows, while the former is without a fire-place, and its window is unglazed. Both are moderately well ventilated, and I found them both clean. The prison appears to be now tolerably secure. The last escape took place about 15 years ago, and was effected by means of a crow-bar, which had been handed in at the window; for both windows are accessible to the public, although not very readily so. After this escape additional bars were placed in the window; and in all ordinary cases it is now probably strong enough; but there is little doubt that a determined fellow, assisted from the outside, might still get out. About three years ago a prisoner resorted to the favourite scheme of setting fire to the door, but he was discovered, and the fire was extinguished. The combustible material he employed was his own shirt, which he managed to kindle by means of a flint and steel, which he had taken into the prison with him.

The prison of Newburgh is at present used as a lock-up house only, notwithstanding that the place is a royal burgh, and that all royal burghs are required by law to have a regular gaol both for criminals and debtors. There has been no instance of a commitment for debt at Newburgh for many years (which is probably the reason the debtors' rooms were applied to another purpose), and there has been no instance, also, for several years, of a person being arrested within the burgh on a criminal charge entailing imprisonment for more than a single night (not, however, owing to the entire absence of offences requiring longer imprisonments). If a case should arise, the prisoner would be sent to Cupar, the burgh paying the cost of his removal, and of his food, &c. As a lock-up house, the prison of Newburgh is used, on an average, about once a month. There was no prisoner at the time of my visit.

Jurisdiction.—That of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Crime at Newburgh.—There is not a great deal of crime at Newburgh; still there are many assaults, and other breaches of the peace, and some petty thefts, such as stealing linen left out to dry, &c. Upon the whole, however, there appears to have been some decrease lately in the number of offences. The assaults take place almost entirely under the excitement of whisky, and are committed chiefly by about half a dozen young men living in the town, whose ages vary from 17 to 30. Three of these were mentioned as particularly distinguished, and there is no doubt that the peace of the town would be much promoted by their removal. There are very few dishonest inhabitants, the thefts being chiefly on the part of strangers, who also commit their share of the breaches of the peace. This latter observation applies particularly to the Irishmen who pass through Newburgh on their road to Dundee.

Causes affecting Crime at Newburgh, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not a great deal, and less than formerly, at least among the male part of the population, though it is feared that whisky-drinking—seldom, however, carried to intoxication—is more general among the females than heretofore. There is a temperance society, which had fallen off, but which has lately revived; it contains about 100 members, and is believed to have done good.

State of the Police.—Not very efficient. Much good, however, is done by the county officer, who looks after vagrants in this neighbourhood.

Administration of Justice.—The town not having adopted the provisions of the general Police Act, there is no magistrate invested with the power of summary trial; and such being the case, the old, tedious, and expensive forms must always be gone through; the consequence, as might be expected, is, that many offences are committed with impunity.

Condition of the People.—Very good. For many years, and even when there has been distress elsewhere, there has been plenty of profitable labour at Newburgh, both for males and females, and these of all ages. There are not more than about 20 persons generally on the poor-roll, (who receive from 2*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.* a-month each,) and there are only two resident beggars. The chief occupation of the people is weaving. A weaver, whether a man or a woman, earns about 12*s.* a-week; and children and old people who wind weft, &c., earn about 4*s.* a-week. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Improved, but still deficient. Most of the children are receiving instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic, but a considerable number are growing up without any education; and those who do go to school are removed too early. It is believed that the greater part of the adult population are able to read, but that many cannot read with sufficient ease to find pleasure in the occupation. There is a library for the working classes, but it does not flourish; nevertheless there is a good deal of reading of newspapers and other cheap periodicals.

Popular Amusements.—None. A public pleasure-ground is much wanted.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 2,000; or, including a district three miles round, about 3,000.

(Visited 22d October 1836.)

Auchtermuchty.

This prison is seldom used otherwise than as a lock-up house, prisoners on charges of theft, &c., being generally sent to Cupar. Last July a boy was confined for three weeks; but, with that exception, no one has been kept in more than a single night for many years. According to the register of imprisonments, (which, however, is probably imperfect to some extent,) there have been only 13 cases of imprisonment of any kind during the last five years.

The prison, as usual, forms part of the town-house, an old building, standing in one of the principal streets. There are three cells, including, however, a room, which was used as a soup-kitchen at the time of the cholera, and which has not yet been reconverted into a cell. The best of the two cells in use has just been fitted up, and is about nine feet long, eight feet broad, and seven feet high. I could not get into the other, as the key had been mislaid; but I got a glimpse of the inside by means of a hole in the door, and it appeared to be about 10 feet long, 9 feet broad, and 10 feet high. The windows of two of the cells are accessible from without, and the window of the third cell opens upon a yard, which, though walled round, might be entered without much difficulty. The rooms are all dry, (the town-house stands on a sand-rock,) and they appear to be tolerably well ventilated and tolerably warm. Two of them have open fire-places. The prison appears to be moderately secure. No escape has taken place for a long time; but there have not been many prisoners, and most of them have been in for small offences.

The prisoners receive 6*d.* a-day in money for their food, and they are allowed to have additional supplies from without.—The bedding consists of a straw mattress and a rug. Clothing is not supplied. The prisoners are not set to work, or instructed in any way.

There has not been any debtor in the prison for the last 15 years; and no inhabitant of Auchtermuchty has been committed to any other prison for debt during that time.

The gaoler receives 1*s.* on the admission of every prisoner, and 4*d.* a-night during the time of his confinement. These fees are paid out of the burgh funds, and form his salary.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Crime at Auchtermuchty.—There is but little crime. The chief offences are breaches of the peace and petty thefts, such as stealing fruit from gardens and orchards. At the present time, however, there is a warrant out for the apprehension of two persons who have broken open a weaver's shop, and stolen a quantity of yarn. The breaches of the peace are generally caused by whisky-drinking. Most of the offences are committed by resident inhabitants; but this number is small.

Causes affecting Crime independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal, and apparently on the increase. There is a temperance society, but it has fallen off lately.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police; but there are two town-officers, and a number of special constables, who act when called upon.

Administration of Justice.—A magistrate is wanted, with power to try summarily for small offences.

Condition of the People.—Improved during the last three years, and at the present time tolerably good. There is but little pauperism; and, as the number of vagrants has much decreased, and there are only four resident beggars, there is now but little mendicity. The chief occupation of the people is weaving. The usual wages are from 10*s.* to 15*s.* or 16*s.* a-week. There is a savings' bank, containing about 2,700*l.*; but part of the money comes from Falkland.

Education.—Tolerably good. Most of the children learn reading and writing, and a little arithmetic; and very few, if any, are growing up without some kind of education. It is believed that most of the adults are able to read easily; and, in fact, there is a good deal of reading among them, consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There is a library for the working classes, which is supported entirely by the members themselves, of whom there are from 40 to 50. The subscription is 4*s.* a-year.

There are no popular amusements at Auchtermuchty.

the ground floor, and the other on the floor above. The first is damp and cold; but the other is dry, and tolerably warm. There is an open fire-place in each, and both are tolerably well ventilated; but I found them both dirty. The prison appears to be sufficiently secure for persons arrested on trifling charges, but not for others. The last instance of escape was about 16 years ago, when a prisoner overpowered the gaoler.

There was no one in the prison at the time of my visit; and I was told that, on an average, there are not now more than four or five prisoners (including vagrants and drunkards) in the course of a year. The number was formerly greater, and a party of gypsies (containing both males and females) used sometimes to be locked up together for the night; but nothing of the kind has occurred lately.

The food consists of three or four pennyworth of bread daily and about half a gallon of small beer for each prisoner. The allowance to debtors is paid in money, and is generally about 1*s.* 2*d.* per day. Loose straw is all that is provided for bedding; but prisoners staying more than a single night generally send for their own bedding. There is no work in the prison, and the prisoners can easily communicate with persons on the outside. Little can be expected of the gaoler, as his salary is only 1*l.* per annum.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Crime at Falkland.—There is but little crime. The offences that do occur are chiefly petty assaults, which are committed by 10 or a dozen young men, (inhabitants of the town,) and almost always under the excitement of whisky.

Causes affecting Crime at Falkland, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not much, and less than formerly. There is not, however, any temperance society at Falkland; there was one, but it has died away.

State of the Police.—Tolerably efficient, although there is no regular establishment. There are, however, three town officers and 16 special constables, under an efficient captain, who act when called upon; and there is a general willingness among the inhabitants to support the execution of the laws.

Administration of Justice.—A magistrate, with summary power to try for small offences, is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Improved, and now tolerably good. There are about 20 persons on the poor-roll, receiving, together, about 120*l.* a-year; but there are no beggars. The chief occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving; and the usual wages are 9*s.* or 10*s.* a-week, except when over-work is done, when the wages are, of course, somewhat higher. There is no savings' bank at Falkland, but deposits are sent to the bank at Auchtermuchty.

Education.—Not in a satisfactory state, but improving. The late parish schoolmaster is said to have been very inefficient, although a well-educated man. It is believed that most of the adults can read easily; and there is said to be a good deal of reading among them, consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There was a library for the working classes, but it is not in use at present.

Popular Amusements.—The people of Falkland appear to be very musical; they have an instrumental band, and there is generally a meeting once a-week, in the town-hall, for singing.

CUPAR-FIFE.

Population between 6,000 and 7,000; or, including a district five miles round, about 10,000.

(Visited 22nd October 1836, and subsequent days.)

Cupar-Fife.

The prison of Cupar was built at the joint expense of the county and burgh, and is used for the burgh and the eastern half of the county. It was erected about 20 years ago, at a cost of about 3,000*l.*, exclusive of the expense of obtaining the Act, which was about 1,000*l.* more. The prison is unfortunately so very bad, both in site and construction, that it would be impossible, by any alteration, to render it even tolerably suitable as a place of confinement. The situation is low and damp; and, in the only part of the prison which is secure, it is impossible to do more, by way of separation, than to keep the males apart from the females. There is, too, no means of setting the prisoners to work. There is little doubt that one-half the sum expended on this building, if differently applied, would have been sufficient for the erection of a much better prison. As it is, so much money has been wasted on external decoration, that the place has more the appearance of a gentleman's seat than of a receptacle for persons who have injured society. There are five cells for criminals and five rooms for debtors; the first being on the ground-floor, and the latter on the floor above. Four of the criminals' cells, namely, those in which the male criminals are confined, open into a common passage: and, as they are small, and without windows, it is absolutely necessary to allow the prisoners free access to this passage during the day. The remaining cell for criminals stands alone, and is used for females, and it has been made, subsequently to the building of the prison, out of part of the entrance-lobby, which was wastefully large. Previous to its construction, the female prisoners were generally put into one of the four cells just described, and language of the filthiest kind used frequently to be held between these prisoners and the males. The four cells for males are each thirteen feet long, six feet nine inches broad, and about eight feet high; their cubical content being about 700 feet. In one of these cells as many as four or five persons are sometimes placed together. The cell for females, sometimes used as a sick-room for male prisoners, is ten feet long, nine feet broad, and nine feet four inches high. The rooms for the debtors consist of a common day-room, two sleeping-rooms, and two small rooms which are better furnished than the others, and which are let to any debtor who can afford to pay for superior accommodation. The following are the dimensions of the debtors' rooms:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Dining room . . . . | 14 feet. | 12½ feet. | 11 feet. |
| Two bed rooms each . . | 14 | 8 | 11 |
| Two private rooms each . | 12½ | 9½ | 11 |

There is an airing-yard; but escape from it would be so easy that the gaoler seldom ventures to allow any prisoner to go into it. In winter the lower cells are often very damp; but the upper rooms are dry. The ventilation is moderately good throughout; and the prison is probably seldom very cold, as the upper rooms have open fires, and the passage with which the lower cells communicate is warmed in winter by a stove. I found the whole of the prison very clean. The lower part is tolerably secure; but an escape could be made from the upper rooms without any great difficulty. The last escape, however, was from the lower part of the prison, and was effected by the criminals. On this occasion the keeper was first deceived, and then overpowered; and no fewer than five prisoners got away. One of them, who, it is believed, had arranged the plot, was in gaol on a charge of forgery. This was about five years ago. The only previous instance of escape occurred about 12 years ago, and was on the part of a criminal prisoner who had been incautiously allowed to occupy an upper room. He was a slater, and had been employed on the roof of this very prison; and, during the night, he made his way on to the top of the prison, and escaped.

State of the Prisoners.—At the time of my visit there were only seven prisoners (including two debtors), which is about half the average number. They looked tolerably clean, and the surgeon told me that he never finds them dirty.

Health.—Prisoners confined in the lower cells are generally in a bad state of health, owing chiefly to the great dampness of these cells in certain seasons of the year. Prisoners in the upper rooms are generally tolerably well. The most prevalent diseases are rheumatism and pulmonary complaints, caused, in a great measure, by the state of the cells. The scarlet fever appeared last year, and nearly a third part of the prisoners were attacked, but no one died. The only place to which a sick prisoner can be removed is the cell for females, when that happens to be empty.

Food.—Untried prisoners (if from the country) get three meals a-day, according to the scale below. Convicted prisoners and untried prisoners belonging to the burgh have the same breakfast and dinner, but they have no supper.

Breakfast.—One pint and a half (imperial measure) of oatmeal porridge, and half a pint of new milk.

Dinner.—One pennyworth of bread, and one pint and a quarter of soup.

Supper.—The same as for breakfast, unless the prisoner prefers tea, which he is allowed to have.

All the food is of good quality.

Debtors receive their allowance for food in money. They generally get from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day, deducting 4*d.* which they have to pay to the gaoler for their bedding, &c.

Bedding.—A straw mattress, a sheet, a pair of blankets, and a coverlet; in winter two coverlets are allowed, and sometimes an additional pair of blankets.—No clothing is supplied, except in cases of destitution.

Discipline.—None. There is neither work, separation, nor instruction; at least, neither is provided systematically, although some of the prisoners do work voluntarily, and mutual instruction (not however, confined to literary matters, I fear) goes on occasionally. Communication cannot readily be carried on between prisoners in the lower cells and people on the outside, but there is nothing to prevent such communication with prisoners in the upper rooms; and that communication does, in fact, go on to a considerable extent, may be inferred from the circumstance of there being a public notice on the walls of the prison strictly forbidding it. The most common offence among the prisoners is stated to be quarrelling and fighting with one another, followed occasionally with abusive language to the gaoler. The usual punishment is confinement in one of the cells, sometimes accompanied with irons.

Female Prisoners.—The gaoler's wife looks after them to some extent, but they are partly under the care of the gaoler himself. There is no difference between the treatment of the females and the males.

Debtors.—The average number during the last year was one and a quarter. They are supplied with bedding, but they pay 4*d.* a-night for its use. Visits from friends and supplies of food from without are freely allowed. The debtors attend public worship.

Miscellaneous.—There is no difference in the treatment of tried and untried prisoners. Visits are allowed every day from 10 A.M. to 2 P.M.; subject, however to the veto of the gaoler, who says that he never admits any one unless he knows him to be a person of good character, or a near relation of the prisoner. All letters are inspected by the gaoler. Smoking tobacco, &c., is allowed. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their parishes. There is no insane prisoner at present.

Officers.—There is only one, the keeper, who appears to be well qualified for the management of a small prison. He has the character of being discreet, active, firm yet kind, and trustworthy; and the little that I had an opportunity of seeing tended to confirm the justice of this report.

A medical gentleman of the town acts as surgeon, but the remuneration is so very small (only 3*l.* 3*s.* a-year) that he cannot be expected to give much of his time to the prison, or to keep the proper records of sickness, &c. He attends, however, when required, and even occasionally when not sent for, and it is evident that he does much more than the mere salary would call for.

There is no chaplain, but the ministers of the town generally attend by turn once a-week, to perform public worship.

Fees.—The gaoler, as already mentioned, receives 4*d.* a-night for each debtor, and he gets the additional payments made for the use of the private rooms. He has also a suit of clothes every year, worth about 5*l.* No fees are demanded of debtors or other prisoners on their discharge, and there is no garnish, &c.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of criminals, according to the prescribed form. On looking over it, however, I found some omissions and inaccuracies. No entry is made of vagrants and others who are imprisoned for a night or so, and no record is kept of Revenue prisoners, of whom, however, there are very few. The account of disbursements is kept partly by the town chamberlain, and partly by the sheriff-clerk. The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year 1835 (about an average year):—

| | | | | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminals | | | | 81 | 17 | 11 |
| Furniture and bedding | | | | 9 | 13 | 7 |
| Fuel, oil, and candles | | | | 10 | 5 | 11½ |
| Washing | | | | 1 | 18 | 0 |
| Repairs | | | | 7 | 13 | 11½ |
| Sundries | | | | 2 | 2 | 10 |
| Salaries— | | | | | | |
| Keeper—Cash | £31 | 5 | 0 | | | |
| Clothes | 5 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | | | | 36 | 5 | 0 |
| Surgeon, including charge for medicines | | | | 3 | 8 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors and Revenue prisoners | | | | 153 | 5 | 3 |

Of this sum the county paid £55. 6*s.* 8½*d.*, viz. £39. 16*s.* 8½*d.* for the aliment of county prisoners before trial, and £15. 10*s.* for part of the gaoler's salary. The remainder, £97. 18*s.* 6½*d.*, was paid by the burgh.

Average number of prisoners during the year, 12¾, viz. criminals, 11; debtors, 1¼; and Excise prisoners, ½.

Average yearly cost of each criminal prisoner, about £11. 10. Average daily cost, about 7½*d.*

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

ST. ANDREWS, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 4,500; or, including a district five miles round, about 7,500.

(Visited 26th October 1836.)

St. Andrews.

The prison of St Andrews forms part of the town-house, which is an old building standing in the middle of the town. There are only three rooms, viz. one on the basement floor, and two on the first floor, and there is no airing-yard. The room on the basement floor is partly below ground, and is very damp and cold. One of the rooms on the first floor also is cold, and there are no means of warming it, but both of these rooms appear to be dry. The prison is but moderately secure, the windows being all accessible to the public. The last escape occurred about three years ago, and it was on the part of a man who was supposed to be mad, and in whose cell the turnkey slept to prevent his committing any violence. Whether the prisoner was really mad or not I cannot say; but certain it is that he had wit enough to pick his keeper's pocket of the keys of the gaol while the latter was asleep, and to make his escape.

The dimensions of the cells are as follows:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Debtors' room | 16 ft. | 15 ft. | 8 ft. | 1,900 |
| Criminals' cell | 15 | 15 | 7 | 1,550 |
| Ditto | 9 | 7½ | 8½ | 570 |

The prison is tolerably well ventilated, and I found it clean.

There was no one in the gaol at the time of my visit, and the average number of prisoners is less than one.

Health.—There are so few prisoners that it is difficult to speak with any degree of certainty on the subject of health, especially as there is no regularly appointed surgeon. The damp state of the lower cell must necessarily tend to produce illness, but no death has occurred for several years.

Food.—The prisoners are boarded by the gaoler, who is allowed 6*d.* a-day for each of them. There are no fixed rations however. Debtors receive a money allowance of about 1*s.* a-day.

Bedding.—Loose straw, two double blankets, and a rug.—No clothing is supplied.

St. Andrews.

Discipline.—None. There is neither labour nor instruction.

Female Prisoners.—No female superintendence is provided, and the females are in every way treated like the males.

Debtors.—There has been no debtor in the prison for more than a year. Debtors provide their own clothing and bedding as usual; and they are allowed to see their friends, and to receive additional supplies of food, &c.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits from friends are allowed at the discretion of the gaoler. Letters are inspected. Smoking tobacco is allowed; indeed, it could not be prevented. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their parishes, but very few come from any considerable distance.

Officers.—There is only one, the gaoler, who appears to be an active and intelligent man, and better qualified for his situation than could be expected, considering the small amount of his salary. The gaoler's house is connected with the prison.

There is no regular surgeon, but some medical man is sent for when required. There is no chaplain, but the ministers of the town often visit the prison when there are any inmates.

Fees.—The gaoler is considered to have a claim to 2*d.* a-night on each debtor for the time he remains in prison, but no means are taken to enforce this claim if the debtor refuses to pay the money.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonments arranged according to the prescribed form, but many of the columns are not filled up. The town-chamberlain keeps an account of expenses.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

---

State of St. Andrews as respects Crime.—There is very little crime in this town. Of the few offences that are committed the most common are robbing gardens and disturbances in the street, including petty assaults. The petty thefts are committed chiefly by boys from 10 to 15 years old. The street brawls always arise from drunkenness. Most of the offences are committed by resident inhabitants, except those which take place at the time of the principal markets or fairs.

Causes affecting Crime at St. Andrews independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not a great deal, but more, it is feared, than formerly. A drunken man is now sometimes seen on the Sunday, which, it is said, used never to happen. There is a temperance society, but it has fallen off somewhat.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police, but there are three town-officers (including the gaoler), who act when called upon; and it is believed that no offences, except a few of a petty kind, escape detection.

Administration of Justice.—A magistrate is wanted with summary power of trial for petty offences.

Condition of the People.—Better than formerly, and now tolerably good. There is but little pauperism, and begging is not allowed, and, in point of fact, is prevented. The chief occupations of the people are weaving and employments connected with agriculture. There is a savings' bank, containing deposits to the amount of 1,100*l.*

Education.—Greatly improved since the opening of the Madras college, (established by funds bequeathed by the late Dr. Bell,) and now very general. The Madras college is used by all classes, rich and poor; and even strangers are attracted to the town for the sake of partaking of its advantages, which happily are not limited to those who are born in a particular place or who bear a particular name. There are two rates of fees, the highest being 3*s.* a-quarter, for which the pupil is taught reading, English grammar, arithmetic, and writing: the charge for instruction in Latin and Greek together is 7*s.* 6*d.* per quarter, and the same charge is made for instruction in any one of the modern languages, in the mathematics, or in drawing. It is believed that there are very few children who are not receiving instruction (and that of an efficient kind) in reading, writing, and arithmetic, at least.

Most of the adult population are considered able to read easily; and it is stated that there is, in point of fact, a good deal of reading among them, consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There are some libraries for the working classes, but they are formed exclusively of religious works.

Popular Amusements.—Golf is much played at by a portion of the inhabitants, and there are public walks which are frequented by all.

CRAIL, FIFESHIRE.

(Visited 27th October 1836.)

Crail.

This prison consists of two rooms only, forming part of a steeple, which stands in the middle of the town. One of the rooms is on the ground-floor, and one on the floor above. The upper room, which is appropriated to the debtors, when there are any, is a comfortable place, being dry, clean, and furnished with a stove, but it is not very secure, although it has been made more secure than it was during the last few weeks. About a month ago a boy got through the window-bars, and escaped; and the magistrates were informed soon afterwards that a person had been heard to declare that he should put a man who was in debt to him into prison, in hopes that this man also would escape, which would give him a claim on the magistrates for the amount of the debt. Upon this an order was immediately given for additional bars to be put up before the window, to frustrate this dishonest scheme, and nothing more has been heard of the threatened imprisonment. The lower cell appears to be rather damp, and there are no means of warming it. It is seldom used, however, and the few who are put in are generally drunken men or vagrants, who are unable to find a lodging. The dimensions of the two cells are as follow:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Upper cell. | 14½ ft. | 14 ft. | 9 ft. | 1,800 ft. |
| Lower do. | 14 ft. | 14 ft. | 6½ ft. | 1,250 |

The number of persons confined in this prison is exceedingly small. During the whole of the last year there were only three, neither of whom remained in more than one day. Vagrants and drunkards are supplied with loose straw for bedding, but other prisoners generally bring their own bedding. The criminal prisoners are boarded by the gaoler, who is allowed 6*d.* a-day for each of them. He generally feeds them with bread and beer, but there are no fixed rations.

Discipline.—None, there being no labour or instruction, and no means existing for preventing communication from without.

Female Prisoners.—These are treated like the males, and are looked after by the gaoler, but their number is very small.

Debtors.—There has not been any debtor in the prison for several years.

Officers.—The gaoler is the only officer. He is an intelligent man, and is said to be quite trustworthy. His salary is exceedingly small, being only 1*l.* a-year. He keeps a register of imprisonments, according to the prescribed form. The entries are neatly made, but some of the columns are not filled up.

Fees.—The gaoler is considered as having a claim to 4*d.* a-night from every debtor, but as there has not been any debtor for a long time this claim can be of little or no value.

The following is an account of the expenses of the gaol during the year ending 15th October 1836, which appears to be about an average year:—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminal prisoners | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Repairs | 0 | 13 | 4 |
| Gaoler's salary | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | £1 | 14 | 4 |

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

---

State of Crime at Crail.—There is very little crime at Crail. Of the offences which do occur the most common are disturbances in the street, and stealing fruit; the former arising almost always from drunkenness. The offences are committed chiefly by between 12 and 18 persons, inhabitants of the town, and varying in age from 12 to 20 years.

Causes affecting Crime at Crail, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Very little, and less than formerly. There is not, however, any temperance society.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police, but there are two town officers (including the gaoler) who act when called upon, and there is an efficient county officer constantly on duty in the neighbourhood to look after vagrants. It is believed that very few offences escape detection.

Administration of Justice.—The magistrates complain of the inconvenience and hardship of not having a town-clerk, or other legal adviser, at hand, to consult in cases of difficulty. A short time ago the chief magistrate had to pay 25*l.* out of his own pocket, and each of the two other magistrates 15*l.*, to defray certain law expenses incurred in defending an action brought against them, for preventing the plaintiff from removing some building materials, which the magistrates had allowed another inhabitant of the town to lay down in the street for a short time to repair his house, which house happened to be near that of the party complaining. The magistrates made good their right to act as they had done, and the suit was consequently lost; but they were obliged to pay their own expenses, as the plaintiff was a man of little or no property.—I should remark that I give the statement as it was furnished me by the chief magistrate.

Condition of the People.—Improved, and now for the most part tolerably good. The number on the poor-roll, however, is considerable, being about 100 in a population of 2,000. Many of these, however, do not require much relief. There is a striking example in this parish of the hereditary nature of pauperism; for there is a family in it which has been on the poor-roll, generation after generation, for the last 150 years. The parish also furnishes an instance of the great extent to which imposture is sometimes carried by beggars. This is the case of a woman who died a few years ago, possessed of 600*l.*, which she had amassed in her journeys through the country as a beggar.—Agriculture forms the chief occupation of the inhabitants.—There is no savings' bank, but deposits are sent to a savings' bank in a neighbouring parish.

Education.—Much extended of late. It is believed that every child in the parish is now learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. At the present time, too, there are very few of the adult population, under 40 years of age, who are not able to read and write, although a few years ago the art of writing, at least, was so little diffused, that there were several members even of the town council who could not sign their own names; and of those who could perform this feat many were so slow in the operation, that the business of taking the oaths of office (in doing which the name of each councilman must be written, either by himself or by deputy, four or five times) used to occupy two hours; whereas it is now completed in 20 minutes. There is at present a good deal of reading among the people, consisting chiefly of newspapers; but there is no library for the working classes.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER, ANSTRUTHER WESTER, AND KILLRENNY OR SILLERDYKE.

Total of Population about 2,600; or, including Pittenweem and a district three miles round, about 5,000.

(Visited 27th October 1836.)

Anstruther Easter, Anstruther Wester, and Killrenny.

These three little burghs form one undivided town, though each of them has its separate prison, and is under a separate jurisdiction. As might be expected, under such circumstances, all the prisons are very bad ones; the best of the three consisting of a single small cell, without any means of warmth, and with the window opening upon the public street. This prison is in Anstruther Easter. The prison of Anstruther Wester is a wretched hole—cold, damp, and dirty. That of Sillerdyke also is cold and dirty, but it has not been used for the last 10 years, the burgh having lost its municipal franchise, and there being therefore no authority to confine people in it. All the prisons are very old; two of them appear to be tolerably secure, but this, under the circumstances of the case, can scarcely be considered an advantage.

Fortunately these prisons are but little used; all persons who are to be confined for more than a night or so, being sent to the prison of Cupar; a prison which, though really a very bad one, rises into high excellence when compared with the miserable dungeons of Anstruther and Sillerdyke. The prison of Anstruther Easter is, on an average, used about five times in the year; but that of Anstruther Wester seldom once a-year. There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit. The bedding consists of loose straw and a rug.

Female Prisoners.—These are treated like the male prisoners. If it should happen that a male and a female were in confinement at the same time, one of them would be put into the town-hall of the particular burgh. Each of the town-halls is occasionally used, also, as a prison for debtors.

Debtors.—In the gaol of Anstruther Easter there is on an average one debtor in about three years; and in that of Anstruther Wester one in about five years. The usual allowance for aliment is about 1*s*. a-day, but the debtor has to pay 4*d*. out of this to the keeper.

Officers.—The gaoler in Anstruther Easter is said to be a sober steady man; but the one in Anstruther Wester is reported to be drunken and inefficient. Each receives a salary of 1*l*. a-year only, together with 4*d*. a-night from every debtor.

The prisons are under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the respective burghs.

State of Crime at Anstruther and Sillerdyke.—There is very little crime in these places, and much less than formerly. The number of robberies and riots, in particular, has decreased. Of the offences which are still committed the most common are petty thefts, and drunken brawls and assaults. These are committed chiefly by young men between 15 and 25 years of age. The offenders are inhabitants of the town, but several of them are away during a considerable part of the year, being engaged in the Greenland whale-fishing. The improvement which has taken place is attributed to the better education of the people, to their improved condition, and to the more efficient administration of the laws.

Causes affecting Crime at Anstruther and Sillerdyke independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not a great deal, and less than formerly. There is a temperance society containing 30 or 40 members.

State of the Police.—There is a county constable to look after vagrants, and there are town officers who act when called upon. There are also some special constables who give assistance willingly when required.—It is believed that few offences escape detection.

Administration of Justice.— More efficient than formerly; but a resident magistrate, with summary power to try for petty offences, is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Improved, and now tolerably good. There is not much pauperism, and there is very little begging. The chief occupation is fishing and farming. Labourers earn from 1*s*. 6*d*. to 2*s*. a-day; female servants 5*l*. or 6*l*. a-year. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Very much improved, and now in a tolerably good state. It is stated that the parochial schoolmasters in this neighbourhood were formerly almost all of them inefficient and drunken, but that those now in office are efficient, able, and respectable men. Very few children are growing up without some kind of education, and most of the children, girls as well as boys, learn reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is believed that most of the adult population are able to read easily; and it is said that there is, in fact, a good deal of reading among them, consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There is no library for the working classes, specially, but there is a circulating library in the town which they make use of to some extent.

Popular Amusements.—Golf and bowling-ring are played at a good deal.

(Visited 27th October 1836.)

The prison of Pitenweem is much the best in this neighbourhood. The town-house, of which it forms part, is a new building standing in the outskirts of the town, and apparently in a dry and healthy situation. There are three rooms, two for debtors, and one for criminals; the latter, and one of the former, are each about 21 feet long, 11 feet wide, and 11 feet high. The other debtors' room is of the same width and height, but is but 30 feet long. The rooms are all dry, but the criminals' room must, I fear, be cold in winter, there being no means of warming it; this latter room, too, is ill ventilated. The debtors' rooms are warmed by open fires, and are tolerably well ventilated. I found all the rooms clean; but a closet opening into the criminals' room, and used as a privy, was in a filthy state. There is no airing-yard.

The place is tolerably secure; but, as there is no resident keeper, and as the windows are accessible from without, it would not be safe to put any person into it who was likely to make a determined effort at escape. About two years ago a prisoner (a deserter from the army) made his escape by overpowering the keeper. There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit; and I was told that, on an average, there are not more than about a dozen offenders (including drunken men) received during the year, and not more than about three debtors. I could not, however, get precise information on these and other points, as the gaoler (an old man) was ill, and the town-clerk was out of town.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Crime at Pittenweem.—There appears to be little crime here. The offences which do occur consist chiefly of petty thefts and drunken brawls.

ST. MONANCE, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 1,100.

(Visited 27th October 1836.)

St. Monance.

The place used as a prison at St. Monance is miserably bad; it is damp, very cold, (the window is unglazed, and there never is a fire,) and it is ill ventilated. I found it rather dirty too, and there was an offensive smell. It is on the basement floor of the town-house, and the window is accessible to all who pass by. It is about 18 feet long, 14 feet wide, and 7 feet high. There is no airing-ground. Debtors are confined in the town-hall; but the room so used is very insecure, and the magistrates must run a great hazard of becoming liable for the amount of the debt, owing to the ease with which the debtor might make his escape. The last escape that did occur was about two years ago, but it was on the part of a criminal. I was informed that there are on an average about 15 criminals, and other offenders, confined in the course of each year. During the last year there were two debtors also. These latter received 1*s.* a-day each for aliment. It seldom happens that prisoners in the criminals' cell remain for more than a single night; such as have to undergo a longer confinement being generally sent at once to Cupar: it is therefore seldom necessary to supply such prisoners with food, and there appears to be no regular provision for doing so. All that is afforded for bedding is a heap of loose straw. The debtors, however, provide their own bedding.

The keeper of this gaol appears to be very unfit for his office. I found him half intoxicated.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates, who are anxious to have a more suitable place provided as soon as possible. They state that they are unable to perform their duty in maintaining order in the town, so long as they have no other place of confinement than the present wretched gaol.

---

State of Crime at St. Monance.—There are many assaults and drunken brawls here, arising almost entirely from drunkenness, and committed, for the most part, by six or eight very troublesome fellows who live in the town.

Causes affecting Crime at St. Monance, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal; especially on Saturday and Sunday. It is thought, too, that drunkenness is rather on the increase. There is no temperance society.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police, but the want is made up, to some extent, by special constables, who act willingly when called upon.

Administration of Justice.—A power of trying summarily for petty offences is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Generally good, and about the same as it has been for many years. There is but little pauperism and scarcely any begging. The chief occupation of the people is fishing. There is a savings' bank, but I had not time to learn what is the amount of deposits.

Education.—In a tolerably good state upon the whole. Some of the children, however, are growing up without any education. There is but little reading among the adult population, though it is believed that most of them are able to read.

There are no popular amusements.

EARLSFERRY, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 650.

(Visited 27th October 1836.)

This prison is very seldom used. It consists of a single cell, about 15 feet square, the floor of which is below the surface of the ground. The place is damp, very cold, and ill ventilated, and it is not secure. It is several years, however, since it was used as a place of confinement, and I found it half filled with goods. When any one is to be confined, (which, however, appears to be a very rare thing at Earlsferry,) he is put into the town-hall; or, if the case be serious, he is sent at once to Cupar. Debtors also would be kept in the town-hall, but it is several years since there was any case of imprisonment for debt. An Irish vagrant was lately confined in this town-hall for making a disturbance in the street, but this is the only instance of confinement of any kind for a long time.

The room used as a town-hall is on the first floor of the town-house, and is dry and well ventilated. There is a small room opening into it, which is used as the prisoner's bed-chamber, and which is tolerably suitable for the purpose.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates.

State of Crime at Earlsferry.—There is very little crime. It is said that almost the only offences that are committed are a few drunken squabbles among some of the colliers who live in the neighbourhood.

Causes affecting Crime at Earlsferry, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A little, and about as much as formerly.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police, but there are special constables, who act willingly when called upon. Earlsferry, too, has, of course, the benefit of the Fife constabulary force for suppressing vagrancy.

Condition of the People.—Much improved of late years, and now good. There is very little pauperism, and there are only two beggars. The chief occupation is hand-loom weaving, at which, at the present time, a person generally earns about 12*s*. a-week; if, however, he works with the broad-loom (which is coming into use, but which requires great bodily strength), he can earn 21*s*. a-week, or even more. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Now general. It is believed that very few children are growing up without receiving some education at least, and that most of them are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is thought, too, that most of the adults, except the very old, are able to read easily. Their reading consists chiefly of newspapers, and other cheap periodicals. There is no library for the working classes.

Popular Amusements.—The favourite popular amusement is golf.

DYSART, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 2,000; or, including the whole of the Parliamentary burgh, about 7,000.

(Visited 28th October 1836.)

Dysart.

This prison consists of two rooms in the town-house, which is a very old building. Their dimensions are about as follows:—

| Cells. | Length.Ft. | Breadth.Ft. | Height.Ft. | Cubical content.Ft. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 16 | 11 | 7 | 1200 |
| 1 | 14 | 9 | 6 | 750 |

Both these rooms are dry and tolerably well ventilated; but as the windows are unglazed, they must sometimes be very cold. They cannot, too, be very secure, as there is no resident keeper, and the windows are accessible from the public street. The last instance of escape was about nine years ago, and was made by getting up the chimney. I found one of the rooms clean, but the other was dirty. Altogether the place is quite unsuitable as a prison.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and the average number of prisoners is less than one. During the last year the average was only a quarter, although there were altogether 11 prisoners. It is several years since there was any debtor in prison; when there is one he is allowed the use of the town-hall in the day time.

Food.—The allowance for food is 6*d*. a-day, paid in money. Additional supplies from without are permitted.

Those confined for a single night on account of drunkenness are furnished with a kind of straw mattress. Prisoners detained for a longer period generally bring their own bedding; but when they do not they are supplied with bedding.

There is nothing that can be called discipline.

Female Prisoners.—These are under the care of the gaoler, and no difference is made between them and the male prisoners; but the two classes are never mixed.

Miscellaneous.—Smoking tobacco is allowed. There is no insane prisoner; but there was one lately, who remained in prison a month.

Officers.—The keeper (who is the only officer) is considered trustworthy; but he appears to be dull. He receives a salary of 3*l*. 10*s*. per annum, and 3*d*. a-night for every criminal prisoner, (paid by the burgh,) and 4*d*. a-night for every debtor, (paid by the debtor himself.)

Dysart.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonments, and the town-clerk an account of disbursements. The expenditure for the year ending 15th October 1836 (above an average year) was as follows :—

| | | £. s. d. |
|---|---|---|
| Aliment of prisoners | | 1 6 8 |
| Keeper's salary | £3 10 0 | |
| Ditto fees | 0 13 4 | |
| | | 4 3 4 |
| | | £5 10 0 |

The prison of Dysart is under the jurisdiction of managers of the burgh appointed by the Court of Session, the burgh not containing the stipulated number of inhabitants renting houses at 10*l.* a-year or upwards to entitle it to retain the privilege of choosing magistrates, &c.

State of Crime at Dysart.—There is much less crime than formerly, and now very little. Of the offences which are still committed, robbing gardens is the most common. House-breaking, violent assaults, and other breaches of the peace, used to be of frequent occurrence; but they are now seldom or never heard of. This decrease of crime is attributed partly to the spread of education and the increased intelligence of the people, and partly to the improvement in their general condition. It is stated that the lower classes at the present time are as intelligent and well informed as were the middle classes 20 or 30 years ago. The greater part of the offences at the present time are committed by about a dozen young fellows, inhabitants of the town, between the ages of 12 and 18, whose education, &c., has in most instances been neglected, and many of whose parents have but an indifferent character themselves.

Causes affecting Crime at Dysart independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is a good deal of whisky-drinking, but it is seldom carried far enough to produce intoxication; and there is, in fact, much less intoxication than formerly. There is a temperance society at Dysart, but it has fallen off.

State of the Police.—There is no regular police; but there are some special constables among the inhabitants, who act willingly when called upon, and there is a general feeling in support of the laws. It is believed that very few offences escape detection.

Administration of Justice.—The Police Act has not been adopted here; and a summary power of trial for petty offences is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Much improved, and now good. There is but little pauperism, and there are not more than about six beggars. The chief occupation of the people is hand-loom weaving and flax-dressing. Wages are from 9*s.* to 15*s.* a-week. There is a savings' bank, the deposits in which amount to 800*l.* or 900*l.*, and are on the increase.

Education.—Much improved, and now general. It is believed that very few children are growing up without learning reading, writing, and arithmetic, and that most of the adults are able to read easily. It is also stated that there is, in fact, a good deal of reading among the latter, consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. "Chambers' Journal," particularly, is very generally read. There is a parish library for the poorer classes, supported partly by the subscriptions of members and partly by donations. There is no mechanics' institution at Dysart, but there is a provision for giving popular lectures occasionally.

There is a want of a provision for popular amusements.

KIRKALDY AND PATHHEAD, FIFESHIRE.

Joint population about 12,000.

(Visited 28th October 1836.)

Kirkaldy and Pathhead.

There are two prisons here, viz., a burgh prison in Kirkaldy, and a lock-up house (a new and tolerably good building) in Pathhead. Kirkaldy and Pathhead are not of sufficient size to make two prisons necessary for them; but Pathhead, although really a suburb of Kirkaldy, is considered to belong to Dysart, being in the same parish with it; and this artificial junction is the cause of its having a separate prison from Kirkaldy.

The prison of Kirkaldy is the best in Fifeshire. This is saying but little; but it is, in fact, a good prison when compared with those of most other places. Its construction, however, is far from perfect, for communication can easily be kept up between some of the cells. The prison forms part of the town-house, which was built within the last 10 years, and which stands in the middle of the town, on one side of the main street. There are altogether 12 cells, viz., six for criminals and six for debtors; and there is an airing-yard. The dimensions are as follow :—

Kirkaldy and Pathhead.

Two of the cells are rather damp, and four of them are cold, not having any fire-place, or any means of warming them. With these exceptions the cells are dry and warm, and I found them all quite clean. They are all tolerably well ventilated. The prison, too, appears to be tolerably secure, the cells being built entirely of stone, and in a substantial manner, and none of the windows being accessible to the public. As the keeper does not reside on the spot, however, there must necessarily be some degree of insecurity.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of the Prisoners, &c.—There was not a single prisoner at the time of my visit; and the average number is not more than three. The medical gentleman who usually attends the prison (gratuitously) was out of town at the time of my visit; but, from his son, I learned that the prisoners in general enjoy good health, and that, upon the whole, their health is usually better when they leave prison than when they enter it. There has been no death and no epidemic disease since the prison was built. The most common complaint is low fever.

Food.—There are no fixed rations; but the prisoners generally receive each a pennyworth of bread and some coffee for breakfast, a pennyworth of bread and a pint of broth for dinner, and a pennyworth of bread and some tea in the evening. This diet is too luxurious for a prison, and it will probably soon be altered.—Debtors receive a money allowance varying from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day.

Bedding.—A straw mattress, two double blankets, and a rug. In winter an additional blanket is often allowed.

Discipline.—But little discipline exists at present. The prisoners are generally kept in separate cells; but they are often so placed that they can talk to one another. There is no labour or instruction. The conduct of the prisoners is reported to be generally tolerably good. No punishments are in use.

Female Prisoners.—There is not any female officer; and the females are treated in every way like the males.

Debtors.—The number of debtors is becoming smaller every year. The average, during the last year, was only one quarter.—It would be well to use some of the rooms, hitherto reserved for debtors, as cells for criminals.

The debtors provide their own bedding, and are allowed to receive additional supplies of food from without, and to receive visits from their friends.

Miscellaneous.—There is no difference in the treatment of the tried and untried prisoners. Visits are allowed, at the discretion of the gaoler; and he inspects all letters. Smoking tobacco is permitted.

Officers.—The only officer is the keeper, who appears to be tolerably well qualified for the management of a small prison. There is no regularly-appointed surgeon; but a medical gentleman of the town kindly acts as surgeon gratuitously. There is no chaplain.

Fees.—None of any kind.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonments, but not according to the prescribed form; and the town-chamberlain keeps an account of expenses. The following is an abstract of the disbursements for the year ending 10th of October 1836:—

| | | | | | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminal prisoners | | | | | 23 | 6 | 11 |
| Furniture and bedding | | | | | 10 | 17 | 6 |
| Washing bed linen | | | | | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| Repairs | | | | | 0 | 9 | 6 |
| Alterations and additions | | | | | 11 | 15 | 4½ |
| Keepers' salary | Cash | 23 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | Clothes | 8 | 8 | 0 | | | |
| | | | | | 31 | 8 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors | | | | | £78 | 3 | 3½ |

Of this sum 1*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* (the cost of aliment before trial) was paid by the county; and the remainder, 76*l.* 9*s.* 8½*d.*, was paid by the burgh.

Average number of prisoners during the year:—Criminals, 2¾; debtors, ¼.—Total, 3. Average cost of each prisoner, about 20*l.*

---

State of Crime at Kirkaldy.—There appears to be very little crime at Kirkaldy. Those who do commit offences are reported to be few in number, of various ages, often the children of bad or at least negligent parents, inferior to persons of the same class of life in intelligence and education, and more given than they to habits of intoxication.

BURNTISLAND, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 2,200.

(Visited 29th October 1836.)

Burntisland.

The prison of this town is very small and very old, and, as usual, forms part of the town-house. Till lately there was only one cell, but this cell has now been divided into two, the dimensions of which are as follows:—

| | Length. | Breadth. | Height. | Cubical content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Debtors' cell | 10½ ft. | 8½ ft. | 9 ft. | 800 ft. |
| Criminals' cell | 7½ | 8 ft. 9 in. | 9 | 600 |

There is no airing-yard.

Both the cells are dry, and I found them both clean. The debtor's cell is also tolerably warm and tolerably well ventilated, but the other cell is cold (it has no fire-place) and is ill ventilated. The prison is only moderately secure there being no resident keeper, and the windows being accessible to the public, though in a less degree than formerly. The last escape happened nine years ago, and was on the part of a debtor who overpowered the gaoler; the town had of course to pay the amount of the prisoner's debt, which was more than 50*l.*

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of the Prisoners.—There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and there seldom is one. During the year just ended, which is about an average year, the total number of prisoners was eight, viz. six men and two women (all confined for petty offences), and the total amount of imprisonment was equal to two months only for one person. It is difficult to say how far the health of the prisoners is affected by the imprisonment, owing to the shortness of the periods; the closeness and coldness of the criminals' cell, however, must tend to excite illness. Bowel complaints are the most common diseases. There has been no death for many years.

Food.—A money allowance of 4*d.* a-day. The burgh pays 6*d.* a-day for each prisoner, but 2*d.* of this go to the gaoler. Debtors receive a money allowance of 1*s.* 4*d.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* a-day, out of which they have to pay 4*d.* to the gaoler.

Bedding.—A mattress and a double blanket. Clothing is not supplied.

Discipline.—None. There is no labour or instruction, and no means of preventing communication from without. The usual offence is obtaining a supply of whisky, (which is drawn up between the bars of the window,) and then getting drunk. The offender is sometimes punished by an increase of a day or two in the length of his imprisonment.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made between the treatment of females and males.

Debtors.—There is very seldom a debtor in the prison; when there is one he is allowed to see his friends freely and to receive additional supplies of food from without; he is also allowed the use of the prison bedding—an unusual privilege.

Officers.—The gaoler appears to be tolerably well qualified for his office. There is no regularly-appointed surgeon, but a medical man is sent for at the expense of the burgh when required. There is no chaplain; but, when there is a prisoner, one of the ministers of the parish is kind enough to visit him.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonments, and the town clerk an account of expenses. The following shows the disbursements for the year ending 15th October 1836:—

| | | | | | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment | | | | | 0 | 16 | 6 |
| Fuel | | | | | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| Straw | | | | | 0 | 1 | 6 |
| Keeper's salary | Cash | 5 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | Fees | 0 | 8 | 4 | | | |
| | | | | | 5 | 8 | 4 |
| | | | | | £6 | 9 | 10 |

Average number of prisoners during the year, $\frac{1}{6}$th.

State of Crime at Burntisland.—There is a good deal of petty crime here, consisting chiefly of assaults and other disturbances of the peace, petty thefts, and offences against the game laws. The assaults and breaches of the peace are chiefly committed by six or eight young men from 15 to 25 years of age; the poaching by two or three men of different ages, and the petty thefts by about a dozen lads from 6 to 10 years old. Most of these offenders are inhabitants of the town. Almost all the breaches of the peace arise from drunkenness.

Causes affecting Crime at Burntisland independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal, and about as much as formerly. There is no temperance society.

State of the Police.—There is no regular burgh police, but one of the county constables resides here; his charge however is chiefly confined to vagrants.

Administration of Justice.—A power of trying summarily for petty offences is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Tolerably good upon the whole, though somewhat fallen off, owing to the failure of the herring-fishing in this neighbourhood of late years. There is a good deal of pauperism, but there are very few beggars. The chief occupation is ship-building and distilling. A shipwright earns about 18*s.* a-week; a day-labourer, from 10*s.* to 12*s.*

Education.—Extended, and now general. It is believed that very few children are growing up without receiving some amount of education. All have an opportunity of obtaining education gratis. Most of the adult population are thought to be able to read with more or less ease, but there is not much reading among them. There is no library for the working classes.

Popular Amusements.—Golf and quoits are a good deal played at, there being public grounds for the purpose.

KINGHORN, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 1,500.

(Visited 29th October 1836.)

The town-house, of which this prison forms part, is a new building; having been erected within the last 10 years. It stands within the town on the eastern side, and is built on a sandstone rock. There are only two cells, and these were intended chiefly for police purposes. They are upon the basement floor, and are rather damp, though each of them is warmed by a stove. They are too indifferently ventilated, but I found them tolerably clean. The dimensions are as follows:—

| Cells. | Length. ft. in. | Breadth. ft. | Height. ft. | Cubical Content. ft. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 . . . . . | 13 3 | 9 | 9 | 1,050 |
| 1 . . . . . | 14 | 9 | 10 | 1,250 |

There is an airing yard of moderate size.

The cells are substantially built, (the floors and ceilings being of stone,) and the place appears to be secure. There has hitherto been no escape.

State of the Prisoners.—There was only one prisoner at the time of my visit, and there have been only three (each remaining on the average only four days) during the whole of the last year. The prisoner whom I found in confinement (a man) was lying in bed, on the plea of illness, but his illness was supposed to be feigned in the hope of obtaining an order for liberation. Possibly, however, this suspicion had no grounds. A medical man had been sent for to examine him; but this gentleman lives at some distance from Kinghorn, and he did not arrive before I left the town. I was told the prisoners generally enjoy good health. No death has taken place since the prison was erected.

Food.—The allowance is two penny worth of bread and two bottles of small beer, or four penny worth of bread, and no beer, at the option of the prisoner. Additional supplies from without are permitted. There has been only one debtor since the prison was opened; and he did not petition for aliment.

Bedding.—A hammock, a tow mattress, a double blanket, and a rug.—Clothing is not supplied.

Discipline.—None; there being no labour or instruction. The conduct of the prisoners, however, is reported to be generally good. No punishments have as yet been used.

Female Prisoners.—These are generally looked after by the gaoler's wife, who, indeed, has had the principal charge of all the prisoners. Her husband, the regular keeper, died lately; but as concerns the gaol his loss does not appear to be severely felt. Arrangements, however, are making to provide a successor.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits are allowed on an order from a magistrate. Letters are inspected. Smoking tobacco is allowed. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—As already mentioned, the keeper died lately, and his place has not yet been filled. When there is a keeper he resides in the prison. There is no regularly appointed surgeon; but a medical gentleman is sent for at the expense of the burgh when required. There is no chaplain, but one of the ministers of the parish kindly attends when any one is in prison.

Accounts.—There is a register of imprisonments, and an account of disbursements. The following shows the expenditure for the last year, which was about an average year.

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment . . . . . . . . . . . . . . | 0 | 4 | 4 |
| Fuel. . . . . . . . . . . . . . . | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Keeper's salary . . . . . . . . . . . | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Total . . . . | 2 | 8 | 10 |

Average number of prisoners, $\frac{1}{30}$.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

---

State of Crime at Kinghorn.—There are some petty thefts, many of which escape detection; and there are some petty disturbances of the peace; but, upon the whole, the amount of crime is small, and much less than it was 30 years ago. Breaches of the peace, particularly, have decreased in number. Public order at Kinghorn has been much promoted by the introduction of steam-navigation; for, before its time, people used often to be detained two or three days there, unable to cross the Firth; and many of these employed such part of their time as they could spare from the whisky-shop in committing breaches of the peace.

Almost all the present offences are committed by nine persons who live in the neighbourhood, who are supposed to maintain themselves by their thefts. Very few of the offenders are inhabitants of the town.

Causes affecting Crime at Kinghorn, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, though less than formerly. There is a temperance society, containing about 100 members.

State of the Police.—There is, at present, no paid and responsible police; but the deficiency is supplied, to some extent, by special constables, among the inhabitants.

Condition of the People.—Improved, and now good. There is but little pauperism, and there is only one beggar. The chief occupation is flax-spinning, at which, at the present time, a man earns about 20*s.* a-week, even when working only four days and idling away the other two. Women earn about 7*s.* a-week. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—In a good state. A public school has lately been opened, which appears to be much superior to schools of the usual caste, the course of instruction given extending to chemistry and other branches of knowledge which are seldom cultivated. The circumstances under which this school was built show the deep interest which is to be found, even in the humbler classes of Scotland, in the progress of education. Most of the work was executed by the artizans, in the evenings, after their usual labour was over; and some of these gave not only their time but their money. Among these worthy and generous men the town blacksmith was distinguished. Besides the labour of his own hands, he contributed materials to the value of 20*l.*; and, not content with this, gave 10*l.* more in money.—There are no children growing up without education at Kinghorn. Most of the adults are able to read easily; and they are a good deal given to reading. There are two libraries for the working classes, both of which are supported by the subscriptions of the members.

There is not, at present, any provision for popular amusements.

INVERKEITHING, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 2,500; or, including the whole parish, about 3,500.

(Visited 18th November 1836.)

Inverkeithing.

The prison of Inverkeithing forms part of the town-house, which was built in the year 1770. There are three rooms, including a small one lately built for drunken people disturbing the peace in the night. The dimensions of these rooms are as follow:—

| | Length. | | Breadth. | | Height. | | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | ft. | in. | ft. | in. | ft. | in. | ft. |
| Debtors' room . . | 15 | 4 | 9 | 8 | 9 | 3 | 1200 |
| Criminals' room . . | 14 | 6 | 7 | 6 | 8 | 3 | 900 |
| Lock-up room . . | 9 | 0 | 6 | 0 | 8 | 0 | 430 |

There is no airing-yard.

The debtors' room, which is also used for criminals, when, as generally happens, there is no debtor in prison, has a fire-place; but there is no protection against the room catching fire; and, as the floor is of wood, and the room a good way removed from that part of the building in which the gaoler lives, there is considerable danger of an accident of this kind. Some time ago, indeed, such an event was very near occurring; for, an unruly fellow having been put into this room, he tore down the window-frame and flung it upon the fire. Fortunately the gaoler happened to come in before the wood, which was soon in a blaze, and which was too large for the fire-place, had fallen on to the floor, otherwise the consequences might have been very serious. Since that time the magistrates have not allowed a fire to be lighted, unless they felt satisfied that the person in confinement was orderly and careful. Neither of the other cells has a fire-place or other means of artificial warmth. One of them has a small window, but it is unglazed; while the other (the lock-up cell) has no window at all; a little hole over the door being the only passage for the light and air. All the rooms are dry; but I found them rather dirty. From the closeness of the air in the debtors' room it was evident that the window had not been opened for a considerable time.

The prison is insecure. The last instance of escape happened about four years ago, and was on the part of a tinker or gipsy. He was first put into the criminals' cell, and had nearly made his way through the wall, by means of a knife which had been handed in to him through the window, when he was detected. For greater security he was then removed into the debtors' room, but he had not remained there long when he succeeded in escaping.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and the average number of prisoners is less than one. During the last year, indeed, the average was not more than about 1-15th.

Health.—Generally good. There has been no death for many years. When a prisoner is unwell, the complaint is usually disorder of the bowels.

Food.—Each prisoner is supplied with bread and beer, equal in value either to 6*d.* a-day if he be an adult, or to 1½*d.* if he be a child. The usual allowance to debtors is 1*s.* a-day, paid in money. Additional supplies from without are permitted both to criminals and debtors.

Bedding.—A straw mattress and a double blanket, except in the lock-up cell, where there is loose straw instead of the mattress.

Discipline.—None. There is neither work nor separation. The gaoler, however, sometimes teaches young prisoners. The usual prison offences are making noises, calling to people in the street, and getting whisky through the windows. The ordinary punishment is putting the prisoner in irons.

Female Prisoners.—When there is a female prisoner, the gaoler's wife generally looks after her, although there is no regulation to that effect. If there are male and female prisoners at the same time, the latter are sometimes put into the town-hall. The two sexes are never mixed.

Debtors.—There has been no debtor for two years. Debtors provide their own bedding and clothing, and they are allowed to receive visits from their friends freely.

Miscellaneous.—There is no difference between tried and untried prisoners. Visits are freely permitted. Letters are inspected. Smoking tobacco is formally allowed to debtors, but not to criminals; but it is impossible to prevent any of the prisoners from smoking, if their associates choose to supply them with pipes and tobacco from without.

Inverkeithing.

Officers.—The gaoler appears to be much better qualified for his situation than could reasonably be expected, seeing that his salary is only 15*l.* a-year, in addition to a small house The gaoler combines the two dissimilar occupations of gaoler and bookseller, and he is also the police officer of the town.

There is no regularly appointed surgeon, but a medical man is sent for, at the expense of the burgh, when required.

Fees.—The gaoler receives 6*d.* in the pound, from the creditor, for any debt not exceeding 5*l.*; and a per centage, according to a decreasing scale, on all debts above that sum. No fees have been demanded of debtors themselves for a long time, although a claim to such fees is believed to exist.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonment, and the town treasurer an account of disbursement.

---

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the burgh magistrates.

State of Crime at Inverkeithing.—There is not much crime at this place, and there is less than formerly. The most common offences at the present time are disturbances in the streets and petty thefts; which are chiefly committed by between 6 and 12 persons, of various ages, who are inhabitants of the town. The disturbances of the peace almost always proceed from drunkenness.

Causes affecting Crime at Inverkeithing, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal on Saturday evening, when wages are paid, although less, upon the whole, than formerly. There is a temperance society, but it does not flourish.

State of the Police.—There is only one officer on constant duty, viz. the gaoler; six others, however, have lately been engaged to act when called upon. The gaoler complains of the difficulty of sending to any of these when he wants their assistance, and of a general unwillingness in the inhabitants to help him, owing, it is thought, to a fear of bringing upon themselves the ill-will of the offending parties. Some offences, particularly that of robbing gardens, escape detection.

Administration of Justice.—A power of summary trial for small offences is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Tolerably good, and about the same as it has been for the last 20 or 30 years. The chief occupations are fishing, weaving, and distilling. There are generally about 70 persons on the poor-roll in the parish, and there are about 12 old people who go round the town once a-week to beg. There are also some vagrant beggars. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—Improved, and now considered to be very good, compared with the state of education at most other places. It is said that very few children are growing up without learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is believed that most of the adults are able to read easily, and it is stated that there is, in fact, a good deal of reading among them, particularly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There is a library for the working classes, supported chiefly by the subscriptions of the members.

There are very few popular amusements.

DUNFERMLINE, FIFESHIRE.

Population about 13,000; or, including a district of four miles round, 18,000 or 20,000.

(Visited from the 19th to the 22d November 1836.)

Dunfermline.

About two years ago, in consequence of repeated instances of escape from this prison, application was made by the Lord Advocate to the Court of Justiciary to compel the burgh to render the prison more secure, and an architect (Mr. Angus) was instructed to visit the place and report upon it. The following is Mr. Angus's description of the prison; slightly modified, however, in consequence of the alterations that have since taken place. "The gaol is situated in the third story, immediately over the town-house, and consists of six apartments, with a passage or lobby communicating with the cells, and used as an airing gallery, common to criminals and debtors of different ages and sex. The access to the gaol is by a narrow winding dark stair, constructed within the tower, at the east end of the building, at the head of which there is a door, through the wall of the tower, which opens into a small lobby, railed off from the common passage with an open railing. The debtors' room is at the extreme end of the common passage, and measures 18½ feet by 12½ feet, having four windows and a fire-place. On the south side of the passage there are four criminal cells, three of which are each 12½ feet long by 10 feet 3 inches, 10 feet 6 inches, and 7 feet 9 inches wide, respectively; the fourth is 10 feet 2 inches by 9 feet, or thereby. This is the only cell provided with a fire-place. The sixth apartment is occupied with water-closet and washing-trough. All the ceilings are 9½ feet high, or thereby. The construction of the division-walls of the cells is exceedingly imperfect; that between the debtors' room and the first criminal cell is of timber standards, lath and plaster. The division-walls of the other cells are of deal-boarding, having thin plates of sheet-iron in the centre. The wall at the doors of the cells is constructed in a similar manner. Some of the doors are of double deal, having thin sheet-iron plates; others are of single deal only. The floors of all the apartments and common passage are laid with thin brick pavement, resting on the timber joisting which forms the ceiling of the town-hall, &c. The ceilings of the cells and passages are formed of lath and plaster fixed to the roof timbers. There are four windows in the passage, each five feet by three feet six inches, provided with vertical iron-stanchels and a cross-bar. These windows, as well as those in the debtors' room, not only line but also command a view of the principal streets. The cell-windows overlook a back court in which several small dwelling-houses are built, their roofs being in juxtaposition with the back wall of the gaol."[*]

In addition to the foregoing there is a cell called the black hole, and used either for refractory prisoners or for drunkards. It is partly below ground. The average length of this cell is about 15 feet, the breadth about 11 feet 9 inches, and the average height about 6 feet.

The application to the Court of Justiciary ended in the magistrates of Dunfermline being empowered to send such prisoners as they might deem likely to try to break out of gaol to one of the neighbouring prisons; the want of funds at Dunfermline being, I believe, considered a sufficient reason for not requiring them to do more than make a few repairs and trifling alterations in their own gaol, and to dismiss the gaoler, who appears to have been culpably negligent.

During the three months previous to the foregoing application two prisoners had escaped three separate times; and counting each person every time he escaped, 12 prisoners got away in this time.

The cells are dry, but ill ventilated, and I found them dirty.

State of the Prisoners.—The number at the time of my visit was seven, viz., five males and two females. This is rather more than the average number, which is about five. Some of the prisoners were dirty; and I found it was left very much to the prisoners themselves to wash as often or as seldom as they chose.[†]

Health.—Good. There has been no death for several years. The most common complaints are disorders of the bowels, and these are chiefly among new comers. What illness does occur is believed to proceed partly from the want of exercise.

Food.—Convicted prisoners receive 4*d.* per day, sometimes paid wholly in bread, and sometimes partly in bread and partly in money. The untried get 6*d.* per day, paid in the same way.[‡] The usual allowance to debtors is 7*d.*, also paid in money. Additional supplies from without are permitted to all prisoners.

Bedding.—A straw mattress and pillow and two blankets. The bedding was in a dirty state.—Clothing is not supplied.

Discipline.—None, there being neither labour nor separation. The usual prison offences are making noises, quarrelling, calling to people in the street, wanton mischief, and getting supplies of whisky through the windows.[§] The ordinary punishments are, keeping back part of the food, and putting the offender in irons or in the cell for the refractory. At the time of my visit there was a woman in this cell, whose conduct had been quite outrageous. She had forced her way out of her own cell into the passage already mentioned, and had there set about breaking the windows, which she had done to such an extent, that it cost about 30*s.* to repair them. The reason she gave for her violent conduct was, that she was not allowed the use of the passage which is common to the other prisoners. There was ample ground for this restriction, for the other prisoners were males; and about two years ago this same woman (who was then in confinement for another offence) was got with child by one of the male prisoners.[||]

I received no complaint of unkind treatment except from the woman just mentioned, and she complained merely of being put into the cell for the refractory.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer; and the cell of the female prisoners is so placed as not to admit of their being entirely separated from the males.

Debtors.—There was no debtor at the time of my visit, and the average number is less than one. The debtors provide their own bedding and clothing. Visits from friends are freely allowed.

Miscellaneous.—Untried prisoners receive 2*d.* a-day more than convicted prisoners; but they are more restricted as respects visits; visits not being allowed to them except on an order from the committing magistrate or sheriff; whereas visits to other prisoners are allowed [*] Venetian blinds have now been put up before all the windows, so that the prisoners have no longer a view of the street, &c.—(7th January 1837.

---

[†] This is no longer the case, the prisoners being now compelled to wash themselves every day.

[‡] No portion is any longer paid in money, and a plain regular diet has been introduced.—(7th January 1837.)

[§] It would be difficult to obtain such supplies now, in consequence of the venetian blinds already mentioned.

[||] The following extract, from a letter of the Provost of Dunfermline, shows what was the subsequent conduct of this woman.

"I take the opportunity of mentioning a very serious circumstance that took place in the gaol last Saturday night. You will, no doubt, recollect a woman of the name of ———, who, a few days before your visit to the town, had been removed from a common cell to the 'black hole,' for having wantonly broken several panes of glass. Having, subsequently, promised better behaviour, she was removed to her old quarters; and in consideration of the coldness of the weather was allowed a fire during the day. About the middle of last week I received a petition from her, to be indulged, on Hansel Monday (the first Monday of the year O. S.), with some porter and ale. This request I, of course, at once rejected, at which she was very angry, and she told the gaoler that she would have her revenge; and, it would appear, that she formed the resolution of setting fire to the gaol, telling the prisoners that it would be a good opportunity for them to escape. Accordingly, on Saturday, after being locked up for the night, she proceeded to carry her diabolical resolution into effect, by casting some embers of her fire, through a small hole in her cell, into the passage amongst some straw, that had been left there to be put into one of the beds. About half an hour after midnight, the superintendent of police and the gaoler happening to be in the street, discovered a light in the gaol windows, and immediately proceeded to examine the cause, when they found the lobby of the gaol quite full of smoke, and the straw referred to, nearly consumed. However, they succeeded in getting the fire under before any serious injury was done; and being satisfied that Mrs. ——— was the guilty person, they immediately removed her to the 'black hole,' where she still lies.—I inquired into the circumstances, at the first opportunity, along with one of the bailies and the town-clerk, and I am quite satisfied that none of the other prisoners are at all to blame; neither does it appear that they had any idea that Mrs. ——— would really carry her threat into execution. Indeed, the risk they all ran was great, for they were all locked up in their cells, and most of them were asleep, so that if the fire had not been promptly discovered, they must have perished."—(21st January 1837.)

at the discretion of the gaoler. Letters are generally inspected. Smoking tobacco is allowed. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their homes, but assistance is sometimes rendered by private charity. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—The only officer is the gaoler, who appears to be active and intelligent; the dirty state of some parts of the prison, however, was discreditable to him. There is no regular surgeon. When a prisoner is ill the gaoler applies to the provost, who generally sends his own medical man, and if a charge is made he pays it himself. There is no chaplain; but service is sometimes performed on Sunday by one of the ministers of the town.

Fees.—This is the only prison I have yet met with (except the one in Shetland) in which fees are demanded of criminal prisoners. Here, before he is liberated, a criminal prisoner has to pay 1*s.* if he is a county prisoner, and 6*d.* if a burgh prisoner. Debtors have to pay a fee, varying from 2*s.* to 5*s.*, if their debt is upwards of 5*l.*, but nothing if it is less.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonments, not, however, with all the columns required by Sir William Rae's Act. The town treasurer keeps an account of disbursements. The following shows the expenditure for the year ending 12th October 1836 (about two-thirds of an average year):—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminals . . . | 20 | 15 | 5 |
| Furniture and bedding . . . | 0 | 10 | 8½ |
| Gas . . . . . . | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| Repairs . . . . . | 7 | 9 | 7 |
| Keeper's salary . . . . | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Woman for cleaning . . . | 0 | 14 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors, &c. . . | 50 | 19 | 8½ |

Of this sum, 1*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* (the cost of the aliment of county prisoners before trial) was paid by the county, and the remainder (49*l.* 3*s.* 2½*d.*) by the burgh. The year before last, however, the sum paid by the county for aliment was more than 40*l.*, and the average may be stated at about 20*l.*

The average number of prisoners last year was 4¼: namely, 3½ criminals, and ¾ debtor. The average yearly cost of each criminal prisoner is about 12*l.*

General Observation.—There is no doubt that most of the prisoners, especially the younger ones, leave the place worse than they entered it; and, as most of them can care but little about being put into a gaol where they are well fed, have no work to do, and are allowed to pass their time in each other's society, the balance of good obtained must be very small.

---

State of Crime at Dunfermline.—There is not much serious crime, and most of the serious offences which do take place are committed by strangers. Upon the whole there is less crime than there was formerly, notwithstanding the increase in population. The most common offences are drunken brawls, assaults, and petty thefts; and these are mostly committed by about 50 persons between the ages of 12 and 30. Of these about 20 are addicted to pilfering; the other 30 committing assaults and other disturbances of the peace, but not stealing. Of the 20 who are in the habit of stealing, 12 are boys from the age of 12 to 17, who form a gang, every member of which has been convicted of at least one theft, and some of three or four. Several of these boys are the sons of widows, but others are the children of drunken parents. There is no female public prostitution at Dunfermline. Drunkenness, and the desire of obtaining the means of indulging in drinking, are the exciting causes of most of the offences that are committed. There is a custom in the police court of Dunfermline which is well worthy of general imitation. An entry is always made, showing whether or not the person was in the state of intoxication or of partial intoxication at the time he committed his offence. From an abstract of this account for the year ending 31st of October 1836, it appears that of 29 persons convicted of theft, fraud, or imposition during that time, 13 were at least partially drunk when they committed the offence; and that of 173 persons convicted of assaults, fighting in the public street, or other breaches of the peace, no fewer than 153 were drunk at the time.—As a class the offenders are found to be inferior to others in the same rank of life in education and intelligence. Most of them are inhabitants of the town.

Causes affecting Crime at Dunfermline independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal, though not more, it is believed, than in most other manufacturing towns. There is much less drunkenness than formerly among the upper classes, and certainly not more among the lower classes. There is a temperance society, and it is believed to have done much good.

State of the Police.—Much improved, though still quite insufficient in extent. There is indeed only one officer, who is fully engaged, but he discharges his duties efficiently.

Administration of Justice.—Some inconvenience arises from the circumstance that the sheriff-substitute lives in the country, at a distance of seven miles from Dunfermline.

Condition of the People.—Good, and better than formerly. The poor nevertheless cost the parish about 1,000*l.* a-year, but there are very few beggars. The chief occupation of the people is weaving; at which a man will earn from 10*s.* to 15*s.* a-week, and a boy or girl from 6*s.* to 10*s.* There is a savings' bank, and the deposits at present amount to more than 4,000*l.*, and are on the increase. The number of depositors is between 400 and 500.

Education.—Good, and about the same as formerly, except that two infant schools have lately been opened. It is believed that very few children are growing up without instruction, and that most of them are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is believed that most of the adult population are able to read easily and to write also, and they are represented as being generally well informed. There are two libraries for the working classes, and there are several other libraries connected with the churches and chapels; and it is stated that, in point of fact, there is a good deal of reading in the place. There is a mechanics' institution, (called the Scientific Institution,) and it is represented as being in a flourishing state.

There are but few popular amusements: a regular provision for them is much wanted.

FIFESHIRE.

Population about 133,000.

Fifeshire.

Prisons existing at present, 19.—Most of these prisons are very old and very bad, and of the few that are of recent erection, that of Kirkaldy alone is on even a moderately good construction. (See the separate Reports.)

Additional Prisons required.—Four small ones, or lock-up houses; namely, one at each of the following places:—

Leven, population about 1,200, or, including a district five miles round, about 5,000.

Leslie, population about 800, or, including a district five miles round (containing many spinning-mills), about 5,000.

Lochgally, population about 400, or, including a district five miles round (containing many coal-mines), about 3,000.

Newport, containing but a small population, but requiring a prison, because it is a ferry-town.

Many of the present prisons should be replaced by new ones, although some might be dispensed with altogether.

State of Crime in Fifeshire.

There is but little crime at present in Fifeshire, and much less than formerly. The most common offences at this time are assaults and other disturbances of the peace, and petty thefts. These offences are committed chiefly by young persons between the age of 12 and 30, most of whom are inhabitants of the county. It is observed that there are but few regular farm-servants among the offenders. The most serious offences are committed by vagrants and other strangers. Almost all the assaults arise from drunkenness; and this, including the desire to obtain the means of indulging in drunkenness, is the cause of many of the thefts. Such of the parents of the criminals as are known are most of them of bad character, or are, at least, neglectful of their children. In the western district it was stated that many of the young thieves are orphans, and that, as a class, the criminals there are inferior to others in education and intelligence. Among the offences that have become less common than formerly are housebreaking, forgery, and child-murder. On the other hand, there have been some violent disturbances at the elections lately, which did not occur formerly. It is believed, however, that the feeling which gave rise to these disturbances is subsiding.

The Law Commissioners were so much struck with the paucity of crime in Fifeshire, that they applied to the sheriff for information on the subject, and this led to an application to the sheriff-substitute of the eastern division (Mr. Jameson), for an account of the preventive police, which had been organized under his direction. This police was established at the time of the cholera, and, in the first instance, extended to the Cupar district only. Its object was to rid the place of vagrants, in order to prevent the introduction of the cholera, and it worked so efficiently that between 300 and 400 vagrants were either removed or prevented from entering in the course of one month. The inhabitants of the other parts of the country, desirous of partaking in the advantages of these arrangements, applied to Mr. Jameson for his assistance, and, at their request, he organized a preventive police for the whole county; and this has continued in operation ever since. There are, in all, about 20 men, including the superintendent, and the total cost is rather more than 600*l.* a-year, which sum is paid out of the county-rate. Mr. Jameson considers the present force insufficient for the full development of his plan, but it has been calculated that even on its present footing the police effects a saving to the country of as much as 10,000*l.* a-year, estimating the cost of each vagrant, in his alternate capacity of a beggar and a thief, at 1*s.* a-day only. In confirmation of the general belief, that much of the crime that is committed is by vagrants, it may be stated that with every diminution of the number of vagrants in Fifeshire, there has been a reduction in the amount of crime. Whatever benefits may have accrued from the adoption of an organized police in a single county, it may reasonably be anticipated that still greater benefits would be derived from a general organization, extending through the whole country, and directed not only to the suppression of vagrancy, but to the detection and prevention of crime.

Causes affecting Crime in Fifeshire, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal, and about as much as formerly.

State of the Police.—There is an efficient police for the prevention of vagrancy, but there is no organized or efficient police for the detection of crime. It is believed, however, that few offences are committed with impunity.

Administration of Justice.—Generally uniform and efficient, being left chiefly in the hands of the sheriff-substitute.

Condition of the People.—Very good, and much better than formerly. The Russell flax-mills, near Cupar, like many other large country mills in Fifeshire and elsewhere, deserve honourable mention for the attention paid to the education, comforts, and happiness of the work-people. The sheriff-substitute told me that there is seldom any offence among the work-people belonging to these mills. The inhabitants of Fifeshire are chiefly engaged in manufactures (spinning, weaving, &c.), and in agriculture.

Education.—More generally diffused than formerly; but it is thought that there are still many among the agricultural population who are unable to read easily, and many who cannot write. Upon the whole, however, there appears to be a good deal of reading among the working classes of Fifeshire, consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals, and of general literature. The working classes have several libraries in different parts of the county, and at Cupar they have a public news-room.

Public Amusements.—There are few public amusements in Fifeshire.

QUEENSFERRY, LINLITHGOWSHIRE.

Population (including the whole of the Parliamentary Burgh), about 1,100.

(Visited 18th November 1836.)

Queensferry.

This prison (which is now used as a lock-up house only) consists of a single room, which is on the ground floor of the town-house, a very old building. The room is 15 feet long, 14 feet wide, and 6 feet 9 inches high. There is a fire-place in it, but no window; a slit in the door furnishing the only means either of light or ventilation. The room is tolerably dry (the town-house is built on sand), but cold. I found it moderately clean.

The place is insecure, but, as persons are seldom put into it who are likely to make a determined effort at escape, instances of escape are not common. The last that occurred was about four years ago, when two masons made their way through the back of the chimney, assisted by tools furnished them through the slit of the door.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and there had not been one during the last month. I was informed that, on an average, about 20 persons are put in during the year, most of them for being drunk in the streets, and disturbing the peace of the town. Many of the prisoners are vagrants. A common mode of punishing these vagrants (although of very doubtful legality) is to withhold water from them in the morning after their imprisonment, when the excessive drinking of the previous night has been succeeded by burning thirst. Loose straw is allowed as bedding.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Crime at Queensferry.

There is but little crime here. The provost, who has lived 30 years in the place, does not remember a single instance of housebreaking. The most common offence is rioting, caused by drunkenness. Many of the disturbances are committed by vagrants, as already stated, but the greatest portion are committed by a party of inhabitants, between 20 and 30 in number (including some females), and of various ages.

Causes affecting Crime at Queensferry, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal, and apparently more than formerly among the lower class (especially among the female portion), but less among the middle and upper classes. There was a Temperance Society, but it has died away.

State of the Police.—There is no officer on constant duty, but there are six special constables (chosen once a-year) and a town-officer, who act when called upon.

Condition of the People.—Indifferent. The herring-fishing has fallen off of late years, and some soap-works which used to be carried on here have been removed to other places. There is said to be an unwillingness on the part of the fishermen to do any work not immediately connected with their own pursuits, even when it is impossible for them to go out to fish. This makes a failure in the fishing more severe in its consequences than would otherwise be the case. Similar observations have been made at other places.—There are generally about 15 persons on the poor-roll. There are very few resident beggars; but there are many vagrants, though not so many as formerly.—A labourer gets 9*s.* or 10*s.* a-week.—There is no savings' bank, but there is a Friendly Society.

Education.—General, and somewhat improved in quality. All the inhabitants have an opportunity of obtaining some kind of education for their children, and it is believed that most of the children are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is thought that most of the adult population are able to read, but it is not known with what degree of ease; and there is not, in fact, much reading among them. There are two libraries in the town, the subscription to which is 6*s.* a-year. They are used chiefly by the middle classes.

There are very few popular amusements.

ALLOA, CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

Population about 5,000, or, including a district three miles round, about 8,000.

(Visited 23d November 1836.)

Alloa.

As Alloa is the residence of a sheriff-substitute, it is very desirable that there should be a good prison in it, although a small one would suffice. The present gaol, however, is a very bad one. It belongs to the Earl of Mar, who holds it as the superior of the burgh, but it was altered and repaired about six years ago at the expense of the county. Before that time escapes were of constant occurrence, and even since there have been no fewer than three escapes, one of which was on the part of a woman charged with housebreaking. This woman was assisted by her associates on the outside.—The prison stands in a very public situation in the middle of the town. There are three cells, all on the ground floor. They are of the same size, each being about 15 feet long, 7 feet broad, and 7½ feet high. There is no airing-yard. The cells are tolerably dry and moderately ventilated, but they are rather cold, there being no means of artificial warmth. I found the walls of the cells dirty, and covered with drawings and inscriptions. There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, but I was told that, on an average, there are from 100 to 140 prisoners in the course of the year. No register, however, is kept, and I had no means of forming anything like an accurate estimate of the number, for both the gaoler and the police officer were out of town in quest of an offender. Although Alloa is in Clackmannanshire, the burgh has obtained power by a local Act of Parliament to send its prisoners to Stirling, on paying the expense of their carriage and aliment. The prison of Alloa, therefore, is used as little more than a lock-up house. When a prisoner is confined long enough to require a supply of food, he receives a money allowance of 6*d* a-day. The bedding consists of two blankets only, without mattress or straw. Debtors are not received into the prison.

As the gaoler was out of town, I cannot, of course, speak from my own knowledge of his qualifications, but I understood that he is as well qualified as can be expected for the salary, which is very small. He cannot be said to reside in the prison, but his house adjoins it.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

Population about 15,000.

Clackmannanshire.

Prison existing at present.—One, namely, the prison of Alloa. There was formerly a prison at Clackmannan also, but it fell into disuse about 40 years ago, and has lately been pulled down.

Prisons wanted.—A better prison at Alloa, and a lock-up house at Tillicoultay, a manufacturing village having two other villages near it.

State of Crime in Clackmannanshire.

There is a considerable amount of crime, and there are many offences. The crime consists chiefly of petty thefts, but cases of housebreaking also are rather frequent. One occurred lately, which was remarkable for cool impudence. A fellow broke into a house, and actually attempted to steal the blankets from off the bed on which the owner and his wife were lying! There appears to have been a great increase in the number of petty thefts and assaults in this county during the last 20 years, even after allowing for the increase of population;—and there does not appear to have been any corresponding decrease in the number of other offences. During the last two years, however, crime and offences generally have declined somewhat. The increase that has taken place is attributed to an increase of drunkenness, which is believed to have been caused by the cheapening of whisky. Most of the offences are committed by young persons between the age of 10 and 20. Almost all the assaults arise from drunkenness, and many of the thefts proceed from the same source, whisky being often the very article stolen; and when not, the means of procuring whisky is often the object in view. Much of the poaching also may be traced to drunkenness. Many of the parents of the offenders are known to have neglected their children, and many to be of bad character. Indeed crime appears to run very much in families here; as, in truth, is the case generally. There are a few families in Clackmannanshire particularly distinguished in this respect. It is remarked that the rural population in this county commit fewer offences in proportion to their numbers than the inhabitants of the towns and villages. Most of the offenders belong to the county, but many of the worst cases of theft are committed by strangers.

Causes affecting Crime in Clackmannanshire, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, and much increased of late years. There was a Temperance Society at Alloa, but it has dwindled away.

State of the Police.—Quite inefficient. There is not a single officer in the county who is on constant duty. Many petty thefts escape detection.

Administration of Justice.—Efficient, as far as it can be in the present state of the police. There is a resident sheriff-substitute at Alloa, and the county is so small that offenders can be brought there from every part with but little trouble or expense.

Condition of the People.—Good, and better in every respect than formerly. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of glass, in distilling, and in working the collieries. There are few resident beggars, but many vagrants. There was a savings' bank at Alloa, but, owing to mismanagement or fraud, part of the money invested was lost, and the bank was consequently given up. A new savings' bank with Government security is much wanted.

Education.—General, and in about the same state as it has been for the last 10 or 12 years, but more extended than it was 20 or 30 years ago. There are still some children, however, who are growing up without instruction. It is believed that most of the adults are able to read easily, and, among those residing at Alloa, there is, in fact, a good deal of reading, the subject-matter consisting chiefly of religious works and newspapers. The reading of the mechanics, however, is more general, and includes many works connected with their peculiar occupations. There is a Mechanics' Institution, from which the works just referred to are obtained, but which, except as regards its library, appears to be in a half-dormant state, meetings being held only two or three times a-year.

Popular Amusements.—There are very few popular amusements in Clackmannanshire. Their introduction would probably assist much in weaning the people from habits of drunkenness.

STIRLING.

Population about 10,000, and, including a district five miles round, about 17,000.

(Visited 24th November 1836, and subsequent days.)

Stirling.

I had heard a bad account of the Stirling gaol from two or three quarters before visiting it, and my examination fully justified these unfavourable reports. The prison, nevertheless, is not an old one, not having been built more than 30 years. Great ignorance, however, of all the legitimate objects of imprisonment is manifest both in the choice of the site and in the construction of the building. The prison is placed in so public a situation, that it would be almost impossible to prevent communication from without; an object indeed which does not appear to have entered the heads of those who made the plans. The masonry, too, is so bad, that holes can be easily made through the walls; so that, even security, the most evident of all requisites in a prison, has not been attained or apparently cared for. As for the reform of the offender, that is quite out of the question; nay, it is hopeless to try to prevent his becoming worse. It would not be safe to set him to work, lest he should employ his tools in making his way through the frail tenement in which he is confined; and so insufficient are the means of separation, that all the females, of whom there are sometimes 12 or 15 at one time, are huddled together in the same room. In the absence of the keeper, too, who does not reside on the spot, conversation can readily be kept up between the females and the males; and about 12 months ago one of the females bored a hole through the wall into the adjoining males' cell, to render the communication yet easier.

The gaol stands in a public part of the town behind the town-house. A street runs on one side, and a wynd on another (windows opening into them); and access is obtained to a third side by means of a court which is open through the day. The lower part of the prison is damp; and, partly owing to this circumstance, six cells formerly in use have been abandoned, leaving only 10 (including a receiving cell) for the reception of prisoners. The dimensions of these latter cells are as follows:—

| Criminals' Cells. | Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. | Cubical Content. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 4 | 18 | 12 | 11 | 2,350 |
| 2 | 15 | 14 | 11 | 2,300 |
| 1 | 15 | 13 | 11 | 2,150 |
| Debtors' Cells. | | | | |
| 1 | 27 | 25 | 8 | 5,400 |
| 1 | 15 | 10 | 8 | 1,200 |
| 1 | 15 | 13 | 11 | 2,150 |

There is no airing-yard.

The cells now in use are dry, but ill ventilated. They are warmed by open fires. I found them moderately clean, and I understood that there has been a great improvement in this respect during the time of the present keeper, who has been in office about four years. Before then, the cells, I am told, were quite filthy. One cause of the improvement, however, is a greater supply of water, insufficient as this supply still is.

The last successful attempt at escape occurred about four years ago, when no fewer than 11 prisoners got away together. Another attempt, which was very near succeeding, happened last year. A large hole had actually been made in the outer wall, when one of the prisoners in another part of the building gave an alarm. The watchman ran to the gaoler's house, and, returning with him, the two entered the prison just in time to seize those who were at work at the hole before the opening was wide enough to allow them to pass through.

State of the Prisoners.—There are, at present, 51 prisoners; namely, 41 males and 10 females. The average number, however, is about 33. Of those now in confinement, 24 are colliers, in prison for breaking a contract they had entered into to work for certain wages. One of the other prisoners is a debtor, and the remaining 26 are criminals. I found many of the prisoners dirty, as might have been expected, seeing that no regulation exists, or at any rate is enforced, to oblige them to wash themselves.

Health.—Generally tolerably good. The most prevalent diseases are bowel complaints and itch. There was no death in the prison last year.

Food.—The allowance for food is excessive,—namely, 6*d.* a-day for each prisoner. Fourpence of this is paid in money, and the remainder in bread. The prisoner, indeed, has to pay for his own washing out of his allowance, but he seldom spares more than 2*d.* a-week for this purpose, and not always even that. He has also to pay his share in the purchase of fuel, but, as there are generally many prisoners in the same cell, this is not much. Fires, indeed, might generally be dispensed with. Debtors, if married, generally receive 1*s.* a-day, and, if unmarried, 10*d.* Additional supplies from without are allowed to all prisoners.

Bedding.—A straw mattress, three single blankets, and a rug. I found the bedding moderately clean; some of it, indeed, very clean. I was informed, however, that till within the last 12 months the bedding was often very dirty.

Discipline.—None. The only exception to the idleness that prevails is among the females, who are supplied with sewing by the members of a Ladies' Prison Discipline Society. This work, however, is not compulsory, and the whole of the proceeds go to the women themselves. Still useful employment in any form is so much better than idleness, that much is due to this Society for its introduction.

The usual offences are calling from cell to cell, injuring the building, attempts at escape, and getting whisky from people in the street. The ordinary punishments are putting out the fire in the cell in which an offence occurs, and placing the offender himself on a dietary of bread and water. Sometimes, too, when the offence is of a violent kind, the prisoner is put in irons, but corporal punishment is never inflicted.—I received no complaint of unkind treatment.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made between females and males. It has already been mentioned that there is only one room for the females. A short time ago a female prisoner gave birth to a child in this common apartment.

Debtors.—There is at present only one debtor, and the average during the last 12 months has been between one and two only. Debtors provide their own bedding and clothing. They are freely allowed to receive visits from their friends.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between untried and convicted prisoners. Visits are allowed on two days of the week at the discretion of the gaoler. Letters are inspected. Smoking tobacco is allowed to debtors, but not to criminals. It must, however, be impossible to prevent any of the prisoners from smoking, whatever the regulation may be.

There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their parishes.—There is not any lunatic prisoner at the present time.

Officers.—This is the only prison I have met with, in which, while there is so large an average number of prisoners as 33, there is yet only one officer. The keeper appears in many respects to be well qualified for his appointment; there are, however, serious objections to his holding it.

There is no regularly-appointed surgeon, but a medical man is sent for when required; there is no chaplain, but divine service is generally performed on Sunday morning by one of the ministers of the town.

Fees.—A fee of 3*s.* 6*d.* is claimed from every debtor on leaving prison, 2*s.* of which goes to the gaoler, and 1*s.* 6*d.* to the town-clerk. This claim, however, is never enforced by a prolongation of imprisonment, and it often happens that the fee is not paid. The keeper does not sell any articles to the prisoners.

Accounts.—A register of imprisonments is kept by the town-clerk, and an account of disbursements by the town-chamberlain. The register of imprisonments is in neat order, but entries in some of the columns have been omitted.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 15th October 1836:—

| | | | | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminals | | | | 266 | 15 | 4 |
| Gas, fuel, &c. | | | | 17 | 0 | 0 |
| Washing bedclothes | | | | 3 | 8 | 9 |
| Straw | | | | 5 | 8 | 3 |
| Repairs | | | | 2 | 12 | 0 |
| Salaries:— | | | | | | |
| Keeper | 79 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| Surgeon (including charge for medicines) | 6 | 7 | 0 | 85 | 7 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors and Revenue prisoners | | | | 380 | 11 | 4 |

Average number of prisoners during the year, 34, viz.—Criminals 31; debtors 1½; Revenue prisoners ½.—The whole number in prison was 243, namely, 218 criminals (180 males and 38 females), 23 debtors (all males), and 2 Revenue prisoners (males).

Average cost of each criminal prisoner during the year, about 12*l.* Daily cost, about 8*d.*

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

General Observations.—The bad state of the gaol of Stirling has, I believe, been a frequent topic of animadversion by the judges of the circuit court; and the matter has been brought forward from time to time at county meetings, but little has hitherto been done, except engaging a more efficient keeper than the one who last held the office. It is perhaps fortunate that a new prison has not been built, seeing to how little purpose most of the money expended elsewhere has been employed.

Considerable improvements have been made in the management of the Stirling gaol since this Report was drawn up. The money allowance has been abolished, and a plain but sufficient dietary substituted. The prisoners, too, are required to wash themselves every day, and the females are put under the charge of a female officer; and by various other measures the order and discipline of the prison have been amended.

---

State of Crime at Stirling.—There is a good deal of crime here, consisting chiefly of thefts and assaults. The following is an enumeration of the criminal population of the town. In the first place, there are about 30 female prostitutes (about 20 belonging to the town, and about 10 strangers); about 10 of the 30 are in the habit of committing petty thefts, and almost all are addicted to drunkenness, and commit breaches of the peace. There are also from 16 to 20 other thieves in the town, making altogether about 30 thieves. There are, moreover, from 12 to 20 persons who frequently commit assaults, &c., but who do not steal. And, lastly, there are always many vagrants in the town, who commit about as many crimes, and make about as many disturbances, as all the resident offenders taken together.

Kilsyth.

KILSYTH, STIRLINGSHIRE.

Population about 2,500; or, including the whole parish (which surrounds Kilsyth about equally on all sides), about 4,200.

(Visited 2d December 1836.)

The prison of this town is very small and very bad, whereas a good prison of moderate size is absolutely necessary for the preservation of public order at Kilsyth, as will be seen when I come to speak of the number of offences committed. The present prison consists of two small, damp rooms, or vaults, the worst of which however has been disused for a considerable time. The rooms are on the ground floor of the town-house, a very old building, standing on one side of a kind of square in the middle of the town. These rooms or vaults are below the level of the ground on one side at least, and, the day of my visit being a rainy one, I found the floors partly covered with water. In the room which is still used a stove is sometimes put up, but it was not there at the time of my visit, and had not been in use for twelve months. The place was therefore cold, and it was also dirty. Each of the rooms is about 14 feet long, 9 feet broad, and 6 feet high, the cubical content being about 750 feet. The prison, though strongly built, is insecure, owing to there being no resident keeper, and to the ease with which communication can be kept up from without. The last instance of escape happened about 18 months ago. One result, of course, of the communication from without is that the prisoners obtain supplies of whisky. This they effect by means of tobacco-pipes passing through the small holes in the iron shutters.—Loose straw is all that is supplied for bedding. There was a bedstead, but it was broken about 18 eighteen months ago.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and I was informed that the average number admitted in a whole year is not more than about 12; and, as the prison is used as little more than a lock-up house, it rarely happens that any one is kept in it more than a day or two at a time. Last year the number of prisoners was from 15 to 20, (there is no record showing the exact number,) eight or nine of whom were military deserters. The small number of prisoners arises not from the good state of the town, but from the want of a power of administering justice in a summary way, and from the want of a suitable prison.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the chief bailie of the burgh.

State of Kilsyth as respects Crime, &c.—There are a great many offences committed here, consisting chiefly of assaults and petty thefts, and many of these are escaping detection and punishment. Numerous, however, as are the offences committed, it is satisfactory to find that there are not more in proportion to the amount of population than formerly, and indeed that the number of heinous offences has become less. Regular and pre-arranged market fights, too, which used to be common, have now ceased. Nevertheless, the town appears to be still in a disorderly and unruly state, though this can be traced in a great degree to a few drunken, troublesome fellows. Most of these offenders, and most of those also who commit petty thefts, are between the ages of 15 and 30, and both classes are decidedly below the generality of people in the same class of life in intelligence, education, and knowledge. Many of the parents of the offenders, too, are drunken and dissipated. Where this is not the case, the child has generally only one parent—a widow. The number of habitual offenders is about 15, most of whom are inhabitants of the town.

Causes affecting Crime at Kilsyth, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, especially on the Saturday and Sunday. At present, too, drunkenness is on the increase, owing probably to the sudden advance that has taken place in the rate of wages. There is a temperance society, but it has fallen off.

State of the Police.—Inefficient. There is no paid and responsible police; and, as the town has not adopted the provisions of Mr. Loch's Act, there are at present no means of raising the necessary funds for this purpose.

Administration of Justice.—A power of trying summarily for petty offences is much wanted.

Condition of the People.—Indifferent, though somewhat improved latterly. The chief occupation is hand-loom weaving, at which, at the present time, a man earns 6*s.* or 8*s.* a-week clear wages, and a boy or girl 3*s.* or 4*s.* There is a savings' bank, which was established about seven years ago. The present amount of deposits is about 1,500*l.*, and the number of depositors 70 or 80; both being on the increase.

Education.—In an unsatisfactory state. Many parents altogether neglect the education of their children. Until lately, too, a distinction was made in the parish school between the children of those who pay fees and those who do not, and the latter received only one hour's instruction through the whole day.—It is estimated that about two-thirds of the adult population are able to read easily. The people are not, however, much given to reading. There is a library, the subscription to which is 4*s.* a-year, but there are not many subscribers. It was lately proposed to reduce the subscription to 2*s.*, if a sufficient number of persons would come forward to keep up an equal amount of income, but the requisite number did not appear. There is a mechanics' institution, but it is not in a flourishing state.

Popular Amusements.—There is a curling club, but upon the whole there are but few popular amusements.

KIRKINTILLOCH, DUMBARTONSHIRE.

Population of the town and suburbs about 4,000, and of the whole parish about 6,000.

(Visited 2d December 1836).

Kirkintilloch.

The prison of Kirkintilloch, which is very small, is used for prisoners confined for short periods only, and not at all for debtors. It forms part of the town-house, which was built about 24 years ago, and which stands in the middle of the town. There are only two cells, and their dimensions are as follows:—

| Cells. | Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. | Cubic Content. Feet. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 11 | 9 | 9½ | 940 |
| 1 | 11 | 7 | 9½ | 730 |

There is no airing-yard.—Each of the cells has a fire-place, but the window in each is unglazed; although the windows are furnished with iron shutters, by which part of the cold air can be excluded. The cells are moderately dry and moderately ventilated. One of them I found clean, but the other was dirty, having been made so, I was told, by a man who had got drunk in prison. This man had been supplied with whisky by means of a tobacco-pipe inserted in one of the small holes with which the iron shutters are perforated. The place is tolerably secure. The only instance of escape that has occurred took place about eight years ago, but the prisoner was immediately retaken. He had knocked known the gaoler, when the latter came in the morning to open the cell door, and, getting into the passage, had forced his way through a fanlight over the door.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit, and the prison is often empty.

Food.—Each prisoner receives two twopenny loaves and two bottles of beer every day. The present cost of the two bottles of beer is threepence, making the whole cost of the food sevenpence a-day. Till lately, however, the whole cost was sixpence. No part of the allowance is paid in money. Additional supplies from without are permitted.

Loose straw is all that is allowed for bedding.—There is no work or instruction.—It seldom happens that there is a female prisoner, but, when there is, she is always kept separate from the males.—Visits from friends are freely allowed, but, letters are inspected.—Smoking tobacco is allowed.—The usual offences are making disturbances, calling to people in the streets, and getting whisky into the prison.

The gaoler was out of town at the time of my visit, (he is the police officer as well as gaoler,) but I was assured that he performs his duties well. He does not receive any fees in addition to his salary, and he is not allowed to sell food to the prisoners.

The burgh treasurer lives several miles from the town, and I was unable to remain at Kirkintilloch a sufficient time to see him, and to examine his accounts. A statement of the expenses for the last year, with a list of the prisoners, showing how long each had remained in gaol, was to have been forwarded to me, but it has never arrived.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the two bailies of the burgh.

State of Crime at Kirkintilloch.—There are few serious offences, and fewer than formerly, notwithstanding an increase in population, but there are many drunken brawls and petty thefts, and these have apparently increased at about the same rate as the population. There are two or three bad families at Kirkintilloch, and five or six other persons of bad character, and many offences also are committed by tramps (persons wandering about in quest of work, or pretending to be on that errand). Most of the offenders are between the ages of 12 and 24. Many of their parents are drunken and careless. The offenders are described as being inferior to others in the same class of life in intelligence, education, and knowledge, and also in sobriety.

CALTON (forming part of GLASGOW).

Population about 25,000.

(Visited 14th December 1836.)

Calton.

The Calton prison forms part of the police-office, which was built about twenty years ago, and which stands in the middle of the burgh. The prison is on a good construction, although very small, and is used both as a gaol and house of correction. There are altogether twelve cells, and they are all the same size, namely 9 feet long, 7½ feet broad, and about 8 feet high; the cubical content of each being about 540 feet. There is no airing-ground. The four lower cells (which are used as the gaol) are rather damp, but no person is ever kept in one of them more than two days together. The other cells are all dry. Most of the cells are rather cold; indeed, there are fires in only two of them; but the building is screened, in a great measure, from the winds. I found all the cells clean, and they are all tolerably well ventilated. The prison appears to be secure, especially when it is considered that it is used only for persons charged with petty offences. There was an instance of escape, however, about two months ago, by a female prisoner, who was employed at the time in cleaning the passages.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the Police Commissioners of the burgh.

There were 13 prisoners at the time of my visit (3 males and 10 females), and I learned that 13 is about the usual number. Several of the prisoners were dirty, and I found, on examination, that no measures are taken to oblige them to wash themselves. One of them told me that he washed himself only twice a-week.*

---

* Regulations have now been made for obliging the prisoners to wash themselves regularly every morning and evening. An order has also been given for constructing a bath, and for putting up a wash-house in which the female prisoners may wash the linen, bedclothes, &c.—January 7th, 1837.

Scotland.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Calton.

Health.—Generally good. It appears, indeed, that the prisoners usually improve in health during their stay. They become stronger, and, if they had any irruptions when they came in, these generally heal. The usual complaints are slight fever and disorders of the bowels. There were two deaths last year, but neither of them had any connexion with the management of the prison. The deaths took place in the police cells, which form the gaol, and they happened almost immediately after admission of the parties; both persons being in a dying state when received, owing to constant drunkenness and debauchery.

Food.—The allowance to those who do a sufficient quantity of work to earn it, is four pennyworth of food, consisting of bread, porridge, milk, and broth, the latter containing meat, barley, and vegetables. Prisoners who do not work (including the untried) receive only two penny loaves per day; but as a court for trial is held every day, except Sunday, no one remains more than two days at farthest on this allowance; and, moreover, the medical man is of opinion, that the two penny loaves are sufficient for health, although the quantity is less than it might be, in consequence of the bread being made of fine flour. Additional supplies of food from without are allowed to untried prisoners, but not to convicted prisoners.

Bedding.—A hammock, a mattress filled with cotton-wool, two single blankets, and a rug. I found the bedding dirty.—No clothing is allowed, except in cases of destitution.

Discipline.—Much better than in the generality of prisons; the inmates being kept separate to a considerable extent, and set to work. There is no instruction, however, and too much time is passed in bed, although less than at most other prisons. The prisoners here rise at six in summer, and at about eight in winter, and they go to bed at nine in summer, and at sunset in winter. Those engaged at the most profitable kinds of labour, however, generally rise earlier, and go to bed later. This they do of their own accord.

The chief employment is weaving and winding cotton-weft, picking cotton-wool, and, occasionally, shoemaking and tailoring. The work is turned to good account, by materially diminishing the expenses of the prison.

Offences and Punishments.—Till within the last 14 months there were many offences, such as using obscene language, making noises, calling from cell to cell, and injuring the building. But, rather more than a year ago, a great improvement took place in the prison, a good keeper being engaged, instead of an idle and negligent one. Since that time there have been few offences, but such as have occurred are of much the same kind as formerly. The usual punishment is placing the offender in a solitary cell, and depriving him of part of his food.

Female Prisoners.—These are kept quite separate from the males, but there is no female officer to take charge of them.

Miscellaneous.—Untried prisoners are generally allowed free intercourse with their friends, but visits to convicted prisoners are restricted to once a week. There appears to be no rule about letters, owing probably to the rareness of an application for permission either to send or to receive one; almost all the prisoners being very low in education and rank. Neither tobacco nor snuff is allowed in the prison. There is no lunatic prisoner.

Officers.—The only regular officer is the keeper, who also attends in the Police-office (which is in the same building with the gaol) to transact police business. He appears to be well qualified for his situation, and I received no complaint concerning him. The surgeon examines all prisoners on their admittance, and attends at other times when sent for.—There are no fees of any kind.

Accounts.—The accounts kept are, 1st, A register of imprisonments, showing the name, age, and offence of each prisoner, and the employment and behaviour of each whilst in prison. This register, however, does not include those cases (by far the most numerous) in which the offender is either fined or dismissed. Second, Work-Account. Third, Account of expenditure.—The accounts are all neatly kept. The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year ending 30th September 1836. (About an average year.)

Average number of prisoners during the year, about 16; viz., 6 convicted prisoners, and about 10 unconvicted prisoners. (Many of the latter, being put in confinement for a single night, received no allowance of food.) The total number of cases of imprisonment during the year was 3,450. Most of these, however, were recommitments of the same parties.

Annual average cost of each prisoner, about £3.—Average daily cost, about 2*d.*

State of Calton as respects Crime.—There appears to be a great deal of crime, consisting, however, principally of drunken brawls and petty thefts. The following is an estimate of the criminal population, made with the assistance of the superintendent of police, and of one of the police officers.—About 100 habitual thieves, and about 200 other persons who steal occasionally. There are also about 100 persons who act frequently as resetters (receivers of stolen goods). In addition to these, there is a considerable number of persons who often get drunk and commit breaches of the peace, but who do not steal. The number of public prostitutes is believed to be not more than 30 at the present time, owing to the police having lately been active in clearing the streets of them. Most of the offenders are between the ages of 17 and 30, and, with few exceptions, they are of drunken and dissolute habits. Most of the money received for stolen articles, which are pawned, goes to the whisky shop. Many of the offenders have no knowledge of a trade, and have no regular occupation. Their parents are generally of bad character. The thieves are considered equal to others in the same class of life in intelligence, but below them in education and knowledge; whilst the greater part of those who engage in drunken brawls, and commit assaults, &c., are said to be low in intellect, as well as in education and knowledge. The floating population of the district (estimated at about 2,000) commit many more than their proportionate number of offences, and the same observation is applicable to the Irish part of the population. It is fully believed that, were it not for the habit of drunkenness, which exists to a lamentable extent in this district, every person would be able to live in comfort, whereas there is, in fact, a great deal of abject poverty and misery.

GORBALS (forming part of Glasgow).

Population about 50,000.

(Visited 16th and 17th December 1836.)

Gorbals.

The prison of Gorbals is used for little more than police purposes, the greater part of those put in it remaining for a single night only, and none staying more than a few days. It forms part of the police-office, which stands at a corner formed by the crossing of two streets. The two rooms in which most of the prisoners are now confined were originally intended as offices for clerks, &c., and they are consequently ill placed as prison cells, being upon the ground-floor, with the windows opening upon the public street. Precautions are taken, however, to prevent the prisoners, as much as possible, from looking out at the windows and communicating with people on the outside. One of the rooms is used for males and the other for females, and, excepting particular cases, all in confinement remain in one of these two rooms both by day and by night; no other separation existing, under ordinary circumstances, than that of males from females. Besides these two rooms there are nine small cells, which are in the back part of the building, the windows of which open into a yard belonging to the police-office. These cells are very small, being each only 8 feet long, 5 feet broad, and 8 feet high, and having, therefore, a cubical content of only 320 feet. There is also a small room, about 12 feet long, 10 feet broad, and 8½ feet high. There is no airing yard. The three rooms are warmed by open fires, and are quite dry; but the cells are not warmed in any way, and three of them are damp. The rooms, too, are sufficiently ventilated, but the cells are not. I found all of them clean. The prison appears to be secure, which must be attributed, in great measure, to the circumstance of an officer being constantly on duty, both by day and by night.

There were 10 prisoners at the time of my visit, namely, 7 males and 3 females. This is somewhat less than the average number, which is about 12 or 15. The total number passing through the prison during the year, counting a prisoner every time he is brought in, is about 4,000. Several of the prisoners were dirty, and I found that it is left to themselves to wash as often or as seldom as they choose. The allowance of food is two penny loaves a day, (made of fine wheaten flour,) but additional supplies from without are permitted. A blanket to every two or three prisoners is all that is supplied by way of bedding, the prisoners sleeping in their usual clothes, and on sloping boards or guard-beds. There is not much illness among the prisoners, except headaches, &c., arising from drunkenness; and the only death that happened last year proceeded from the same cause.

There is no discipline of any kind, there being neither labour, separation, nor instruction. The usual prison offences are making noises, quarrelling, calling to people in the street, and singing obscene songs, &c. The ordinary punishment is confinement in a separate cell.—I received no complaint of unkind treatment.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made in the treatment of males and females.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Smoking tobacco is prohibited, but snuff-taking is allowed. There is no insane prisoner. Debtors are not received into the prison.

Officers.—There is a turnkey, who has the particular charge of the prisoners; but during the night, and at other times when the turnkey is not at hand, the police-officer on duty acts in his stead. The turnkey appears to be rather inert.—A surgeon is sent for when required.—There are no fees of any kind.

General Observations.—Had not the cells been made so very small, and had there been a few more of them, a good system of management might readily have been introduced into this prison; but, under present circumstances, there are no means of preventing association and idleness, and little could be done by way of instruction. The number of recommitments is known to be great, as might be expected; but the accounts do not show what that number is.

Gorbals.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of Police, elected under Mr. Loch's Act.

State of Gorbals as respects Crime.—There are but few heinous offences, but there is a great deal of petty crime, consisting principally of petty thefts, especially those of a class known by the name of the *Boll-Weft system, namely, embezzlement of cotton-yarn, &c., from the mills for sale to the small manufacturers. This is carried to so great an extent, that Captain Jeffray, the active and intelligent superintendent of police in Gorbals, gives it as his opinion that some manufacturers are robbed in this way to the extent of £1,500 or £2,000 a-year. Embezzlements are carried on indeed not only by those who work in the mills, but by those who work at home, and who are supplied with materials by their employers. The quantity of yarn, &c., taken away by an individual at any one time being generally very small, and the stock from which it is taken very large, the culprit (often quite a child) frequently cheats himself into the belief that he is doing his master no real injury; but if the offenders had power and inclination to calculate how much these thefts amount to when repeated two or three times every day by a considerable number of persons, they would then see that a great robbery is committed. Owing to the thefts being in such small amounts, they are sometimes carried on in a great mill without the proprietor knowing or even suspecting their existence. Captain Jeffray told me that he had lately made a discovery, which led to the exposure of a regular system of embezzlement in a mill, the owner of which had believed that all his work-people were quite honest.

The essential difficulties of detection, in this offence, are increased by the state of the law, which I believe forbids the arrest of any person during the day, on suspicion of carrying embezzled materials, and which during the night forbids an examination of his house. What appears to be wanted is, that some competent and responsible person, like the sheriff or his substitute, should have the power of granting warrants for the examination of the persons and houses of people who are shown to be of bad character, at any time, whether by day or by night. Captain Jeffray mentioned the name of a man whose constant employment he feels certain is to collect stolen yarn, &c., and who passes by the police-office often several times in a single day with well-filled pockets, laughing at the police-officers. The brother of this man is a manufacturer, and he employs as many as thirty weavers, all working, Captain Jeffray fully believes, with stolen materials.

The following is Captain Jeffray's estimate of the criminal population of Gorbals, exclusive of those engaged in the foregoing embezzlements, whose number he cannot specify with any degree of certainty, but which he says is great:—1st. Between 30 and 40 housebreakers, chiefly from 15 to 25 years old. (These almost always commit their offences by stealth, very seldom offering any personal violence, and generally running away when discovered.) 2d. A gang of about half-a-dozen street robbers, between the ages of 15 and 25. (Some of these would, probably, have been already convicted and transported, had it not been for an unwillingness to give evidence against them on the part of some persons who have been assaulted and robbed.) 3d. About 200 boys and girls, mostly between the ages of 10 and 16, who commit petty thefts of various kinds. (By the time they arrive at the age of about 16, most of the young thieves either leave the place and go where they are less known, or are transported.) 4th. There appear to be but few pickpockets, not more, Captain Jeffray thinks, than about 20, most of whom are between 15 and 20 years old. 5th. There are about 50 resetters (receivers of stolen goods). (Many of these superadd the trade of pawnbroking.) 6th. There is but little public prostitution at present, the number of prostitutes living in the Gorbals and appearing in the streets not being more than about 20. 7th. Lastly, there are about 300 or 400 persons, who get drunk and commit disturbances of the peace, but who do not steal. Drunken brawls, indeed, committed by these persons and by the thieves, form the great bulk of the offences, except the embezzlements.

Most of the young offenders who are brought to the police-office have no knowledge of a trade, and have no regular occupation of any kind. Their parents are generally dissipated and of bad character. As a class, the offenders are found to be much below others in the same rank of life in intelligence, education, and knowledge. They generally belong to the poorest class, and this circumstance partly accounts for there being an undue proportion of Irish among them, which is the case. It is observed, also, that there is an excessive proportion of carters among the thieves, which is accounted for by the circumstance of the occupation of carters often exposing them to temptation.

ANDERSTON (forming part of Glasgow).

Population about 15,000.

(Visited 16th December 1836.)

Anderston.

This prison, like that of Gorbals, forms part of the police-office (which stands in a narrow street or lane), and is used for little more than police purposes. There are only six small cells, and one small room. The building was erected, about 20 years ago, for a Methodist chapel, but about 10 years ago it was converted into a police-office, to which purpose, however, it is not well adapted. Among other objections to it is its want of security, although there has not been any escape during the last four years. The following are the dimensions of the cells and room:—

---

* This term is said to have had its origin in the following way. When a pedlar called at a weaver's house to sell his goods, and found that the weaver had no money, he would sometimes press him, or his wife, to give weft instead (belonging to the manufacturer who employed the weaver), and as crockery ware, or bolls, often formed part of the articles which the pedlar offered in barter, exchanges of this kind obtained the name of the Boll-Weft System.

| 2 | do. 6½ | 6 | 10 | 400 |

There is no airing yard. The cells and room are dry, but two of the cells are very ill ventilated. The room is warmed by an open fire, and the cells by fires in the passage and in the room into which they severally open. I found the whole of the prison clean. There were only two prisoners at the time of my visit, which is considerably less than the usual number, the average being about six. One of the prisoners was in confinement for the fourth time during the previous 25 hours! His offence was disturbing the peace while in a state of intoxication. Both the prisoners were dirty—the drunkard offensively so.

Food.—Bread and broth to the value of 3*d.* daily (the bread being made of fine wheaten flour). Additional supplies from without are permitted to the untried, but to them only. No part of the allowance is paid in money.

Bedding.—Convicted prisoners are allowed two blankets and a straw mattress, but there is no allowance to the unconvicted. It must be remarked, however, that no one remains more than a day (excepting Sunday) without being either tried or sent to the Glasgow gaol.

Health.—Generally tolerably good, except that the prisoners are often troubled with the headache, &c., arising from intoxication at the time of arrest. There was no death last year.

Discipline.—A little labour is generally provided for the convicted prisoners, but nothing more is done. The usual prison offences are making noises and attempting to do mischief. Punishment is seldom inflicted; corporal punishment never.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made in the treatment of males and females.

Miscellaneous.—Untried prisoners, as already mentioned, are not allowed any bedding, but they are not required to work. Visits are permitted in the presence of an officer, except when the offence is of a serious kind, and except when the prisoner is drunk, which is often the case. No application for permission either to send or to receive a letter is recollected. Tobacco is forbidden for smoking, but is allowed as snuff. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—There is no person who has the particular charge of the prisoners, the police-officer who happens to be on duty always acting.—There are no fees.

Accounts.—The Police Journal is the only account.

General Observations.—The management of this little prison is not so bad as that of the generality of small prisons. There are, however, many recommitments.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of Police.

GLASGOW POLICE OFFICE.

(Visited in December 1835, and again on 24th December 1836.)

Glasgow Police-office.

This is an ill-constructed building, so far at least as the accommodation for prisoners is concerned. The situation (which is in the heart of the city) is perhaps of the best kind for a police prison, considering the importance of easy access, and the shortness of the periods of commitment; but the quantity of land secured was quite insufficient. The number of rooms and cells, too, is so small, compared with the number of prisoners, that it is no uncommon thing for fifty persons to be confined together; though the best cure for this would be, not the construction of a great many new cells, but the abandonment of the system of frequent commitments, which is now carried to such an extent, that there is a regular set of drunken, disorderly people who are brought to the police-office every night, to be let loose again in the morning, with the moral certainty that many of them will resort to some dishonest means of getting food and the means of fresh indulgence during the day.

There are altogether 35 cells and rooms, including eight very small cells which open into two of the largest rooms, and which are used for the stricter confinement of any turbulent prisoners, who would otherwise be mixed with the body of prisoners in these rooms. All the rooms and cells are dry, but some of them are ill ventilated. The large rooms, where there is space for taking exercise, and where artificial heat is least needed, have open fires, (some of which I found extravagantly large,) but few of the cells are warmed in any way, though such as are have also open fires. Considering that the floors and ceilings are made of wood, and that many of the partitions even are of the same material, there must be no inconsiderable danger of the building taking fire, notwithstanding the constant presence of officers.—I visited the prison at an hour when it is seen at a disadvantage, namely, in the morning, soon after the nightly visitants had been liberated. Taking this into consideration, the place was cleaner than I could reasonably expect; and I was assured that every cell and room is washed once a-day. The only disorderly tokens of the late occupants that met my eye were some fragments of what appeared to have been the flounce of a gown. These were strewn on the floor of the room in which disorderly women are confined, some of whom had probably been fighting.

Almost all the prisoners were disgustingly dirty. It would be well if the police-office were furnished with a large bath, in which all should be obliged to take a plunge who come in dirty—a class which would include ninety-nine-hundredths of all who are arrested. By this means, some of these worthies would be kept constantly clean, so frequent are their visits to the police-office. The value of the arrangement, too, as a matter of discipline, would be considerable, for criminals appear to luxuriate in filth, and to shrink from clean water almost as instinctively as from the eye of an honest man.

SCOTLAND.

Glasgow Police Office.

The prison appears to be tolerably secure. The last escape occurred about four years ago, when two prisoners got out at one of the windows. Strong iron bars, however, have since then been added.

At the time of my visit there were 40 prisoners, namely, 30 males and 10 females. Two hours before my arrival, however, there had been more than 100; and the average number, if taken in the middle of the night, or early in the morning, would be about 120. The greatest number at any one time, which is remembered for a considerable period, was about a year ago, when there were no fewer than 200 prisoners. Most of those who are brought in in the night are females.—Such of the prisoners as remain through the day are allowed two pennyworth of bread, a pennyworth of milk, and a pennyworth of broth each.—The prisoners sleep on guard beds, and in their own clothes.—None of them are set to work.

This prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of Glasgow.

GLASGOW BRIDEWELL.

Glasgow Bridewell.

This excellent prison (a full account of which will be found in my last Report) goes on most satisfactorily, and the only department about which I had to speak otherwise than in terms of praise—I allude to the education of the prisoners—has now been placed on an efficient footing; two persons being at present constantly engaged in the instruction of the male prisoners, and two in the instruction of the females. A register, too, has been opened (beginning with the commencement of the present year), in which a minute record is made of the state of every prisoner as regards education, sobriety, &c., the character of his parents, the circumstances which apparently led to the commission of his offence, the prisoner's conduct in confinement, and his progress in education and in the acquirement of the means of earning an honest livelihood, &c.—January 1837.

GLASGOW.

Population about 230,000.

Glasgow.

State of Crime.—There is a great deal of crime in Glasgow, but it consists chiefly of petty offences, such as petty thefts and drunken brawls. It does not, however, appear that the number of petty offences is greater now than formerly, when compared with the amount of population, while the number of serious offences is much less than formerly, even without regard to the vast increase in population. So that, upon the whole, it may be fairly said that there has been a considerable decrease of crime in this city. The following offences are specified as having become less common during the last 20 years:—highway robbery, child-murder, stabbing and cutting, forgery, offences connected with the Post-office, and perjury; while housebreaking, accompanied with personal violence, has entirely disappeared, as has the offence of robbing church-yards. On the other hand, intimidation and personal violence to fellow-workmen (arising out of strikes for wages) have become more common, and the offence of wilfully obstructing carriages on railroads has arisen for the first time. As the present superintendent of police has been but recently appointed, and as his jurisdiction does not extend to certain parts of Glasgow, I have not been able to form an estimate of the criminal population of the whole city, though I have given one for the Calton district and one for Gorbals. There is no doubt that the total number of criminals is great, though Mr. Miller (the present superintendent) fully agrees in a statement made to me by the late Mr. Watson, his predecessor, that, if about 400 habitual thieves and receivers of stolen goods (of whom a list might readily be made) could be withdrawn from the community, great relief would be afforded, and the attention of the police might be confined within much narrower bounds. Indeed, Mr. Miller says that, if 100 only could be taken away, a great effect would be manifest.

Pickpockets and others committing petty thefts are generally from 10 to 16 or 17 years old; house and shop-breakers, and persons stealing from waggons and carts, are most of them between 18 and 25; those committing drunken brawls from 17 to 30. The thieves and other offenders are, as a class, much more drunken and dissipated than the majority of others in the same rank of life. Drunkenness, indeed, is the immediate cause of almost all the brawls and assaults, while it is an indirect cause of many of the thefts; for not only does drunkenness induce habits of crime, but much property is stolen with the immediate object of indulging in it, and, moreover, the very opportunity of committing a robbery is often afforded by the intoxication of the party robbed. The greater part of the thieves have little or no knowledge of a trade, and have no regular occupation of any kind, by which to earn an honest livelihood. With the exception of widows with large families, the parents of the thieves are generally of very bad character. The offenders are, as a class, much below others in the same rank of life in intelligence and education, there being very few skilful and accomplished thieves in Glasgow, such as are to be found in London. Most of the offenders belong to the poorest class; and it is observed that many of the frauds and thefts are committed by the Irish, and many of the assaults by carters. The offenders chiefly belong to Glasgow, though many of them were born elsewhere, and have lived at Glasgow only a few years. There are many, too, who are wholly strangers.

SCOTLAND.

Glasgow.

Causes affecting Crime at Glasgow, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, although less in the middle and upper classes than formerly. There is a temperance society, but I do not know how far it is in a flourishing state or otherwise.

State of the Police.—Efficient in that part of Glasgow which is called the Royalty, although more officers are wanted even there. In Gorbals, also, the police is efficient, considering the extent of the establishment, but there too more officers are much wanted. In Calton the police is considered to be less efficient, and in Anderston to be inefficient. In Bridgeton there is no police of any kind, and the place is very disorderly. There is no police also in Camlachie, Parkhead, and Westmuir. These latter places are very disorderly, and the scene or neighbourhood of most of the robberies that are attempted. Springbank and Woodside also are without a police, and are in an unruly state. The river police acts well, but the number of officers is insufficient. A general and united police for the whole of Glasgow and its vicinity is much wanted. A good deal of crime at present escapes detection, particularly offences of embezzlement from large cotton-mills.

Condition of the People.—Better than formerly, and now tolerably good, although drunkenness still keeps a large number of the people in a very low state. It is believed, however, that all who are industrious and sober may live very comfortably. The chief employment is connected with the cotton-mills, but I had not time to obtain trustworthy information respecting the usual rates of wages. There are two principal savings' banks, besides three or four smaller ones in distant parts of the town. The oldest of the two is connected with the Royal Bank. The present amount of deposits in it is about 50,000*l.*, and the number of depositors about 3,500. The other bank established on the plan of the English savings' banks, according to the provisions of the late Act, has been open only four months, but the amount of deposits is already upwards of 25,000*l.*, and the number of depositors nearly 3,000. It is remarkable that the opening of this bank does not appear to have been attended with any diminution in the amount of deposits in the one connected with the Royal Bank. Indeed, there is a strong motive for continuing to make deposits in this latter bank, for the interest given is now somewhat greater even than that granted by Government; the interest in one case being 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent., and in the other 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

RENFREW.

Population about 2,200.

(Visited 20th December 1836.)

Renfrew.

The prison of Renfrew is old, but it appears to be secure, there having been no instance of escape for about forty years. The prison is small also, there being only three rooms, but it is sufficient for the wants of the town, especially since imprisonment for debt has so much diminished. The present average number of prisoners, indeed, is less than one.

The prison stands in the middle of the town, and the windows overlook the public street, which is the greatest defect in the place. The following are the dimensions of the rooms:—

| Criminals' Cells. | Length. Feet. | Breadth. Feet. | Height. Feet. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 2 | 12½ | 10½ | 9 |
| Debtors' Room. | | | |
| 1 | 26½ | 18½ | 11 |

There is no airing-yard.

The prison is dry, tolerably well ventilated, and of moderate temperature; and I found it clean also. It is warmed by open fires, which, however, are used only in very cold weather. There is no protection against the building catching fire.

There was no one in confinement at the time of my visit.—I was informed that the health of the prisoners is generally good, and that there has not been a death for many years.

Food.—Criminal prisoners receive fourpence a-day, which they may have in the form either of money or victuals, as they prefer. Debtors are generally allowed a shilling a-day. Additional supplies of food from without are permitted to all prisoners.

Bedding.—A straw mattress and a rug.—There is no allowance of clothing.

Discipline.—There is no labour, but when possible (as it generally is) the prisoners are kept separate. The general conduct of the prisoners is reported to be good; but such as are put in whilst in a state of intoxication (no small portion of the whole) often make loud noises until they become sober. Punishment is seldom inflicted—corporal punishment never.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, but when there is a female prisoner the gaoler's wife generally looks after her.—There is no difference between the treatment of males and females.

Debtors.—The average number of debtors last year was one-third only. Debtors provide their own clothing and bedding.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits are not allowed, except under peculiar circumstances. No instance is remembered of a letter being either sent or received; the prisoners being generally illiterate. Smoking tobacco is forbidden to criminal prisoners, but allowed to debtors.

Officers.—The only officer is the keeper, who acts also as town-officer. He was once a soldier, and he appears to perform his present duties very well. Indeed, much of the training for the army appears to be suitable for producing good gaolers: at least, I have met with several cases which would lead to that conclusion. The keeper does not reside in the prison. There is no regularly-appointed surgeon, but a medical man is sent for, at the expense of the burgh, when required.

Scotland.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Renfrew.

Fees.—No fees are demanded of criminals, as usual, but debtors pay as much as fourpence a-night all the time they are in prison. The keeper is not allowed to sell food, &c., to the prisoners.

Accounts.—The only regular account is a register of imprisonments, kept, very neatly, by the gaoler. The following are the items of expenditure for the year ending 15th October 1836 (about an average year):

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aliment of criminal prisoners | 0 | 8 | 0 |
| Furniture and bedding, about | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| Straw | 0 | 0 | 6 |
| Repairs, about | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Keeper's salary. (His whole salary as keeper and town officer is £20.) | 8 | 0 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors | £10 | 1 | 0 |

Average number of prisoners during the year about one-half.—The total number of prisoners was about 30, namely, 24 criminals (including drunkards) and 6 debtors.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

State of Crime at Renfrew.—There appears to be very little crime here. The most common offences are breaches of the peace, caused by drunkenness; but there are not many even of these. Most of the offences are committed by a few individuals of various ages, and who chiefly belong to the place.

Causes affecting Crime, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A good deal, and more than formerly. There was a temperance society, but it is broken up.

State of the Police.—Apparently efficient. There are three town-officers, and one of them (the gaoler) is generally on duty.

Condition of the People.—Not very good, and about the same as formerly. There is a good deal of pauperism, but there are no resident beggars, though there are many strange beggars, chiefly Irish. The principal occupation of the people is hand-loom weaving. There is no savings' bank.

Education.—More extended than formerly, and now general. It is believed that very few children are growing up without some amount of instruction, and that most of them are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic. It is believed, too, that most of the adults are able to read easily, and I was informed that there is, in fact, a good deal of reading among them, the subject-matter consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals, particularly Chambers' Journal. There is also a library for the working classes, supported by the subscriptions of the members, and containing some hundred volumes. The yearly subscription is two shillings, and there are about 60 members.

Popular Amusements.—There is a curling club, but, upon the whole, the people have few amusements, except reading.

PAISLEY, RENFREWSHIRE.

Population about 50,000.

(Visited 20th December 1836 and the three following days.)

Paisley.

The prison of Paisley is nearly new, having been built only 15 years. The cost, including that of the court-house and offices, and of the land also, was about 28,000*l.* Probably about one-half of this sum may be set down for the prison alone. The building stands on the outskirts of the town, and the site appears to be tolerably healthy, although it is rather too near the river. The plan of the prison, though defective in many particulars, is much better than that of most new prisons, and it will admit of the introduction of a good system of prison discipline, as indeed is already proved by what has been effected in that part of the prison which is called the bridewell, the arrangement of which differs but slightly from the other portion —the gaol. The prison is built entirely of stone, and in a substantial manner; and there is, therefore, little danger either of escape or of fire. Communication from without, too, might readily be prevented, although it is at present carried on to a considerable extent—that is, as respects the prisoners who were confined in the gaol.

There are altogether 43 cells and rooms in the bridewell, (arranged in four flats or stories,) and 34 in the gaol. The dimensions are as follows:—

There are also four small airing-yards, two to the bridewell and two to the gaol, but they are made little use of.

The whole of the prison is dry; but most of the rooms and cells are, at the present season of the year, cold; for, although there is a warm-air apparatus, it is often out of order, and is seldom used, and there are but few open fires. Most of the cells in the bridewell are kept tolerably well ventilated, but many of those in the gaol are close. The whole of the bridewell, too, I found perfectly clean; but no part of the gaol was more than tolerably clean, and some parts were dirty; and I learnt from the medical attendant that this is generally the case.

State of the Prisoners.—I found 35 prisoners in the bridewell (viz. 30 males and 5 females) and 38 in the gaol (viz. 31 males and 7 females). These numbers are somewhat greater than usual, the average number in each division of the prison being about 32. Several of the prisoners in the bridewell were dirty, and almost all those in the gaol were so. The prisoners in the bridewell are required to wash themselves only twice a-week, which, of course, is much too seldom, but the rule, such as it is, is enforced. The rule in the gaol is for the prisoners to wash themselves three times a-week, but this, like many other rules, appears to have been almost a dead letter.† In the gaol, too, the supply of soap, towels, and combs, seems to have been so scanty that if a prisoner had really wished to keep himself clean he would have found it difficult to attain his object. The bridewell is furnished with a bath, into which all prisoners go on their admittance; the gaol has no such provision; but the bath belonging to the bridewell would do for both the bridewell and gaol if the two were under the same management; and a similar observation is applicable to many other things.

Health.—The health of the prisoners, both in the bridewell and gaol, appears to be generally good, few remaining long enough in the gaol to be much affected by the want of cleanliness and the other circumstances tending to excite illness. The most common complaints, both in the bridewell and gaol, are venereal diseases, itch, and disorders of the bowels; and, in the gaol, slight fever also, arising from previous hard drinking, exposure to the cold, &c. There has been no epidemic in the prison for a considerable time. The only death last year was that of a man who fell and fractured his skull in attempting to escape from the bridewell. The average number of deaths in the bridewell is about one in two years; and in the gaol about one in three years.

Food.—The following are the rations in the bridewell:—

Breakfast.—Men, 8 oz. of oatmeal made into porridge
Women, 7 oz. ditto
Boys and girls, 6 oz. ditto
} And an imperial pint of butter-milk each.

Dinner.—The average allowance is four ounces of barley made into broth, (with a few vegetables,) and about six ounces of wheaten bread (second quality).

---

* Two of these three rooms might readily be converted each into four cells, and the other into three cells.

† It has now been directed that every prisoner shall wash himself every day, and as the prisoner's breakfast is made to depend on his obeying the regulation, there is little danger of his disregarding it.

Paisley.

The allowance for dinner varies, however, to some extent, with the age and sex of the prisoner, and the kind of work at which the prisoner is employed. On Sunday a little meat is mixed with the broth.

The daily cost of the food in the bridewell, including the expense of cooking, is about 2½*d.* per head.

The following are the rations in the gaol:—

Breakfast.—A choppin (English quart) of oatmeal-porridge, and a halfpenny-worth of milk.

Dinner.—A choppin of broth (containing barley, meat, and vegetables) and three halfpenny-worth of fine wheaten bread.

The food appears to be all of good quality, and to be sufficient in quantity; that of prisoners in the gaol, indeed, is certainly too good and too plentiful, especially when it is considered that these prisoners are generally allowed to receive additional supplies from friends without.—Debtors commonly receive 1*s.* per day, and they also are allowed to have additional supplies from without.

Bedding:—Bridewell.—A straw mattress, three single blankets, and a coverlet.

Gaol.—The prisoners here sleep two in a bed, and have, between them, a straw mattress and a number of blankets varying with the total number of prisoners, the stock being divided among them as far as it will go. At the time of my visit most of the beds were supplied with three single blankets.

The bed-clothes belonging to the bridewell were all very clean, and neatly arranged; but those in the gaol were dirty, and thrown together in a slovenly manner.

Discipline.—Good in the bridewell, but very bad in the gaol. The prisoners in the bridewell are all engaged in useful labour; and, during the day, at least, are all separate; although, for want of hammocks (which might be slung in the work-rooms), it is necessary for many of them to lie two in a cell during the night. But, in the gaol, there is constant idleness, and very few of the prisoners are in a state of insulation, even during the day. The time which the prisoners pass in bed is quite too great, even in the bridewell, but it is often double the proper time in the gaol. As regards instruction, too, both parts of the prison are faulty. In the bridewell, such of the prisoners as are unable to read receive a few lessons; but even these are given in so objectionable a manner (the prisoners being collected together) that little good can arise from them. In the gaol there is no instruction of any kind. In the bridewell there is a little library; but in the gaol there is none. Of the few offences that are committed in the bridewell the most common are calling to each other from neighbouring cells, and climbing up to the window. The usual punishment is the withdrawal of part of the food; and, in cases of refractory conduct, confinement in a dark cell, with the use of irons. This punishment, however, was not inflicted more than four times during the whole of last year. The common offences in the gaol are singing, and making other discordant noises, swearing, using abusive language, attempts to escape, getting things in at the window, and smoking tobacco. The usual punishment is the withdrawal of food, and sometimes a night's confinement in the dark cell.

The treatment of the prisoners appears to be kind, both in the bridewell and the gaol. I received complaints, indeed, from one prisoner in each, but these complaints were not supported by the other prisoners, or by my own observation, or by what I learned from other quarters.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer either in the bridewell or the gaol. The wife, indeed, of the keeper of the bridewell pays some attention to the female prisoners, but this is voluntary on her part, and not carried far. The females are, of course, always kept separate from the males in both parts of the prison; but, excepting that the females in the bridewell have rather less food than the males, no difference is made between the two classes.

Debtors.—There is only one debtor at the present time, and he, of course, is in the gaol. The average number of debtors in the year ending last October was seven. Debtors provde their own bedding and clothing. Visits from friends are freely allowed. They attend public worship.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners. Visits are allowed once a-month to prisoners in the bridewell, and once a-week to those in the gaol; and, when a person comes from a considerable distance to see a prisoner in the gaol, he is admitted, although it be not a regular day for visits. Letters may be received (after inspection), but no letters must be sent from the gaol, and none from the bridewell also, except under peculiar circumstances. This rule, however, is probably but little regarded by the prisoners in the gaol, who pay but little attention to another rule forbidding the use of tobacco in any form.—There are no means of sending prisoners back to their parishes after liberation. There is no insane prisoner.

Officers.—There are two officers to each part of the prison, namely, a keeper and a turnkey. The keeper of the bridewell appears to be an active, trustworthy, and intelligent man; and the present state of the bridewell, and the pecuniary results of his management during the three or four years that he has been in office, do him great credit. I have no sufficient means of judging of the effects of the discipline of the bridewell in reforming prisoners, but the same industry, order, and regularity, which diminish the expense of a prison, and which have been attended with a considerable saving in this particular case, tend greatly to the moral improvement of the prisoner. Here, however, as at the Glasgow bridewell, the evils of previous confinement in a disorderly gaol, and of a premature withdrawal from the bridewell itself, to say nothing of the insufficient provision for instruction of every kind, greatly endanger and impede the work of cure. The keeper of the gaol has the character of being a humane, well-meaning man, but he is quite too old, and must be too much wedded to his present habits and mode of management, ever to adopt a good system. The medical gentleman who attends the prison appears to perform his duties with regularity and success. There is no chaplain, but the ministers of the town attend in rotation to preach to the prisoners on Sunday.

Fees.—There are no fees which are paid by the prisoners, but the keeper of the gaol probably obtains a considerable profit by supplying the prisoners with food, &c., for which he is allowed 6*d.* a-day per head. The gaoler sells porter also to the prisoners, though at the present time (owing, probably, to the great reduction in the number of debtors) he is not, he says, selling more than a dozen bottles per week. There was, however, a considerable stock of bottles, some full and some empty, arranged in shop-like order, betokening a busy traffic either past or in expectation. It should be mentioned, however, that the gaoler's regular salary is only 45*l.* a-year, and that he has to provide a turnkey at his own expense.

Accounts :—Bridewell.—A register of imprisonments, and accounts of work and expenditure; all neatly kept.

Gaol.—A register of imprisonments, an account of the charges for food, and an account of disbursements. They are neatly kept; but the register of imprisonments is incomplete in some of the columns.

The following is an account of the expenditure of each part of the prison during the year 1835 (about an average year):—

Jurisdiction.—The bridewell is under the jurisdiction of commissioners appointed under the Act for building the prison. The gaol is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

---

State of Crime at Paisley.—There are but few serious offences; but there is a great deal of petty crime, consisting chiefly of embezzlements, petty thefts of various kinds, and drunken brawls. During the last 30 years, indeed, there appears to have been a great increase of petty offences, even allowing for the increase in population; but the number of serious offences appears to have diminished during the same time. The crimes of murder, highway robbery, and housebreaking attended with personal violence, for example, are less common than formerly, and are now, indeed, quite rare; but thefts generally (unaccompanied with personal violence) have much increased in number, and assaults have increased.

Paisley.

The following is an estimate of the criminal population of Paisley, made after an examination of the sergeant of police, checked by the statements of the procurator-fiscal for the burgh and the procurator-fiscal for the county:—About 200 young thieves, most of them being under 16 years of age; about 100 thieves, who are Irish; about 25 prostitutes, who are thieves (in addition to about 25, who are not supposed to be thieves); about 50 other women, (most of them old) who are thieves, but who are not prostitutes, at least not at the present time; and, lastly, about 20 young men, of a much worse description than any of the foregoing, who are looked upon as ready for the commission of great offences. There are also about 700 persons (of whom about 150 are women) who get into drunken brawls, but who do not steal. As a class, the offenders are distinguished for habits of drunkenness and for the want of education. (About one-third only of those sent to the bridewell are found able to read easily.) The parents of the thieves have most of them a character for recklessness, and many are themselves addicted to stealing. The exceptions are chiefly cases of widows. The juvenile thieves are most of them draw-boys (weavers' assistants). Many of the adult thieves call themselves labourers. They do jobbing work, but they have no regular occupation. Most of the serious offences are committed by strangers; but the other offences are chiefly committed by inhabitants.

Causes affecting Crime at Paisley, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—A great deal, and much increased of late years among the poorer classes, although much decreased among the richer classes. It is observed that females who become intoxicated do not thereby sink so low in the opinion of their neighbours as they used to do. Several temperance societies, however, have been established in Paisley, and the number of members has lately been increasing; the total being estimated at present at not less than 2,000.

State of the Police.—Tolerably efficient in detection, but not efficient in prevention.

Condition of the People.—Various. The industrious and sober part of the community of Paisley (a large class, happily) are considered to be in comfortable circumstances; more so, indeed, than at any past time; but there is a great class (containing many Irish) whose condition is very low,—lower, it is believed, than that of any class in this town 30 years ago. It is said that those who form this latter class are worse clad, and live upon less substantial and nutritious food, than any considerable portion of the people 30 years ago. Their houses, indeed, are said to be better, but it is affirmed that this difference is neutralized by the circumstance of the houses being more crowded now than formerly. One cause which acts unfavourably upon the people of Paisley is the uncertainty of the demand for their labour, arising from the changes in fashion; an expensive article of dress (silk shawls) forming an important branch of their manufacture. There are not many mills in Paisley, most of the work being done by hand-looms. Wages vary from 8*s.* to 20*s.* a-week. There is a savings' bank, but the amount of deposits is not more than about 4,000*l.* There is a great deal of pauperism and mendicity.

Education.—Great exertions are made in support of education; nevertheless very many children are growing up without partaking in the benefit, owing to the drunken and negligent habits of their parents. Of those who are receiving education many are learning reading, writing, and arithmetic, but there are many whose instruction is confined to reading. It is thought that about three-quarters of the adult population are able to read easily, and there appears to be a good deal of reading among them, the subject-matter consisting chiefly of newspapers and other cheap periodicals. There is a library for the working classes, supported by the subscriptions of the members, but I did not learn whether it flourishes or not; the yearly subscription is 6*s.* There is no mechanics' institution.

Popular Amusements.—There is no provision for rational popular amusements.

DUMFRIES.

Population about 12,000; or, including the adjoining burgh of Maxwelltown, about 15,500.
(Visited December 30th, 1836, and the six following days.)

Dumfries.

The prison of Dumfries was built about 30 years ago, and was formed partly out of the old Court-house. The site and construction are both bad. The building stands on low ground, and close to the side of a road which has been artificially raised to form a gradual ascent to a bridge over the river Nith. As may be expected under these circumstances, the lower part is damp, and communication with the street can easily be kept up, even from some of the highest cells. The prison consists of two separate buildings, one of which is called the Bridewell, though it has never been used as such. This Bridewell was the old Court-house, and is in the form of a semicircle, three tiers of small cells going round the arc. These cells have bars in front, and the whole has very much the appearance of a menagerie for wild beasts. Behind these cells, which are intended for use during the day, there are night-cells, and it is from these night-cells that communication with the street is carried on, and whisky got into the prison. There are altogether 40 cells in this part of the prison, viz. 19 day-cells, 19 night-cells, and 2 cells which may be used both by day and by night. The dimensions of these cells are as follow:—

| | No. | Length. ft. | in. | Breadth. ft. | in. | Height. ft. | in. | Cubical Content. ft. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Day Cells . | 19 each | 7 | 0 | 6 | 2 | from 6to 7 | 90 | about 300 |
| Night Cells . . | 19 each | 9 | 0 | 5 | 0 | from 6to 6 | 06 | about 280 |
| Day and Night Cells | 2 each | 12 | 0 | 6 | 0 | 7 | 0 | 500 |

Dumfries.

All these cells appear to be dry, but many of them are ill ventilated. There is no provision for warming more than the two larger cells, in each of which there is a fire-place.

The Bridewell part of the prison is but little used, although with a few alterations it might be made quite the best part of the prison, and made capable indeed of admitting a tolerably good system of prison discipline. In the other part of the prison there are only 14 rooms and cells altogether, viz. 8 cells for male criminals, 2 rooms for female criminals, and 4 rooms for debtors. The following are the dimensions :—

| | No. | Length. ft. | Length. in. | Breadth. ft. | Breadth. in. | Height. ft. | Height. in. | Cubical Content. ft. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Cells for Male Criminals | 8 each | 8 | 0 | 6 | 6 | 8 | 4 | 430 |
| Rooms for Female Criminals | 2 each | 14 | 6 | 14 | 6 | 8 | 3 | 1700 |
| Debtors' Rooms . . | 4 each, | from 14 | 0 | from 9 | 0 | 8 | 0 | |
| | | to 15 | 6 | to 13 | 0 | | | |

The females' rooms are damp, but the others are dry. The females' rooms and those for the debtors are warmed by open fires; the others by a warm air apparatus. The ventilation of the male criminals' cells is not sufficient; that of the other cells is moderately good. The cells occupied by the male criminals I found very dirty, and the females' apartments, though not dirty, were in a slovenly state; but the debtors' rooms were tolerably clean and neat. There are three other cells, which were originally intended probably for refractory prisoners, but they are so damp that they are never used.—There is an airing-yard.

With proper vigilance on the part of the keeper (which, as will be presently seen, has not been exercised), the prison would be tolerably secure. The last escape took place about a year ago, when two prisoners got away through an opening made for receiving stones into the prison-yard for breaking. About 16 years ago a prisoner named Haggart attacked and murdered one of the turnkeys, who had incautiously gone into that part of the building in which he was confined with the keys of the prison about him, and by this means effected his escape.

State of the Prisoners.—There were 34 prisoners at the time of my visit, which is about 10 more than the usual number. 30 of these (viz. 18 males and 12 females) were criminal prisoners, 3 were debtors (2 males and 1 female), and one (a male) was a revenue prisoner. Most of the criminal prisoners were very dirty, both in their persons and their clothes, and I learned from the surgeon that they have often vermin about them.

Health.—Generally good, although it usually falls off somewhat during the period of imprisonment. No diseases appear to be common, except those of ordinary occurrence elsewhere, which is surprising, considering the dirty state of the place, and the want of employment for the prisoners. There was no death last year, but two prisoners were removed to the town-infirmary on account of illness.

Food.—The prisoners have too much food, and some of it is of too good a quality. The allowance is as follows :—

Breakfast.—Two pints (imperial measure) of oatmeal porridge (containing about 8 ounces of meal), and about two-thirds of a pint of milk.

Dinner.—Two pints of broth (containing barley, vegetables, and meat), and a penny loaf of fine wheaten bread.

Supper.—The same as breakfast.

No difference is made between males and females, or between prisoners of different ages. —The allowance to debtors is generally a shilling a-day, paid in money. Additional supplies from without are allowed to all prisoners.

Bedding.—A chaff mattress (or a straw mat) and 3 single blankets. I found most of the bedding in a very dirty state.—No clothing supplied, except as an occasional present.

Discipline.—Except that prisoners committed by the burgh magistrates have lately been employed in breaking stones, there is nothing deserving the name of discipline. Indeed, the grossest irregularities had been going on in this prison with the connivance and indeed the participation of the gaoler for a long time previous to my visit; but, as the magistrates took immediate measures for displacing this man on my informing them what had occurred, it is perhaps unnecessary for me to make any further statement on the subject. A successor has been appointed, and is already in office, and he has the reputation of being a very respectable man.—So little has been done by way of separation, that I found a man and three females in the same cell. It was asserted, to be sure, that two of the females were the man's relations. This, if true, was not of course a justification of the matter; and even this palliative was not brought forward respecting the third female. The doors of the 8 cells for male criminals all open into a small narrow passage, and conversation throughout can be kept up with the greatest ease. Indeed, there are often two or three prisoners in the same cell. On my entrance I found all the prisoners singing. Punishment is seldom inflicted, whatever be the offence. When it is, it generally consists of putting the prisoner in irons.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made in the treatment of the females and the males.

Debtors.—Here, as everywhere else, the number of debtors has greatly fallen off. At present there are only three.—Debtors provide their own clothing and bedding.

Miscellaneous.—There is no difference in the treatment of tried and untried prisoners. Visits are nominally allowed only on an order from a magistrate, but the gaoler appears to have disregarded this rule systematically, and to have acted according to his own inclination. Letters, it was asserted, have been inspected. Smoking tobacco is contrary to the rules of the prison, but not contrary to the practice. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their place of abode. There is an old man who has been many years in the prison, and who is considered to be a mono-maniac; but there is no prisoner in a state of complete insanity. There was one indeed a few months ago, but he has been removed to the town infirmary.

SCOTLAND.

Dumfries.

Officers.—There are two officers, viz. a gaoler and a turnkey. After what has been said, it is unnecessary to speak of the gaoler's conduct or character. There is a surgeon who attends when sent for, and who appears to perform his duties well. There is also a chaplain, but his remuneration is so slender that he is unable to give much time to the prison. He attends about 5 hours per week, viz. about 3 hours on the Sunday (when he performs public worship), and one hour on two other days. Some of the chaplain's time is occasionally employed in teaching prisoners to read.

Fees.—The gaoler has a fee of half-a-crown, I believe, on the admission of every debtor, and the town-clerk has a fee varying from 2*s.* 6*d.* to 7*s.* on the discharge of each debtor. The first is received from the creditor, the latter from the debtor, and is looked upon as a payment to the town-clerk for his trouble in taking down an examination of the debtor on his making an application for aliment. No debtor, however, is ever detained more than an hour or two if he does not pay the town-clerk his fee.

Accounts.—The gaoler keeps a register of imprisonments, but it is not in a tabular form, and several particulars prescribed by the Act of Parliament are omitted. The chamberlain of the burgh and the collector for the county together keep an account of expenses.

The following is an account of the expenditure for the year ending 15th September, 1836:—(The amount is more than an average one by about one quarter.)

COUNTY OF DUMFRIES.

Population about 75,000.

County of Dumfries.

Prisons existing at present.—Six, viz. the County and Burgh Gaol at Dumfries, just described, a Burgh Gaol each at Annan, Sanquhar, and Lochmaban, and a Lock-up-house each at Langholm and Lockerby. I had not time to visit any except the one at Dumfries. I was informed, however, that the others are all small, and that most of them are bad.

Additional Prisons wanted.—Four (small ones), viz. one at Thornhill (population nearly 3000), one at Moffat (population nearly 3000), one at Ecclefichan (containing a population of about 1600, many of whom are disorderly), and one at Springfield, containing a small population, but requiring a prison from the circumstance of its being on the border.

General state of Crime in the Burgh and County of Dumfries.

There is a good deal of petty crime, but very little of a serious nature. The most common offences are thefts and petty assaults. All heinous offences have decreased in number, and are now indeed scarcely known, and there has been a decrease even of petty offences. Among the heinous offences which were of occasional occurrence 30 years ago, but which are now seldom or never heard of, may be mentioned murder, housebreaking with personal violence, highway-robbery, child-murder, horse-stealing, and forgery. Among the causes which have led to this gratifying improvement, are the greater demand for the labour of the lower classes (although there is still a want of profitable employment in the town of Dumfries), the cheapness of food, (partly arising from the late abundant harvests), the increased attention to education, the withdrawal of the temptations to smuggling and private distillation, the increased vigilance of the police, and the greater efficiency in the administration of justice.

County of Dumfries.

The following is an estimate of the criminal population of Dumfries, exclusive of that of Maxwelltown. From 20 to 25 prostitutes, most of whom steal also. From 20 to 30 lads, varying in age from 12 to 16, who steal. About 12 persons who get drunk and commit assaults, but who do not steal. And, lastly, about 10 strangers on an average (generally pretending to be hawkers, &c.), who commit thefts and get into drunken brawls. The usual age of the offenders both in the town and county is from 12 to 21. Most of them, except the very young, are addicted to drunkenness, and their parents are generally of bad character. Few of the offenders know a trade, or have any regular occupation. They belong to the poorest class; and about two-thirds of them are either Irish, or of Irish parentage, while the fractional part of the population of the county that is either Irish or of Irish parentage is not estimated at more than about one-fifteenth. The offenders, as a class, are much below others in the same rank of life in education and knowledge, though they are considered to be about equal to them in natural talent.

Causes affecting Crime in the Burgh and County of Dumfries, independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—Not a great deal, and much less than formerly, among all classes. As a mark of the decrease of drunkenness among the richer classes, I may mention that an elderly gentleman at Dumfries told me, that he remembered the time when it would have been considered an insult to the host for guests to have left the house sober.—There is a Temperance Society at Dumfries.

State of the Police.—Tolerable at Dumfries, but indifferent in the county at large. The number of officers on constant duty at Dumfries is seven.

Condition of the People.—Much improved during the last twenty years, and now generally good. There is still, however, a good deal of pauperism at Dumfries (arising chiefly from the influx of Irish), but very few beggars. Since the introduction of poor-rates, indeed, which took place lately, begging has not been allowed. In the county generally, however, there is a good deal of vagrancy and begging. The propriety of establishing a preventive police similar to that existing in Fife has lately been under consideration.—Agriculture is the staple occupation of the inhabitants of the county, though in the town of Dumfries there is a good deal of stocking-weaving. There is a savings'-bank at Dumfries containing between 5,000*l.* and 6,000*l.*, and there are several other small savings'-banks in different parts of the county.

Education.—At Dumfries education appears to be cheap, comparatively good, and general; and the same, though in a less degree, appears to be the case all over the county. The number of children growing up at Dumfries without any education is estimated at less than 100. It is believed that most of the adult population are able to read easily, and an adult school has lately been opened for those who have not the power. It is stated also that there is in fact a good deal of reading among the people, consisting chiefly of cheap periodicals, especially Chambers' Journal, the Penny Magazine, and the Christian Herald. There is a library for the working classes belonging to the Mechanics' Institution at Dumfries, and there are several others connected with the different churches. There are also many village libraries. There is a Mechanics' Institution at Dumfries, as already mentioned, but it is not in a flourishing state.

Popular Amusements.—There are but few amusements in summer, but in winter all classes repair to the ice to join in the game of curling, and I was much gratified at witnessing the harmony and friendly feeling with which people in very different grades of society unite in this game, and that without any loss of respect among the poorer people towards those who are richer and better educated than themselves.

MAXWELLTOWN, STEWARTRY OF KIRKCUDBRIGHT.

Population about 3,500.

(Visited January 2nd, 1837.)

Maxwelltown

Maxwelltown, though forming a burgh of itself, and in a different county from Dumfries, is essentially a part of the latter town, being separated from it only by the river Nith, which is crossed by a bridge. Formerly the existence of separate jurisdictions in these two places often afforded the means of escape to criminals, for till of late years there was nothing like an effective police in Maxwelltown, and the moment a man had got across the bridge he could laugh at the Dumfries officers. While this state of things existed, the most serious crimes were often committed with impunity. This great evil, however, is now put an end to, there being rather an active police in Maxwelltown, and a strong lock-up-house. Great inconvenience, however, and unnecessary expense are still caused by this artificial separation of two places intended to be in close union with each other. With the prison of Dumfries within a furlong of the burgh, and with a sheriff-substitute at hand to administer justice, and a procurator-fiscal to make the preliminary investigation, persons even on trifling charges are sent to Kirkcudbright, a distance of 27 miles (and witnesses must of course be also sent to substantiate the charges), and the consequence is, that a trial which under proper regulations would not cost more than a few shillings, often costs 10*l.*

The prison of Maxwelltown is a small building, erected about 25 years ago, and standing at a corner of the main street in the middle of the burgh. The ground about it is very flat, which in the absence of under-drains causes the prison to be rather damp. It is however in contemplation to open a drain, and make some other improvements. There are five cells, and they are each 8 feet 9 inches long, 6 feet 3 inches broad, and 9 feet high. Their cubical contents therefore is about 500 feet. Two of them are warmed by open fires, but the others not at all, and these latter are cold. None of the cells are well ventilated, but I found them tolerably clean. There has hitherto been no escape, and the place appears to be tolerably secure, although a prisoner can communicate with people on the outside. It is however proposed to build a wall to prevent this, and to enclose a small area to be used as an airing-ground, and as a place also where the prisoners can be sent to break stones or do other work.

There was no prisoner at the time of my visit. I was informed, however, that on an average there are about 3 prisoners. I was informed that the prisoners generally enjoy good health; indeed, most of them remain in too short a time to have their health much affected in any way. Their food usually consists of oatmeal porridge and bread, and generally costs about 3*d.* a-day. Additional supplies from without are sometimes allowed, but not always.

Bedding.—Loose straw, and 3 or 4 blankets. No clothing is allowed, except in cases of great need.

Discipline.—None, there being no labour of any kind. Separation, however, is enforced, as far as the accommodation of the prison will allow. There is no instruction. The usual offences are making noises, breaking the furniture of the cell and the windows (generally done by those prisoners only who are put in while drunk), and communicating with people on the outside. This latter irregularity has in several instances been the means of preventing conviction at trial. The treatment of the prisoners is apparently too indulgent.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, but the gaoler's wife generally looks after the females.

Debtors.—None received into the prison.

Miscellaneous.—There is no difference in the treatment of tried and untried prisoners. Visits are allowed with leave from a magistrate. Letters are inspected. Snuff-taking is allowed, and in some cases smoking tobacco also.

Officer.—The gaoler is also the principal police-officer in Maxwelltown, and for the two appointments he receives only 15*l.* a-year, and the use of a room in the prison. The man appears to be much better qualified for his situation than could be expected for so small a remuneration.

---

Jurisdiction—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of Maxwelltown.

State of Crime at Maxwelltown.—There is still a great deal of petty crime, though now but few serious offences. Housebreaking, attended with personal violence, for example, which used to be common, is now of rare occurrence.—The most common offences at the present time are thefts and drunken brawls. The following is an estimated enumeration of the habitual offenders in Maxwelltown. One public prostitute; about ten young thieves (lads), from 10 to 16 years old; six bad families; about a dozen more people of different ages who steal; and about twelve more who get into drunken brawls, but who do not steal. Most of the offenders, except the very young, are in habits of drunkenness. Few of them have a knowledge of a trade, or have any regular occupation. Their parents are often of bad, or at least of loose and dissipated character. The offenders are found to be less educated than the generality of others in the same class of life, but they are not considered to be deficient in natural intelligence. Many of them are Irish who have obtained settlements in Maxwelltown.

The causes affecting crime at Maxwelltown, independent of prison discipline, are much the same as in Dumfries, except that the people are poorer, that there is less reading among them, and that the police is less efficient.

EDINBURGH GAOL.

(Visited several different times, but particularly on the 7th and 8th November, 1836.)

Edinburgh Gaol.

This prison stands on the city side of the Calton Hill, and the enclosure, which is of small extent, is bounded on one side by the Haddington road, on another by the wall of the Bridewell, and on the two other sides by houses and other private property. The rock which forms the hill serves as the foundation of the building. The gaol is almost new, having been built about 20 years. The cost, including that of the governor's house, which, though detached from the gaol is within the enclosure, was upwards of 20,000*l.*. Yet notwithstanding this large expenditure, few of the legitimate objects of a prison have been attained. The city has been decorated with a fine building (much too fine, indeed, considering its use), but no place has been provided which can afford any hope of amending the persons confined in it, or even of preventing their farther corruption. Much of this error is to be attributed to the general ignorance on the subject of prisons 20 years ago, but much, I have little doubt, may also be traced to the desire for architectural display, which, while it adds greatly to the expense of a prison, always entails a sacrifice of the internal arrangements. And this desire to have a fine building partly proceeds from and partly gives rise to another error (at least so it appears to me), namely, the custom of building prisons in conspicuous situations and within towns, instead of in retired places, and apart from other buildings, where land is cheap, where communication from the outer world can easily be cut off, and where by the erection of a habitation for offenders the idea of crime is not constantly suggested to the public mind.

The gaol contains 7 day-rooms, 54 night-cells for criminals, 3 night-cells for debtors, and 4 cells for refractory prisoners. There are 7 airing yards.

There are no effectual means of separation even for a small number of prisoners, for communication can readily be kept up even between the night-cells; and the number of these cells is so small, compared with the number of prisoners, that on an average each cell must receive three prisoners. Out of many of the windows, too, the prisoners can talk to people on the Calton Hill. Under these circumstances, sentences of solitary confinement, which are not unfrequently passed, become little better than a farce. There are, too, no sufficient means of watching the prisoners, and it would be very difficult to set them to work.

The prison appears to be tolerably secure. The only instance of escape happened a few months ago, and was on the part of a prisoner who was assisting in putting up some window lines in the governor's house. Being a sailor, and expert in the use of ropes, he seized hold of the line when the attention of the other workman was withdrawn, and swinging over the prison wall, let himself down on the outside. He was captured again, however, in a few hours.

The prison is under-drained, and is generally dry. In very damp weather, however, moisture sometimes exudes from the stone walls and floors; and I was told that the night-cells are often damp, owing to the frequency with which they are washed. The day-rooms are warmed by open fires; but there are no means of warming the night-cells, and prisoners confined in them in the day time, as well as at night, suffer much from cold; the more so, because they have no work to afford them exercise. The ventilation has been improved lately, in consequence of a fever having broken out last year among the females, which was attributed, in part, to the closeness of their cells. The ventilation, however, is still but indifferent, and depends too much on the will and attention of the prisoners themselves. In one of the females' wards, too, there is an offensive smell, proceeding from the privy which stands at the foot of the stairs, and which is ill-constructed.* I found the whole of the prison clean.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the city.

State of the Prisoners.—There were 139 prisoners at the time of my visit; namely,—130 criminals, 2 revenue prisoners, and 7 debtors, (90 of the prisoners males, and 49 females). The average number is about 145; which is less than it was two or three years ago, owing to the decrease in the number of debtors. Most of the prisoners appeared to be tolerably clean; many of them, indeed, quite clean; but I found, in the course of my private examination of some of them, that the means taken for enforcing cleanliness are insufficient, and that prisoners occasionally pass the whole day without washing themselves. Some of the prisoners were unwell, but most of them seemed to be in good health.

General Health.—Indifferent. Those who have been used to the open air, and to a good deal of exercise, generally fall off. The most prevalent diseases are bowel complaints (diarrhœa and constipation), and catarrhs, often brought on, it is supposed, by the change of diet and the loss of exercise; and, as respects those confined in the night-cells, by the loss of fresh air also. As already mentioned, a fever broke out in the females' wards last year, owing, the surgeon thinks, in a considerable degree, to the close and crowded state of the cells. Ten prisoners were attacked, and 4 died. Since that time some of the cells hitherto used by male prisoners have been appropriated to females; and the ventilation of the females' cells has been somewhat improved. There were altogether 5 deaths last year; but the average number of deaths is not more than 2. The average number of prisoners ill at one time is believed to be about 8; but as no sick-list has been kept, it is not possible to give this number with certainty. A small infirmary has been erected within the last few months, apart from the main building. It consists of two rooms, each warmed with a stove, and furnished with a water-stool. The place has not, however, yet been used, there not having been any case of serious illness since it was built. Formerly the upper rooms at each end of the principal building were used as infirmaries; but they are no longer reserved for this purpose.

Food.—The food is too good in quality, and probably too abundant in quantity, when compared with the fare of the poorest class of honest people in Edinburgh. Indeed, the quantity appears to be too great even for health. The allowance is as follows:—

> Breakfast.—One-third of a pound of oatmeal made into a quart of porridge, with a tenth of a gallon of skim milk.
> Dinner.—A quart of broth (containing 4 ounces of barley, and 2½ ounces of beef), and a small loaf of fine wheaten bread, weighing about 5¾ ounces.
> On Saturday, in lieu of the broth, each prisoner receives 4 ounces of cheese, "equal in quality to soft Kanter or Dutch old milk cheese," and a pint of beer.
> Supper.—The same as breakfast.

Salt and vegetables are supplied, in addition to the foregoing, "in sufficient quantities to render the food agreeable." And lastly, each prisoner receives a halfpenny a-day in money, given, till lately, avowedly for the purchase of tobacco! And although this application of the money is now forbidden, the purchase of other luxuries, such as ale, coffee, rolls, &c. is permitted. A man attends the prison daily to supply the nice appetites of its idle inmates.

The cost of the food, including the expense of cooking, is about 3½*d.* a-day, exclusive of the halfpenny paid in money, making in the whole 4*d.* a-day, or 2*s.* 4*d.* a-week; which is rather more than one and a half the cost of the food at the Glasgow Bridewell, although the prisoners enjoy better health there than in the Edinburgh Gaol.

It should be remarked, too, that untried prisoners, in addition to the prison allowance, are permitted to receive supplies of food from without; and that, as the untried prisoners are mixed with the tried, these, also, probably succeed occasionally in getting similar supplies.

The usual allowance to debtors, is from 8*d.* to 1*s.* a-day, paid in money.

Clothing.—None is allowed except in cases of destitution. A circumstance which took place only a few days before my last visit, shews one of the evils arising from the custom of prisoners wearing their ordinary clothes in gaol, instead of a prison dress. Goodwin, the man who made his escape lately from an officer who was taking him to Appleby, having committed a new robbery at Leith, was apprehended and brought to the gaol at Edinburgh. His person was examined on his admission, and it was believed he had nothing about him. A day or two afterwards, however, he told the governor that he had lost a sovereign, and added that he felt sure one of the prisoners had stolen it. In answer to the inquiry where he had concealed the coin, he replied that he had sewed it in the flap of his trousers-pocket. A search having been made, the money was found; and on further examination, it appeared that the sovereign had dropped out when Goodwin was washing himself, and that one of his fellow-prisoners, a boy, had picked it up. The case, however, does not end even here. It appearing that Goodwin had committed many robberies at Glasgow, he was sent there to undergo his trial, instead of being tried for the single robbery at Leith. On a second examination of his person and clothes being made, at Glasgow, some keys and files were found, which he must have had about him during the whole time he was in the Edinburgh Gaol. What a third examination would bring forth I cannot say, but as the prisoner, though still quite young, has shewn himself well skilled in his criminal arts, it is very possible that he has at this moment something in his possession which has escaped the vigilance of all the searchers. On leaving the Edinburgh Gaol, he received such portion of the sovereign which had been lost, and found again, as he had not been allowed to expend, consisting of a half-sovereign and some silver. This money was taken from him on entering the Glasgow Gaol; but in the midst of some business that was going on while the money was lying on the table, he snatched up the half-sovereign and swallowed it!—saying that he should get it again in the morning!

Another evil arising from the custom of prisoners wearing their own clothing, is the difficulty of keeping their linen clean, in consequence of the dirty state of their outer garments. This not having occurred to me, I was puzzled to account for the black colour of the shirt of one of the prisoners, for I could not conceive by what means he could possibly give it such a dark hue, even supposing that he had tried his best to effect so laudable a purpose.

Bedding.—A straw mattress and pillow, 3 single blankets and a coverlet. The bedclothes are not washed at any stated times (indeed it is difficult to lay down a rule in this matter), but they all looked tolerably clean.

Discipline.—There is nothing meriting the name. The prisoners pass their time in idleness and in each other's vicious society. They get up at 6 o'clock in summer, but not before sun-rise in winter, and they go to their night-cells half an hour before sun-set all the year round; so that they pass a great deal too much time in bed. The usual prison offences are, making noises, quarrelling, stealing from each other, and communicating with persons outside the prison. The ordinary punishments are the withdrawal of part of the allowance of food, and confinement in a sleeping-cell or dark-cell. A prisoner is punished for an act of mischief by the loss for some days of the halfpence already spoken of. A schoolmaster attends about 3 hours each day (except Sundays) to teach the boys reading; and the chaplain attends daily, about the same time, to give religious instruction to the prisoners, and on Sunday to perform divine service. The chaplain states that his power of producing an effect on the mind of a prisoner is much weakened by want of the opportunity of addressing him when quite removed from his companions.

Female Prisoners.—One of the few redeeming features in this gaol, is a provision for female, superintendence. The only officer, however, paid out of the prison funds is a matron; but the Ladies' Society for Visiting Female Prisoners kindly take upon themselves the cost of a female assistant.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Edinburgh Gaol.

Debtors.—Here, as at all the other prisons I have visited, the number of debtors is fast decreasing, owing, in part, to the changes that have lately taken place in the law, and in part, it is to be hoped, to the improved condition of the country. The average number of debtors in this gaol is now only 12. Two or three years ago it was 20. At the present moment there are only 7 debtors. Debtors find their own clothing, but not their own bedding, unless they prefer doing so, which few do. They are freely allowed to receive visits from their friends during 4 hours of each day, and they may have additional supplies of food from without. The attendance of debtors at public worship is not compulsory, and they do not attend regularly. At one of my visits I found a party of the debtors engaged in a game at cards.

Miscellaneous.—Untried prisoners are allowed to receive additional supplies of food from without, and their friends may come to see them without an order from a magistrate. Smoking tobacco is allowed among the debtors, but not among the criminals. There is no regular provision for enabling prisoners to return to their homes on liberation, but the means are generally afforded by private charity. There is no prisoner who is actually insane, at the present time, but there is a man (he who made his escape lately and was retaken) who was committed five years ago on the ground of insanity, under an order of confinement until he could obtain sureties in 100*l.* to keep the peace. In what was supposed to be a fit of temporary madness (brought on by hard drinking) he had killed his own child! Since he was sent to prison, however, (where it is to be hoped he will be kept for the remainder of his life,) he has not evinced any symptom of mental derangement.

Officers.—A governor, matron, chaplain, surgeon, schoolmaster, clerk, 5 male turnkeys, a female turnkey, a porter, and a watchman. It is difficult to speak of the qualifications of the officers, owing to the bad system under which they act, and which is capable only of very partial remedy, in consequence of the bad construction of the building. The governor has long been alive to the formidable evils existing in the gaol, but there are many which he would be unable to remedy. As far as I have the means of judging, all the officers perform their duties about as well as can reasonably be expected.

Fees.—Every imprisoning creditor has to pay 2½ per cent. on the amount of the debt to the city funds, as some compensation for the expense of finding accommodation for the debtor, and for being liable for his safe custody. Every debtor applying for aliment has to pay 4*s.* to the clerk for drawing up the petition, and 5*s.* more in fees to other officers for serving the order, &c.; and he has also to pay a fee on liberation, varying from 1*s.* to 5*s.*, according to the amount of the debt. It is contrary to the regulations of the prison for any officer to sell food, &c. to the prisoners, but at my last visit I found that one of the turnkeys was acting for the man whose daily visits have been mentioned, and who was himself unwell. Some of the prisoners are employed as wardsmen, and are paid each 1*s.* a-week, in money.

General Observations.—It is scarcely possible that any one can be placed in this gaol without becoming worse. The number of recommitments is great, but the records do not shew how great, as no sufficient entry has hitherto been made of those who are convicted on summary processes.

Accounts.—The following is a list of the accounts:—

Relating to Debtors.

1st. Entry Book, containing the names of the creditor and debtor, and the sum for which the latter is incarcerated.

2nd. A detailed record of the particulars of the warrant, &c.

3rd. Aliment Book.

Relating to Criminals.

1st. Daily Entry Book, in which the names of all criminals are entered as they arrive.

2nd Record of Prisoners committed for Trial, containing a description of their persons, their trade, day of their birth, crime for which committed, place of offence, the judge by whom committed, date of trial, and how disposed of.

3rd. Aliment and Diet Book, containing the names of the prisoners and kind of warrant, the period in prison, and the number of rations chargeable to the city, county, and other places respectively.

4th. Daily State Book, containing the number of debtors and criminals, distinguishing males from females.

5th. Journal of Prison Offences and Punishments.

6th. Record of Transported Convicts, containing duplicates of returns made from time to time to the Home Office, &c.

The different accounts are kept with great neatness, and apparently with accuracy. The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year 1835. (This abstract includes the expenses of the lock-up-house, which, though at a considerable distance from the gaol, is considered a branch of it.)

| Total, exclusive of the Aliment of Debtors and revenue Prisoners | | | | £2045 | 10 | 6½ |

Average number of prisoners during the year—criminals 155 (including 29 in the lock-up-house): revenue prisoners 3; debtors 21. Total 179.

Average cost of each prisoner during the year, about 12*l.* 10*s.* Daily cost about 8*d.*

Usual state of the Prisoners when they enter the Gaol.—Most of them are between 15 and 35 years old. The prisoners are distinguished for habits of drunkenness and dissipation; many of them being habitual drunkards, and at least 3 in every 4 having been under the excitement of liquor when they committed their offences. About 1 in 4 of the females, and about 1 in 6 of the males, are found able to read easily. Little is known of the parents of adult offenders, but those of young thieves are generally known to be of bad character. The following is an example:—A few days before I inspected the gaol, the schoolmaster was expressing a hope to one of his scholars—a young thief—that when he left prison this time, he would conduct himself as an honest boy, and not get to stealing again. Another lad, however, a member of the class, interrupted him with, "Please, Sir, do you know what his mother said to him?" and the schoolmaster, on replying in the negative, learnt that the boy's mother had come to see him the day before, and had advised him "to pay them out for putting him in prison," by committing fresh thefts as soon as he was at liberty again. The truth of this statement was confirmed by many of the other boys who were present. It is an example not only of the bad character of the parents of criminals, but of the danger of allowing visits to prisoners.—The prisoners in the Edinburgh Gaol, while they are considered below others in the same class of life in education, are believed to be equal to them in intelligence. Most of them are inhabitants either of the city of Edinburgh or of the county.

Lock-up-House.

This small prison is behind the Parliament House. It is used chiefly for prisoners under examination, and for those who are sentenced to short periods of imprisonment by the Police Court. As cells have been made in the new County Buildings (although not yet completed) to be used in lieu of this lock-up-house, which is to be pulled down, to make room for the advocate's library, a minute description of it is not necessary. It has most of the faults of a prison of the ordinary construction and management—some of them it has in a high degree—and can, in fact, be regarded as little better than a moral pest-house; the young and old in crime being crowded together in idleness and corruption. The average number of prisoners is 29, and there are only 8 cells altogether, with no airing yard. The place appears to be secure, but that, under the circumstances of the case, is a doubtful advantage. There are no means of warming the cells, and the keeper says they are often very cold, and that in wet weather the walls and floors are damp. The ventilation is moderately good, but the drain from the privy being in a bad state, at the time of my visit, there was a stench from it in all the cells. The prison was tolerably clean, but the prisoners themselves (33 as to number) were many of them dirty. The keeper, who resides in the house, appears to be an intelligent and active man.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of Edinburgh.

EDINBURGH BRIDEWELL.

Visited at different times, but particularly on the 10th and 11th of January. 1837.

Edinburgh Bridewell.

The site of the Edinburgh Bridewell is nearly the same as that of the Gaol already described; the two buildings, indeed, are close together, and might easily be mistaken for parts of the same. The bridewell, however, was built about twenty years before the goal, and is now about forty years old. It cost between 11,000*l.* and 12,000*l.*, and the land occupied is about an acre and a quarter. The general form of the building is semicircular, and in the centre there is a tower with narrow windows like loop-holes, commanding a view of the cells, which are ranged round the arc in four tiers, each tier containing thirteen cells. There are thus 52 cells in the whole, and these are all that are regularly used during the day; and as the average number of prisoners is about 180, there are generally from two to four prisoners in each cell. All these cells are 15 feet long, and most of them are 8½ feet in average breadth, and 8 feet 3 inches high. Behind these working-cells are the sleeping-cells, with passages intervening. The sleeping-cells are much smaller than the working-cells, but there are many more of them, the whole number being 129. 78 of these cells are each 7 feet long, 6 feet broad, and 8 feet 3 inches high, and they contain, therefore, only 350 cubic feet each. The others are somewhat larger, but the largest, excepting three, are not more than 9 feet long, 6½ feet broad, 8 feet 3 inches high, and 485 feet in cubical content. There are also two dark cells for refractory prisoners of the size of these latter cells; and a new wing has just been put up (but not yet brought into use) containing 20 cells, each 8½ feet long, 6½ broad, and 9 feet high, and having a cubical content of about 500 feet. There is an airing yard, but it is seldom used except in summer, and then for females only. The whole of the prison is dry. Most of it is warmed by a warm-air apparatus. The ventilation of the day-cells appears to be tolerably good, but that of the night-cells is insufficient. I found the whole of the prison clean, and I have no doubt it is always kept so. The place appears to be secure also, no instance of escape having occurred for five years. The last escape was effected by a man who pretended to be dying. He succeeded in imposing on the gentleman who then acted as surgeon, and he got his permission to have his cell-door left open during the night, on pretence of enabling the nurse to pass readily backwards and forwards. Availing himself of this arrangement, he got out of his cell and made his way through the roof of the prison.

State of the Prisoners.—There were 160 prisoners at the time of my visit,—namely, 97 males, and 63 females. The ordinary average is about 20 less than this number, and this average is 20 or 30 less than was the average two or three years ago. The prisoners looked cleaner than almost any body of prisoners I have examined, though they wash themselves only once a-day, and then do not wash more than their hands and face. Once a-week, however, every prisoner goes into the bath, and then he gets a thorough cleansing.

Health.—Generally good. Some of those confined for long periods, indeed, fall off in health, especially such as have been accustomed to a country life, but the majority leave the prison in at least as good health as when they entered it. Although there have been two or three epidemics in Edinburgh during the last year, none of them have appeared in this prison. The diseases which most prevail are slight fever, inflammation of different kinds, rheumatism, itch, ringworm, syphilis, and catarrh. Three prisoners died last year, and 6 died in 1835. In each year, also, two or three children died, who were the infants of female prisoners. The number of deaths is augmented by the circumstance of sick convicts, (whose constitutions are too much broken up to make it worth while to incur the expense of transportation) being sometimes sent to the Edinburgh Bridewell with every prospect of their dying there. There are two infirmaries, one for males, and one for females; the first consisting of five rooms, all small ones, and the second of nine rooms, some small and some large.

Food.—The rations are as follow:—

> Breakfast.—Five and a half ounces of oatmeal made into porridge, and half an imperial pint of small beer.
>
> Dinner.—Half a gallon of broth (containing four ounces of barley, with vegetables), and on two days of the week half a pound of ox-head. On four days of the week, also, each prisoner receives a wheaten cake, weighing about 6 ounces. On Saturday, a quarter of a pound of cheese and a pint of beer are given, in lieu of the broth.
> Supper.—The same as for breakfast, except that no beer is given.

The foregoing rations are allowed to all prisoners, whether males or females, children or adults. Prisoners, whose labour is particularly productive, receive 12 ounces of bread every day, instead of 6 ounces on 4 days of the week only. The food is all plain, but is sufficiently good. Its cost, including the expense of cooking, (and allowing for the wear of cooking utensils, the value of the matron's time in superintending, &c.) is about 2½*d.* a-day for each prisoner—the same as at the Glasgow Bridewell. The quantity of food, while it is not excessive, appears to be sufficient for health, and is as great, it is believed, as that obtained by many honest poor in Edinburgh. Additional supplies from without are not allowed.

Bedding.—A straw mattress, two single blankets (except in summer, when there is only one), two sheets, and a woollen coverlet. The bedding appears to be sufficient, for I received no complaint about it. I found it also very clean, as indeed was everything in the prison.

Clothing.—This is one of the few prisons in the country in which the inmates are all supplied with clothes, the bridewell of Aberdeen being, I believe, the only other prison. Here, as at Aberdeen, the clothing is just what it should be; strong, plain, sufficiently warm, and without any party colours or other badges which serve to keep the idea of crime and disgrace constantly before the prisoner's mind. The articles of dress are as follow:—

> Males.—Jacket and trousers of strong grey cloth, a coarse linen shirt, list shoes, and a night-cap; and in winter coarse woollen stockings also.
> Females.—A coarse linen shift, apron, and cap, a woollen petticoat, a gown made of drugget, and list shoes; and in winter coarse woollen stockings also.

Stockings are also allowed in summer to the few prisoners for whom the surgeon thinks them necessary, and additional clothing of other kinds is given in peculiar cases.

The cost of the clothing, including the value of the labour expended on the raw material, in the prison, and the labour of making the clothes, is not more than about 10*s.* per head per annum; the total cost of the prisoners' clothing in the year 1835 (about an average one in this respect), being about 100*l.*, and the average number of prisoners in the same year being rather more than 200. Little as this expense is, it is somewhat greater than that incurred for clothing at Aberdeen, where the average cost per head does not exceed 8*s.* a-year.

Discipline.—Owing chiefly to the want of complete separation among the prisoners, the discipline is far from perfect, although it is much better than in most other prisons in Scotland. The difficulty of enforcing good discipline is increased not only by the want of the means of 883

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Edinburgh Bridewell.

separating the prisoners, but by the want of good means of inspecting them, and by the circumstance of the prisoners being, to a considerable extent, themselves employed as officers. The means of inspection might readily be increased by making inspection holes in the cell doors. The tower from which the prisoners are at present watched, is so distant that it is difficult to detect an offender even when the officer on the look out is aware that an offence is being committed. Moreover in the evening when there are lights in the tower, a person looking from it can himself be seen, and this is the case indeed, though in a less degree, during the day.—The average time of labour is about nine hours a-day; and, strange to say, those work least whose labour is least productive. This arises from the circumstance of the work of such prisoners not being equal in value to the light they would consume if they were supplied with gas, &c. in the evening. The prisoners in the Edinburgh bridewell earn much less than those in the Glasgow bridewell, owing to a variety of circumstances, the chief of which are the superiority of Glasgow as a market for labour, the greater scale of the Glasgow bridewell, the greater industry of prisoners when they are alone than when they are together, and the circumstance that more of the prisoners in the Glasgow bridewell are found to have learned some trade before they come in, than is the case at Edinburgh. On the other hand, the Edinburgh bridewell has, I believe, the advantage in the length of the periods of imprisonment, the average at the Glasgow bridewell being only about 60 days. The average value of the labour of a prisoner in the Edinburgh bridewell is between 2*l.* and 3*l.*—last year nearly 3*l.* The same average in the Glasgow bridewell is between 5*l.* and 6*l.* The common kinds of work in the Edinburgh bridewell are weaving, spinning, knitting, making list shoes, sewing, and picking oakum, cotton, &c. When possible a prisoner is employed at that kind of work to which he has been accustomed. This of course is the case with tailors, shoemakers, &c.; but among others engaged at their own trade, I found a bookbinder, who was busily at work binding and repairing the books belonging to the prison. A treadmill was at work till lately, which was turned to no better use than flapping the air; a new treadmill, however, has now been constructed, the power of which has already been let for five years at the rate of 70*l.* a-year. It will employ about 24 men. This treadmill is the only one in Scotland; there is no crank labour at any other prison.

The prisoners rise at six in summer, and as soon as it becomes light in winter. Such as work in the evening, go to bed at 9 o'clock throughout the year, and in summer the others also go to bed at this hour, but in winter the latter go to bed at nightfall. Thus all the prisoners pass too much time in bed, and many, a great deal too much. There is a schoolmaster (who is also chaplain) who gives the younger prisoners instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic. He attends for this purpose during four hours of five days in the week, and he gives another hour on each of these days (with two hours on Saturday and four hours on Sunday) to religious exercises and the performance of Divine worship. The prisoners are supplied with bibles and religious tracts. They have also the use of a library containing about 450 volumes, consisting mostly, but not exclusively, of religious works. All the books I saw in use were unusually clean.

Offences and Punishments.—The ordinary offences are being idle, calling to one another, and making noises. The usual punishment is the withdrawal of part of the allowance of food; but in cases of great misconduct the offender is put into a dark cell. There is no flogging or corporal punishment of any kind. I received no complaint of unkind treatment, and I do not think there can be ground for any. All the prisoners I examined considered their work an alleviation of their punishment: as the treadmill however was not in use, and had not been so for a considerable time, I was not able to learn in what light that kind of labour is regarded.

Female Prisoners.—These are under the general superintendence of a matron, assisted by a female officer. Much of the time of both, however, is employed in directing the cooking, washing, and cleaning. I never indeed met either of them in the female wards. The immediate charge of these wards, indeed, is in the hands of female prisoners, called wardswomen. The females' day-cells, too, like the males', are open to inspection from the tower, and the male turnkeys go into them frequently. The male turnkeys, however, have nothing to do with locking up the female prisoners in their night-cells, or with the unlocking in the morning. This is done partly by the under housekeeper (the matron's assistant is so called), and partly by the wardswomen.—No difference is made in the treatment of females and males.

Miscellaneous—Visits are allowed from persons who are not known to be of bad character, on an order from a magistrate. Letters are inspected by the governor. Tobacco in every form is prohibited. There is no regular provision for sending prisoners back to their parishes, but occasional assistance is given. There is no insane prisoner at present.

Officers.—There are twelve officers, namely, the governor, matron, surgeon, chaplain, clerk, five male turnkeys, a female assistant, and a night watchman. The governor is evidently well qualified for his situation; he has decision of character, combined with kind and gentlemanly manners. I had, of course, but few means of judging of the qualifications of the other officers, but I believe they all fill their posts well. The surgeon or his assistant attends daily, and once a month he makes a complete inspection of all the prisoners—a good rule, which it would be well to introduce generally.

Fees.—There are no fees of any kind.

Accounts.—The accounts are very numerous, and are kept with neatness and precision. Their complexity is enhanced by the circumstance of the expenses of different prisoners being defrayed by different bodies; thus some of the prisoners are paid for by the county, some by the city, others by the Police Commissioners, and others again (namely, those tried by the High Court of Justiciary), are paid for out of the public Exchequer. Military prisoners, too, (of whom there are generally from 20 to 30) are paid for by the War Department; and, lastly, there are a few revenue prisoners, paid for (when the trouble of making the application is taken) by the Board of Excise, or Board of Customs, as the case may be. The charges to the latter bodies are of a simple kind, but those made to the county, city, and police depend, in part, on many matters of detail.

The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year 1835; (about an average year) :—

(Of this sum 333*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* was received by the Crown agent for prisoners sentenced by the Justiciary Court, and 198*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* by the War Office for military prisoners. The remainder 878*l.* 1*s.* 6¼*d.* was paid partly by the county, partly by the city, and partly by the Commissioners of the Edinburgh Police.)

Average number of prisoners during the year, 205. (117 males and 87 females).

Gross average cost of each prisoner during the year, about 9*l.* 6*s.*

Average cost of each prisoner, deducting the money received for his labour, about 7*l.*—Daily cost, about 4½*d.*

General Observations.—The Edinburgh house of correction, though very imperfect in its construction, is certainly on a better plan than any prison in Scotland, built so long ago as forty years; and with some minor alterations it may, I think, be so far improved as to become suitable for a moderately-good system of discipline.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of Commissioners appointed under a local Act of Parliament.

Usual State of the Prisoners at their entrance.—The usual age is from 15 to 30. As a class, the prisoners are much given to drunkenness; much more so than the generality of others in the same rank of life. Even some of the boys are in habits of intoxication. Many have no knowledge of a trade, and have no regular occupation. It is believed that about two-thirds of the prisoners are able to read easily, but it is not known how far they compare with others in the same rank of life in intelligence or education. The character of the parents, when known, (as it usually is, if the offender be young), is generally at least indifferent, and very often bad. Some of the parents, however, are of good character. On an average about an eighth part of the prisoners are soldiers, confined for military offences, chiefly drunkenness. Of the others, many are day labourers, and many are vagrants.

CANONGATE PRISON, EDINBURGH.

(Visited 17th January, 1837.)

Canongate.

This is a small and very old prison, which for several years has been used for debtors only, and which might with advantage be given up altogether. It is situated in the middle of the town, and on the side of one of the main streets. There are eight rooms, one of which is rather large, but the other seven are small; they are dry, and of moderate temperature, but they are not well ventilated; they are warmed by open fires, and there must be a constant risk of the building catching fire, the floors and ceilings being made of wood, and no officer residing on the spot. There is no airing yard. I found the prison tolerably clean.

There were 4 prisoners at the time of my visit, namely, 3 men and 1 woman. This is less than the average number, which, during the year 1836, was 7 or 8, but which is constantly on the decline.

I found the prisoners moderately clean, but one of them (a man) was in a state of intoxication, and in bed with his clothes on. He had been taken out of the prison by a sheriff-officer, to undergo some examination, and it was two or three hours after his return that I saw him. The officer declared that he had brought the prisoner back sober, and that he had had no whisky while in his charge; though he admitted that the man had had a glass or two of ale. The turnkey on the other hand asserted that the prisoner was drunk when he came back, and the prisoner himself said that he certainly had had some whisky in the presence of the sheriff-officer. Which of these statements was true, and which false, I had not time to examine and decide.

Canongate.

I was told that the health of the prisoners is generally tolerably good. There was no death during the last year. The usual allowance for aliment is 10*d.* a-day, bed and bed-clothes being provided from the prison funds.

The most common prison offences were stated to be making noises and injuring the furniture. The punishment used is peculiar to this prison, the offender being put into the stocks.

Female prisoners are in part superintended by a female officer. Visits from friends are freely allowed during four hours of the day. Supplies of food from without are permitted.

Officers.—There are three officers, namely, the governor, a male turnkey, and a female turnkey. None of them, as already stated, reside in the prison.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the Canongate.

EDINBURGH POLICE PRISON.

(Visited 17th January, 1837.)

Edinbugh Police Prison.

This prison is in the middle of the city, and stands on the slope of a hill. It is nearly surrounded by streets and alleys. The building served formerly as the Royal Bank; and was converted to its present use thirteen years ago. The place, however, is ill suited to police purposes, and it is in contemplation to give it up and build another. There are altogether 51 rooms and cells, 20 of which are 8¼ feet long, 4 feet broad, 7 feet 9 inches high, and have a cubical content of 300 feet. Nine of the other cells are but little larger than these. As might be expected, under these circumstances, the cells are very close. The prison, however, is dry and sufficiently warm. It is heated partly by steam. I found it clean throughout.—There is no airing yard.

The prison appears to be tolerably secure, although communication can be kept up, and is so, in fact, between the upper cells and the street, by which the prisoners obtain supplies of whisky, at least, if not of tools for effecting their escape. The last instance of escape happened five years ago, and was on the part of a girl, who concealed herself in the water-closet.

There were 20 prisoners at the time of my visit, namely, 8 males and 12 females. This is considerably less than the average number, which during the last year has been about 40, and which used to be even higher. The greatest number of prisoners, at any one time last year, was about 80, exclusive of 20 or 30 persons against whom there was no charge, but who were admitted as to an asylum for the night. The smallest number in the same time was about 12. There is no regulation for obliging the prisoners to wash themselves, and this being the case, I of course found some of them dirty. There is no rule also which requires the prisoners to rise at a certain time, and which forbids their going to bed during the day (a matter that ought to be put out of their power by the removal of the bed-clothes). I consequently found some of them in bed, although it was between two and three o'clock in the afternoon. The bedding (most of which I found clean) consists of a straw mattress and pillow, two blankets, and a rug. This, however, is for prisoners in the upper cells only, where those are confined who have been tried, and who are undergoing imprisonment. Such prisoners as are awaiting their trial, are not supplied with any bedding.

The daily allowance of food is 18 oz. of bread, and 2 pints of beer. Those sentenced to 10 days' imprisonment (the maximum period), get a pint and a half of broth in addition to the foregoing allowance, during each of the last four days of their detention.

There were three or four deaths last year, which is about the average number; but almost all who die in this prison are worn out drunkards, brought in during the last stage of debility. There has been no fever in the prison for a considerable time.

There is no employment for the prisoners. Smoking is forbidden, and it was stated that in point of fact the prisoners do not often smoke, though it was admitted that the means of indulgence are sometimes smuggled in by the prisoners, and sometimes obtained from the street. The usual offences are injuring the furniture, making noises (one of the prisoners, a girl, was singing when I entered), and getting whisky, &c. from the street.

The average number of prisoners received during the year (counting recommitments, which form the great body of the cases), is about 7000, which is about 1000 less than was the average 12 or 13 years ago.

The prison is under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of Police.

EDINBURGH HOUSE OF REFUGE.

(Visited January 20th, 1837.)

Edinburgh House of Refuge.

Although houses of refuge do not fall within my province of inspection, I am naturally led to make inquiries respecting them by their importance as a means of preventing crime, and of affording an offender, who has undergone imprisonment, an asylum where his reform may be completed, and where he may abide till an opportunity presents itself for his returning in safety to society. I have not found my want of legal authority any obstacle to obtaining full information respecting the working of these institutions; on the contrary, a strong desire has been manifested to show every part of them, and to obtain advice as to the system of management.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Edinburgh House of Refuge.

Among other houses of refuge that of Edinburgh deserves notice; indeed it has one arrangement, and that an excellent one, which I believe is peculiar to it. I refer to a provision for receiving as boarders persons who having but little self-control, are constantly getting into disgrace (chiefly by intoxication), but whose friends (the husband, generally, in the case of a female), are willing to pay a small weekly sum for their maintenance, and who are themselves willing in their sober moments to enter the asylum. The sum paid at the Edinburgh house of refuge varies from 2*s.* to 8*s.* a-week, and depends partly on the ability of the donor, and partly on the style in which the inmate is to live. The amount received in this way last year (1836) was upwards of 700*l.*; which sum, besides defraying the expenses of those on whose behalf it was paid, left a balance for the benefit of the establishment.

The average number of inmates last year was about 300, and the total expenditure (including that for boarders), about 1800*l.*, or 6*l.* per head. This is equal to about 4*d.* a-day each, of which sum, 3*d.* is for food, leaving 1*d.* a-day for all other expenses, including clothing, salaries, and rent. It should be remarked, however, that the rent is very low—62*l.* a-year only—the building (once the residence of the Duke of Queensbury, and afterwards a barrack) belonging to Government.—The cost of food appears to be unnecessarily great, being a halfpenny a-day per head greater than that of the food in the Edinburgh and Glasgow bridewells, notwithstanding the great proportion of children, and the small amount of work done in the refuge. I am aware that the expense of food is kept up somewhat by the superior quality of that given to some of the boarders; but this is not a sufficient explanation. In fact, there can be little doubt that the food is too good, if we bear in mind, as we always ought, the kind of food consumed by the lowest class of independent labourers. The bread, indeed, is as fine as that eaten by the richest classes in Edinburgh.

I have already alluded to the small quantity of work done at the refuge. This appears to me to be the greatest fault in the place, though I am aware of the comparative difficulty of obtaining suitable work, owing to the establishment being in the town instead of the country, and owing to the short stay of most of the inmates. The difficulty is not insurmountable, however; and whether it be regarded as a matter of economy, as a check to improper applications for admittance, or as a part of the education of the inmates, useful and productive labour is so essential to the well working of an institution of this kind, that it should, in my opinion, be made a primary object of attention. The money received for the labour of the inmates last year, in addition to the value of the work done for the establishment, was little more than 100*l.*; which (together with the 700*l.* received for boarders) being taken from the whole expenditure (1800*l.*), left 1000*l.* to be raised by voluntary contributions and payments from different parishes.

Notwithstanding the drawbacks from the value of the Edinburgh house of refuge, I am satisfied that it is productive of a great balance of good, and that it tends to diminish both crime and mendicity. A great many children have been placed out as apprentices under favourable circumstances, and many persons, who but for this asylum would be leading lives of debauchery, and presenting a disgusting and immoral spectacle to their fellow-citizens, are placed under regulations which supply them with that control they are in need of, and which cause them to remain sober and peaceable.

One addition has lately been made to the refuge, which deserves particular notice.—I refer to a provision for the reception of a few erring females, each into a separate cell. And it speaks well for the class to which they belong, that although solitude and labour are the sole conditions on which applications are received, the cells are never untenanted. Some women have remained as much as three months in this voluntary seclusion, and are now in situations, with a fair prospect of permanent reform, though there has not yet been sufficient time to pronounce safely upon this point.—There are at present only five cells, but it is proposed to add more if room can be found for them.

EDINBURGH.

Edinburgh

State of Crime.—There is a good deal of petty crime, but there are few heinous offences. During the last year there has been only one case of serious robbery, either in Edinburgh or its suburbs; and in the city of Edinburgh (the population of which is about 80,000) there have been only about a dozen thefts by housebreaking, not one of these being accompanied by personal violence or by any defiance of the inhabitants, and some of them being robberies of cellars merely, or of hen-roosts connected with houses. No murder has been committed in Edinburgh or its suburbs for at least five years. There has been a great decrease of serious offences in the last ten years, notwithstanding the increase of population. This decrease is observed particularly as respects the offences of murder, street robbery, uttering forged notes and base coin, and shoplifting. No serious offence has become more common than formerly. The usual offences at the present time are thefts; particularly picking pockets, stealing linen from drying grounds, petty thefts from shop-doors, and thefts by prostitutes. There are also many drunken brawls.

Among the causes of the decrease of crime that has taken place may be mentioned the increased efficiency of the police, the improvement in the lighting of the town, and the provision under a local Act, by which offenders, who have been convicted as many as three times before the city magistrates, are transferred to a higher court. The great decrease in the number of forgeries is believed to have been brought about in part by the abolition of the punishment of death—a punishment which in Edinburgh, as elsewhere, was found to deter parties from giving information and evidence.

The following is an estimate of the criminal population of Edinburgh, made by Captain Stuart, the superintendent of the police, who has held that office about 12 years. (This estimate relates merely to such offenders as are at large, taking no account of those who are in prison.)—About 50 young male thieves between the ages of 10 and 16, and 4 or 5 other male thieves between the ages of 20 and 25, making altogether between 50 and 60 male thieves. A great number of public prostitutes, most of whom are under 20 years old. (It is stated that they are generally short-lived.) About 13 of the prostitutes are common thieves, and the majority steal watches and money occasionally. There are 2 or 3 females also (rather advanced in age) who are common thieves, but not public prostitutes. There is one notorious resetter (receiver of stolen goods), and there are several brokers who buy stolen goods to a certain extent. The number of regular resetters, however, is much smaller than formerly.

The offenders are in habits of drunkenness; much more so than people generally in the same rank of life. This applies particularly to the female prostitutes. The sheriff-substitute (Mr. Tait) informed me that the declaration of an accused party usually begins with a statement that he had been taking too much whisky when he committed the offence. Few of the thieves, especially the young ones, have any knowledge of a trade, or have any regular occupation. The character of the parents of the thieves is generally bad. Some of the young thieves, however, are orphans. The young thieves are considered to be sharper in intellect than the generality of others in the same rank in life; which is attributed to their earlier intercourse with the world. They are found, however, to be much below others in education. Few of the thieves can write. Most of the thieves are native inhabitants, but many of the assaults are committed by the Irish part of the population. It is remarked, that the tailors, as a body, commit many more than their proportion of assaults; and a similar remark is applicable (though now in a less degree than formerly) to the bakers.

Causes affecting Crime at Edinburgh independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is still a good deal of drunkenness, though much less than formerly, a great decrease having taken place among the middle and upper classes, and a considerable decrease among the poorer classes. There are several Temperance Societies in Edinburgh, but I could not learn what effect they have produced.

State of the Police.—Efficient, although some of the streets are noisy during the night, and although many petty thefts, especially thefts in brothels, escape detection. There appears to be a general feeling of security as regards property, and scarcely the remotest fear of personal violence. The present police, composed as it is of strong active men, under able direction, are said to form a striking contrast with the police that existed 20 or 30 years ago, which appears to have consisted of a handful of feeble old men, decked in strange uniforms, who were the laughing stock of the active and nimble thieves.

Condition of the People.—The state of the working classes is said to be much the same as regards houses, food, and clothing, as it was 12 or 15 years ago; but I had not time to get much information on this subject, or to obtain the means of contrasting the condition of the working classes at the present time with what it was 30 or 40 years ago. There is certainly a good deal of pauperism and mendicity at the present time. The chief occupation of the working classes is connected with the consumption of the richer, there being but few manufactures carried on in Edinburgh. The wages of a man employed at jobbing, &c., are from 10*s.* to 12*s.* a-week; a tailor gets about 18*s.* a-week. A savings' bank was opened about 10 months ago under the authority of the Act which extends the system of English savings banks to Scotland. Many of the savings' banks established on the old plan have merged into it, and the amount of deposits is already between 60,000*l.* and 70,000*l.*; and this amount would, it is believed, be greater were it not that the interest generally given for money at the present time is unusually high—higher in many cases (even for very small sums) than that which the savings' bank is empowered to grant.

Education.—I had not time to obtain much information as to the state of education in Edinburgh. There is no doubt, however, that its quality has been much improved of late years to a considerable extent by the exertions of Mr. Wood, who was the first to raise the character of much of the instruction from mere verbiage to an intellectual employment. This improved system of teaching has now been extensively adopted.

HADDINGTON.

Population nearly 4,000.

(Visited January 25th, 1837, and twice previously.)

Haddington.

The prison of Haddington is an old building (partly in a ruinous state) standing in the middle of the town, and connected with the town-house. It is both badly situated and badly constructed, and it is impossible to prevent communication between some of the rooms and the street. There are altogether 11 rooms or cells, 2 of which, however, are generally used as part of the gaoler's house, his own accommodation being quite insufficient. The rooms are all of moderate size, the largest being 17 feet long, 11 feet broad, and 8 feet high, and the smallest 11½ feet long, 9 feet broad, and 6½ feet high. There is no airing-yard.

The rain often comes in to two of the cells, but the others are tolerably dry, some of them quite so; 7 are warmed by open fires, but the rest are not warmed at all. There is no security against the building catching fire, and as most of the floors and even some of the partitions are of wood, there is considerable danger of such an occurrence taking place. I found the cells clean and at a moderate temperature, but most of them are ill ventilated, and in several there was a bad smell, owing to the buckets which the prisoners make use of being emptied only once in two days; which arises from the want of a proper receptacle for the filth, the public street being the place in which it is deposited. The prison is but moderately secure. The last instance of escape happened about three years ago, when two prisoners made their way through the roof; in doing which they made use of a knife with which a debtor had supplied them. The ceilings of the upper cells have since then been lined with sheet-iron. There are no means of inspecting the prisoners without their knowledge.

State of the Prisoners.—There were 7 prisoners at the time of my visit (all males) and this is about the average number, though occasionally there are more than 20. When I was here some time ago I found several of the prisoners dirty, but this time they were clean; and the gaoler assured me that since I was last at Haddington, he has always acted on the plan of not giving a prisoner his breakfast until he has thoroughly washed himself.

Health.—Usually good. It appears, indeed, that the prisoners generally leave the gaol fatter and in better health than when they entered it. No diseases can be specified as prevalent. A woman was attacked with scarlet fever about 18 months ago, but none of the other prisoners caught it. The last death happened about two years ago, and this was a case of a man who had led a very dissipated life. There is no infirmary in the prison.

Food.—The food (which is supplied by contract) is too good and too abundant when compared with that of the lowest class of honest people out of prison. Each prisoner receives a pint of porridge (imperial measure) for breakfast, and the same for supper, with a pint of broth and a penny loaf for dinner. The bread is made of wheaten flour, and is quite white. No difference is made between males and females, children and adults. There is an exception, however, as respects county vagrants, whose allowance consists of three penny loaves each day. The cost of the food given to the regular prisoners is about 5*d.* per day. The allowance to debtors is generally 1*s.* per day, paid in money; out of which, however, they have to pay 4*d.* for bedding, &c. Additional supplies from without are allowed to debtors and to other prisoners before trial, but not to convicted prisoners.

Clothing.—None is supplied from the prison funds, but a little is given by a ladies' society in Haddington.

Bedding.—A straw mattress and pillow, a sheet, two double blankets, and a coverlet. The bed-clothes are washed twice a-year, and the straw is changed once in about three months.

Discipline.—There is but little deserving the name, there being no work, and only partial separation. The time passed in bed, too, is as usual much too long, and the prisoners receive no instruction. It should be mentioned to the credit of the late provost (Mr. Brown) that he made several attempts to obtain work for the prisoners, though he was unsuccessful, owing partly to the circumstance of no manufactures of any kind being carried on in the neighbourhood. Another way in which Mr. Brown manifests an interest in the welfare of the prisoners is by visiting the gaol every Sunday evening and performing religious service. This he began to do while provost, and continues even now that his period of office has expired.—The most common prison offence is calling to people in the street. The offender is punished by the loss of part of his food for the day, and sometimes also by being removed to a less comfortable cell.—I received no complaint of unkind treatment.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, but the gaoler's wife looks after them to some extent. The females are always kept separate from the males, but there is no difference in the treatment of the two classes.

Debtors.—The average number during the last year was only half, but at the time of my visit there were two debtors. Visits from friends are freely allowed. The debtors attend public worship.

Miscellaneous.—There is no other difference in the treatment of tried and untried prisoners, than that the latter are allowed to receive additional supplies of food from without, as already mentioned. Visits are permitted on an order from a magistrate. Letters are inspected. Smoking tobacco is allowed to those who behave well, and snuff-taking to all. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their parishes. There was no insane prisoner at the time of my visit.

Officers.—The only regular officer is the keeper, who appears to be well qualified for the management of a small gaol. He resides in the prison. A surgeon attends at the cost of the burgh when required. There is no chaplain, but the parish clergyman attends occasionally.

Fees.—The keeper receives 1*s.* from the creditor on the admission of a debtor, and 4*d.* a night from the debtor during his stay; also 1*s.* from the debtor on his liberation. The only other source of emolument to the keeper, besides his regular salary, is his contract for supplying the prisoners with food, for which he receives 6*d.* a day per head.

Accounts.—The only record, besides an account of disbursements (kept by the town treasurer), is a register of imprisonment, kept by the gaoler. This register, however, is imperfect, there being no column even for the day of liberation. The following is an abstract of the expenditure here for the year ending October 10th, 1836 (less than an average year):—

| | £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Food of Criminal Prisoners | 57 | 7 | 4 |
| Furniture and bedding | 0 | 11 | 8 |
| Fuel | 7 | 2 | 7 |
| Repairs | 8 | 11 | 8½ |
| Sundries | 1 | 0 | 10 |
| Gaoler's Salary | 30 | 0 | 0 |
| Total, exclusive of the aliment of debtors | £ 104 | 14 | 1½ |

(Of this sum 19*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* was paid by the county, and the remainder, 84*l.* 4*s.* 4½*d*, by the burgh.)

Average number of prisoners during the year 6—viz. 5½ criminals and ½ debtor. (The total number of prisoners was 126, viz., 118 criminals and 8 debtors, 17 of the criminals were females, but all the others were males.)

Average cost of each criminal prisoner during the year; about 18*l.*—Daily cost about 1*s.*

General Observations.—Comparatively little good effect can be produced by the Haddington prison. It is probable, indeed, that the place is looked upon by some persons as one of luxurious indolence, and rather to be coveted than shunned. Mr. List, the superintendent of the police of Haddingtonshire, is clearly of opinion that this is the case. The difficulty of finding useful labour for the prisoners at Haddington marks the town as unsuitable for a prison, except for very short confinements. A gaol large enough for this latter purpose might be erected at a small expense on part of the vacant ground behind the new court-house. There are many recommitments to the Haddington gaol, but no record of them is kept.

Jurisdiction.—The prison is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh.

HADDINGTONSHIRE, or EAST LOTHIAN.

Population about 36,000.

East Lothian.

Prisons existing at present.—Six, viz., one each at Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick, Tranent, Gifford, and Linton. The three last are small lock-up houses, consisting only of a single cell each, and even in the prisons at Dunbar and North Berwick there are but two cells. I have not yet had an opportunity of visiting North Berwick, Tranent, and Linton, but I understand that the prisons at these places form no exception to the general rule in the county, that is, that they are all bad. In addition to the foregoing, a lock-up house is at the present time erecting at Preston Pans.

Additional Prisons required.—No prison is wanted at any other place than those which have been mentioned, but at each of these a good small prison is necessary.

State of Crime in East Lothian.—There are many petty thefts and assaults, but serious offences are not very numerous. The following is an account of all the serious offences during the last eight years, without reference to the detection or conviction of the offenders:—1 murder, 1 rape, 1 serious case of housebreaking attended with personal violence, 1 bad assault with attempt at rape, 3 cases of apparent child murder, 1 case in which a child was thrown on to the fire, but rescued before it was seriously burned, 4 cases of poaching accompanied with bad assaults, and 2 forgeries. Most of the offences, attended with personal violence, are committed at Tranent and Preston Pans, and chiefly by colliers. During the last three or four years there appears to have been a decrease of crime generally, but taking a period of 30 years in review, it is the opinion of the procurator fiscal (an elderly gentleman, who has been long in office), that the number of serious offences is about as great now as it was then, and that the number of assaults and petty thefts has increased, and that beyond what might be expected from the increase of population, which indeed has been but little. One cause of the increase, which took place some time ago, in the number of petty thefts, is stated to be an increased efficiency in the Edinburgh police, which it is said drove thieves out of Edinburgh into the neighbouring counties.

From the report of Mr. List, the active and efficient superintendent of police in East Lothian, I learned that there are about a dozen resident thieves in the county at the present time, and that their age varies from 10 to 24 years. Three of the thieves are females, the others males. There are generally also several thieves who are strangers, especially at the time of the Gifford fair (a great cattle fair). There are seven persons in the county who keep lodging-houses for vagrants and other people of bad character. There is no regular receiver of stolen goods, but there are a few persons who are willing to buy goods without much inquiry, and who probably suspect them to be stolen. There is a good deal of female prostitution, but little that is public. In addition to the foregoing offenders, there are a great many persons who commit assaults, but who do not steal. Those who are in the habit of committing assaults are addicted to drunkenness, but it has not been observed that the thieves are so distinguished. Few of the thieves have acquired any regular means of earning an honest livelihood. The thieves are considered to be equal in intelligence to others in the same class of life, but they are inferior to them in education and knowledge. Many of them cannot write, but it is not known how many are unable to read. Most of the parents of the thieves are known to have neglected their children, and some of them to be of decidedly bad character.

Causes affecting Crime in East Lothian independent of Prison Discipline.

Drunkenness.—There is doubtless a good deal of drunkenness, though opinions as to whether it has increased or decreased, during the last 30 years, so far as relates to the lower classes, are conflicting, though on the whole I am inclined to believe it has increased. There is no doubt, however, that there is much less drunkenness than formerly among the middle and upper classes. There is no separate Temperance Society in the county, but there are branches of an Edinburgh Society.

Police.—The police of this county, though susceptible of considerable improvements, is on a better footing and is better organized than the police of any other county in Scotland; and it is believed that few offences escape detection. The county is divided into seven districts, in each of which there is a resident paid constable, and these seven constables are under the control of a general superintendent, who appoints them and can remove them from office. The average cost of the establishment is about 220*l.* a-year, exclusive of about 50*l.* a-year paid by the separate parishes to their own particular constables (most of whom receive 2*l.* a-year each), and exclusive of the cost of the burgh officers in Dunbar and North Berwick. To render the establishment thoroughly efficient it would be necessary to increase the total expenditure to between 500*l.* and 600*l.* a-year; but there is no doubt that, by the expenditure of this sum, and by carrying out the principles of responsibility, and subordination to one authority, the police might be placed upon an excellent footing. Even as it is, the establishment has worked very well, and has been attended with a diminution of crime; although if the fallacious test of the number of commitments and convictions were applied, there would appear to have been an increase. The superintendent, being a man of intelligence and education, is quite able to make an examination into the circumstances of any offence that is not of a very serious character, and to take down the evidence in writing, and this saves the county a considerable expense in fees to the procurator fiscal.

Administration of Justice.—Trials by the sheriff without a jury are conducted at an unusually small expense in this county, costing generally not more than from 20*s.* to 30*s.* each.

Condition of the People.—Much improved during the last 30 years (especially as regards food and clothing) and now tolerably good. In the town of Haddington, however, there is a want of productive employment; although this evil has lately been removed to some extent by the introduction of the Ayrshire sewing among the female part of the population. There are few resident beggars, but there are many vagrants, especially in the summer season. The people are chiefly employed in agriculture, although there are some large collieries in the county. The total income of a regular farm-servant is from 25*l.* to 30*l.* a-year, and is chiefly paid in kind. There are several savings' banks and many friendly societies. The amount of deposits in the Haddington savings' bank is nearly 700*l.*, held by about 120 depositors.

Education.—Not in a satisfactory state. There are many children in the towns who are growing up without any education. In Haddington, for example, the population of which is about 4,000, it is believed that there are as many as 150 children growing up without education, although education appears to be more general there than formerly. Most of the adults are able to read easily (though there are many, especially among the Irish part of the population, who cannot), and there is, in fact, a good deal of reading among them,—the matter read consisting chiefly of books from the small itinerating libraries established by Provost Brown, which are circulated at a trifling expense.

There is a Mechanics' Institution at Haddington, but it does not flourish.

Popular Amusements.—There are not many popular amusements in the county.

---

JEDBURGH.

Population about 4,000.

(Visited February 1st and 2nd, 1837.)

Jedburgh.

The prison of Jedburgh is a new building, having been erected about 15 years. It cost somewhat more than 8,000*l.* The situation is good, being an elevated spot outside the town which was formerly the site of a castle. The construction, though far from perfect, is better than that of the generality of prisons, and will I think admit of the introduction of a good system of discipline. The prison consists of three separate buildings (a gaol, a bridewell, and a debtors' prison), besides the governor's house. Each of the three buildings has a separate airing-yard, (two of them, indeed, have two airing-yards), and there is a considerable area round the prisons inclosed by a wall; this wall, however, is not high enough to prevent the possibility of escape. There are altogether 27 sleeping cells, 6 small working rooms, and 4 day-rooms, making in the whole 38 separate rooms and cells, whereas the average number of prisoners is only 28, and the greatest number last year was only 36. Thus, if the useless distinction of gaol and bridewell were done away with, and the empty cells in the debtors' prison were used for criminals, there would be almost always the means of enforcing a complete separation of prisoners. This would indeed invariably be the case if such prisoners as are sentenced to long periods of confinement were sent to a penitentiary; an arrangement the more to be desired, because Jedburgh is a place at which it is difficult to find profitable employment for prisoners.

The rooms and cells are generally dry, though in wet weather the floors of the lower ones are damp. One part of the prison is warmed by a hot-air apparatus, and the other parts by open fires; there appears, however, to be no danger of the building catching fire, since the cells and rooms are built entirely of stone. The ventilation is tolerably good. The prison was not very clean at the time of my visit, which was, perhaps, partly owing to the governor being unwell. Without great vigilance there must always be a danger here of the escape of prisoners, but I was assured that no escape has taken place since the present governor came into office, which is about seven years ago. Before that time, however, there were many escapes. The chief causes of the danger of escape are the want of the means of inspection, the assembling of the prisoners in the day-rooms and airing-yards, the lowness of the outer wall, and the want of a good arrangement for the ingress and egress of the officers.

State of the Prisoners.—There were 24 prisoners at the time of my visit, viz. 21 males and 3 females. Two of the males were debtors; and one of the females was a lunatic, not charged with any crime, and quite harmless, but admitted into the prison as into an asylum. She has been in the prison now more than four years. Some of the prisoners were clean, but others were dirty, one particularly so. It is a rule of the prison that every prisoner shall wash himself once a-day, but this rule does not appear to be enforced. The prisoner who was very dirty acknowledged that he had not washed himself the day before.

Health.—Generally good. There was no death in the prison last year, and there has been no epidemic for several years. The most common complaints are disorders of the bowels and catarrh.

SCOTLAND.

Reports on Separate Prisons.

Jedburgh.

Food.—Those confined in that part of the prison which is called the gaol have two pints of oatmeal porridge (imperial measure) and a halfpenny-worth of milk for breakfast, and the same for supper; and they have two pints of broth (containing barley, meat, and vegetables), and a penny roll for dinner. Prisoners in the bridewell receive the same, except that they have less milk. Vagrants have the same breakfast and supper (with less milk), but have no dinner. Except as regards the allowance to vagrants, the food is too abundant; and the quality of part of it (the bread and broth) is too good. The daily cost of the food is 5*d.* per head in the gaol, and 4*d.* per head in the bridewell, excepting the food of the vagrants, which costs 2*d.* per head.

Debtors receive a money allowance, varying from 8*d.* to 1*s.* 4*d.* per day, out of which, however, they have to pay 4*d.* each day to the keeper, who provides them with bedding; if the debtor be a burgess, this charge is only 2*d.* Additional supplies from without are allowed to debtors, but not to criminal prisoners.

Bedding.—A straw mattress and pillow, and two double blankets. The bed-clothes are changed twice a-year, but the straw is not renewed quite so often.—No clothing is supplied, except in cases of destitution.

Discipline.—The discipline is of a feeble kind. Little work is done, and that little is but slightly productive. The only prisoners who are employed in any way are those in the bridewell, and of these the females appear to do most, though there is little danger of these latter even being weighed down by their burden. The men, when at work at all, are employed in turning a crank-machine, used in husking the barley which is consumed in the prison. The nominal time for work is 8 hours a-day; but as only a few men can be employed at the crank-machine at any one time, no one on an average is employed more than about 1½ hours per day, and the greater part even of this time appears to be occupied in resting. The women are employed partly in washing for the prison, and partly in beating sand. Not a shilling, however, is received from any one out of the prison for work done within.—The want of separation has already been referred to. All that is done by way of instruction is to employ one prisoner occasionally in teaching others. There is, however, a small library in the prison, which is made some use of. Public worship is performed occasionally, but not regularly.

The prisoners rise at six o'clock in summer, and at daybreak in winter; and they go to bed at eight in summer, and half an hour before sunset in winter. So that if abundance of sleep were a means of reforming criminals, many of those in the Jedburgh prison would probably come out cured. The usual prison offences are disturbances, and insolence to the governor or turnkey. The usual punishments are the withdrawal of food, confinement in a dark cell, and the use of irons. I received no complaints of unkind treatment. Labour is here regarded as a punishment, which I have never found to be the case in a well-regulated prison.

Female Prisoners.—There is no female officer, and no difference is made in the treatment of males and females.

Debtors.—There were two at the time of my visit, but the average is now only ½. Visits from friends are freely allowed.

Miscellaneous.—No difference is made between tried and untried prisoners, excepting such of the tried prisoners as are sentenced to confinement in the bridewell, who, as already stated, are set to do a little work, and are not allowed milk at breakfast and supper. Visits to prisoners in the bridewell are allowed once a-week, on an order from a justice of the peace; but visits to prisoners in the gaol are permitted at any time, at the discretion of the governor. All letters are inspected. The use of tobacco is by the rule of the prison confined to debtors only, but I have reason to believe that the rule is evaded. There is no provision for sending prisoners back to their parishes.

Officers.—There are two officers, a governor and a turnkey. The governor being unwell at the time of my visit, and my stay being necessarily short, I could judge but slightly of his qualifications. He was well spoken of, however, by others, and he appears to be an intelligent man. The state of the prison certainly did not do him much credit, but as already stated he was unwell at the time of my visit. The turnkey appeared to be an active man, and suitable for his office. There is a surgeon who attends when sent for, but he was so closely occupied with his professional engagements in the district round Jedburgh, owing to the prevalence of the influenza, that I did not see him. There is no chaplain. None of the prisoners act as officers.

Fees.—The governor receives a fee varying from 3*s.* to 30*s.* from the creditor on the admission of a debtor, unless the debtor be a burgess, when the fee is half what it would otherwise be. The governor also charges 4*d.* a-night to a non-burgess, and 2*d.* to a burgess, for bedding, as already mentioned.

Accounts.—The governor keeps a register of imprisonments, and the procurator-fiscal and town-chamberlain together keep an account of disbursements. The following is an abstract of the expenditure for the year 1836:—

|---|---|---|---|

General Observations.—The sheriff-substitute gave it as his opinion that the effect of imprisonment in Jedburgh Castle under the present arrangements is injurious on those confined, and this opinion is in all probability correct. The deterring effect, too, on the criminal population generally must be much less than it ought to be. There are many recommitments, but there is no record to show how many.

Jurisdiction.—Those parts of the prison which are called the gaol and debtors' prison are under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the burgh; but that part which is used as a house of correction is under the jurisdiction of commissioners appointed under a local Act of Parliament.
